

INTRODUCTION

THERE is no evidence that the title, "The Acts of the Apostles," affixed to this book, was given by divine authority or by the writer himself. It is a title, however, which, with a little variation, has been given to it by the Christian church at all times. The term "Acts" is not used, as it is sometimes with us, to denote decrees or laws, but it denotes the doings of the apostles. It is a record of what the apostles did in founding and establishing the Christian church. It is worthy of remark, however, that it contains chiefly a record of the doings of Peter and Paul. Peter was commissioned to open the doors of the Christian church to both Jews and Gentiles (see Note on Mat. xvi. 18, 19); and Paul was chosen to bear the gospel especially to the pagan world. As these two apostles were the most prominent and distinguished in founding and organizing the Christian church, it was deemed proper that a special and permanent record should be made of their labours. At the same time occasional notices are given of the other apostles; but of their labours elsewhere than in Judea, and of their death, except that of James (Ac. xii. 2), the sacred writers have given no information.

All antiquity is unanimous in ascribing this book to Luke as its author. It is repeatedly mentioned and quoted by the early Christian writers, and without a dissenting voice is mentioned as his work. The same thing is clear from the book itself. It professes to have been written by the same person who wrote a former treatise, addressed to the same person (comp. ver. 1 with Lu. i. 3), and it bears manifest marks of being from the same pen. It is designed evidently as a continuation of that Gospel, as in this book the author has taken up the history at the very time where he left it in the Gospel (ver. 1, 2).

Where, or at what time, this book was written, is not certainly known. As the history, however, is continued to the second year of the residence of Paul at Rome (Ac. xxviii. 31), it was evidently written about as late as the year 62; and as it makes no mention of the subsequent facts in the life of Paul, or of any other event of history, it seems clear that it was not written much after that time. It has been common, therefore, to fix the date of the book at about A.D. 63. It is also probable that it was written at Rome. In ch. xxviii. 16 Luke mentions his arrival at Rome with Paul. As he does not mention his departure from that city, it is to be presumed that it was written there. Some have supposed that it was written at Alexandria in Egypt, but of that there is no sufficient evidence.

The canonical authority of this book rests on the same foundation as that of the Gospel by the same author. Its authenticity has not been called in question at any time in the church.

This book has commonly been regarded as a history of the Christian church, and of course the first ecclesiastical history that was written. But it cannot have been designed as a general history of the church. Many important transactions have been omitted. It gives no account of the church at Jerusalem after the conversion of Paul; it omits his journey into Arabia (Ga. i. 17); it gives no account of the propagation of the gospel in Egypt or in Babylon (1 Pe. v. 13), or of the foundation of the church at Rome, or of many of Paul's voyages and shipwrecks (2 Co. xi. 25); and it omits to record the labours of most of the apostles, and confines the narrative chiefly to the transactions of Peter and Paul.

The design and importance of this history may be learned from the following particulars:

1. It contains a record of the promised descent and operations of the Holy Spirit. The Lord Jesus promised that after he had departed to heaven he would send the Holy Ghost to carry forward the great work of redemption, Jn. xiv. 16, 17; xv. 26; xvi. 7-14. The apostles were directed to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, Lu. xxiv. 49. The four Gospels contained a record of the life, instructions, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. But it is clear that he contemplated that the most signal triumphs of his gospel should take place after his ascension to heaven, and under the influence of the Holy Spirit. The descent of the Spirit, and his influence on the souls of men, was therefore a most important part of the work of redemption. Without an authentic, an inspired record of that, the account of the operations of God the Father, Son, and Spirit in the work of redemption would not have been complete. The purposes of the Father in regard to that plan were made known clearly in the Old Testament; the record of what the Son did in accomplishing it was contained in the Gospels; and some book was needful that should contain a record of the doings of the Holy Spirit. As the Gospels, therefore, may be regarded as a record of the work of Christ to save men, so may the Acts of the Apostles be considered as a record of the doings of the Holy Spirit in the same great work. Without that, the way in which the Spirit operates to renew and save would have been very imperfectly known.

2. This book is an inspired account of the character of true revivals of religion. It records the first revivals that occurred in the Christian church. The scene on the day of Pentecost was one of the most remarkable displays of divine power and mercy that the world has ever known. It was the commencement of a series of stupendous movements on the earth to recover men. It was the true model of a revival of religion, and it is a demonstration that such scenes as have characterized our own age and nation especially are strictly in accordance with the spirit of the New Testament. The entire book of the Acts of the Apostles records the effect of the gospel when it comes fairly in contact with the minds of men. The gospel was addressed to every class. It met the Jew and the Gentile, the bond and the free, the learned and the ignorant, the rich and the poor, and it showed its power everywhere in subduing the mind to itself. It was proper that some record should be preserved of the displays of that power, and that record we have in this book. And it was especially proper that there should be given by an inspired man an account of the descent of the Holy Spirit, a record of a true revival of religion. It was certain that the gospel would produce excitement. The human mind, as all experience shows, is prone to enthusiasm and fanaticism; and men might be disposed to pervert the gospel to scenes of wild-fire, disorder, and tumult. That the gospel would produce excitement was well known to its Author. It was well, therefore, that there should be some record to which the church might always appeal as an infallible account of the proper effects of the gospel, some inspired standard to which might be brought all excitements on the subject of religion. If they are in accordance with the first triumphs of the gospel, they are genuine; if not, they are false.

3. This book shows that revivals of religion are to be expected in the church. If they existed in the best and purest days of Christianity, they are to be expected now. If, by means of revivals, the Holy Spirit chose at first to bless the preaching of the truth, the same thing is to be expected still. If in this way the gospel was at first spread among the nations, then we are to infer that this will be the mode in which it will finally spread and triumph in the world.

4. The Acts of the Apostles contains a record of the organization of the Christian church. That church was founded simply by the preaching of the truth, and chiefly by a simple statement of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The "Acts of the Apostles" contains the highest models of preaching, and the purest specimens of that simple, direct, and pungent manner of addressing men, which may be expected to be attended with the influences of the Holy Spirit. It contains some of the most tender, powerful, and eloquent appeals to be found in any language. If a man wishes to learn how to preach well he can probably acquire it nowhere else so readily as by giving himself to the prayerful and profound study of the specimens of preaching contained in this book. At the same time we have here a view of the character of the true church of Christ. The simplicity of this church must strike every reader of "the Acts." Religion is represented as a work of the heart, the pure and proper effect of truth on the mind. It is free from pomp and splendour, and from costly and magnificent ceremonies. There is no apparatus to impress the senses, no splendour to dazzle, no external rite or parade adapted to draw the affections from the pure and spiritual worship of God. How unlike to the pomp and parade of pagan worship! How unlike the vain and pompous ceremonies which have since, alas! crept into no small part of the Christian church!

5. In this book we have many striking and impressive illustrations of what the gospel is fitted to produce, to make men self-denying and benevolent. The apostles engaged in the great enterprise of converting the world. To secure that they cheerfully forsook all. Paul became a convert to the Christian faith, and cheerfully for that gave up all his hopes of preferment and honour, and welcomed toil and privation in foreign lands. Comp. Phi. iii. 4-11, 2 Co. xi. 24-27. The early converts had all things in common, ch. ii. 44; those "which used curious arts," and were gaining property by a course of iniquity, forsook their schemes of ill-gotten gain, and burned their books publicly, ch. xix. 19; Ananias and Sapphira were punished for attempting to impose on the apostles by hypocritical professed self-denials, ch. v. 1-10; and throughout the book there occur constant instances of sacrifices and toil to spread the gospel around the globe. Indeed, these great truths had manifestly seized upon the minds of the early Christians: that the gospel was to be preached to all nations; that whatever stood in the way of that was to be sacrificed; that whatever toils and dangers were necessary were to be borne; and that even death itself was cheerfully to be met if it would promote the spread of true religion. This was then genuine Christianity; this is still the spirit of the gospel of Christ.

6. This book throws important light on the Epistles. It is a connecting link between the Gospels and the other parts of the New Testament. Instances of this will be noticed in the Notes. One of the most clear and satisfactory evidences of the genuineness of the books of the New Testament is to be found in the undesigned coincidences between the Acts and the Epistles. This argument was first clearly stated and illustrated by Dr. Paley. His little work illustrating it, the Horæ Paulinæ, is one of the most unanswerable proofs which have yet been furnished of the truth of the Christian religion.

7. This book contains unanswerable evidence of the truth of Christianity. It is a record of its early triumphs. Within the space of thirty years after the death of Christ the gospel had been carried to all parts of the civilized and to no small portion of the uncivilized world. Its progress and its triumphs were not concealed. Its great transactions were not "done in a corner." It had been preached in the most splendid, powerful, and enlightened cities; churches were already founded in Jerusalem, Antioch, Corinth, Ephesus, Philippi, and at Rome. The gospel had spread in Arabia, Asia Minor, Greece, Macedon, Italy, and Africa. It had assailed the most mighty existing institutions; it had made its way over the most formidable barriers; it had encountered the most deadly and malignant opposition; it had travelled to the capital, and had secured such a hold even in the imperial city as to make it certain that it would finally overturn the established religion and seat itself on the ruins of paganism. Within thirty years it had settled the point that it would overturn every bloody altar, close every pagan temple, bring under its influence everywhere the men of office, rank, and power, and that "the banners of the faith would soon stream from the palaces of the Cæsars." All this would be accomplished by the instrumentality of Jews—of fishermen—of Nazarenes. They had neither wealth, armies, nor allies. With the exception of Paul, they were men without learning. They were taught only by the Holy Ghost, armed only with the power of God, victorious only because Christ was their captain, and the world acknowledged the presence of the messengers of the Highest and the power of the Christian religion. Its success never has been, and never can be accounted for by any other supposition than that God attended it. And if the Christian religion be not true the change wrought by the twelve apostles is the most inexplicable, mysterious, and wonderful event that has ever been witnessed in this world. Their success will stand to the end of time as an argument of the truth of the scheme, will ever onward confound the infidel, and will sustain the Christian with the assured belief that this is a religion which has proceeded from the almighty and the infinitely benevolent God.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

CHAPTER I.

THE<sup>a</sup> former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all a Lu.1.1-4,&c.

1. The former treatise. The former book. The gospel by Luke is here evidently intended. Greek, "the former logos," meaning a discourse, or a narrative. ¶ O Theophilus. See Notes on Lu. i. 3. As this book was written to the same individual as the former, it was evidently written with the same design—to furnish an authentic and full narrative of events concerning which there would be many imperfect and exaggerated accounts. See Lu. i. 1-4. As these events pertained to the descent of the Spirit, to the spread of the gospel, to the organization of the church, to the kind of preaching by which the church was to be collected and organized, and as the facts in the case constituted a full proof of the truth of the Christian religion, and the conduct of the apostles would be a model for ministers and the church in all future times, it was of great importance that a fair and full narrative of these things should be preserved. Luke was the companion of Paul in his travels, and was an eye-witness of no small part of the transactions recorded in this book. See Ac. xvi. 10, 17; xx. 1-6; xxvii.; xxviii. As an eye-witness, he was well qualified to make a record of the leading events of the primitive church. And as he was the companion of Paul, he had every opportunity of obtaining information about the great events of the gospel of Christ. ¶ Of all. That is, of the principal, or most important parts of the life and doctrines of Christ. It cannot mean that he recorded all that Jesus did, as he had omitted many things that have been preserved by the other evangelists. The word all is frequently thus used to denote the most important or material facts. See Ac. xiii. 10; 1 Ti. i. 16; Ja. i. 2; Mat. ii. 3; iii. 5; Ac. ii. 5; Ro. xi. 26; Col. i. 6. In each of these places the word here translated "all" occurs in the original, and means many,

that Jesus began both to do and to teach,

a large part, the principal portion. It has the same use in all languages. "This word often signifies, indefinitely, a large portion or number, or a great part" (Webster). ¶ That Jesus. The Syriac version adds, "Jesus our Messiah." This version was probably made in the second century. ¶ Began to do, &c. This is a Hebrew form of expression, meaning the same thing as that Jesus did and taught. See Ge. ix. 20, "Noah began to be an husbandman," that is, was an husbandman. Ge. ii. 3, in the Septuagint: "Which God began to create and make;" in the Hebrew, "which God created and made." Mar. iv. 7, "Began to send them forth by two and two," that is, sent them forth. See also Mar. x. 32; xiv. 65, "And some began to spit on him;" in the parallel place in Mat. xxvi. 67, "they did spit in his face." ¶ To do. This refers to his miracles and his acts of benevolence, including all that he did for man's salvation. It probably includes, therefore, his sufferings, death, and resurrection, as a part of what he has done to save men. ¶ To teach. His doctrines. As the writer had given an account of what the Lord Jesus did, so he was now about to give a narrative of what his apostles did in the same cause, that thus the world might be in possession of an inspired record respecting the establishment of the Christian church. The record of these events preserved in the sacred narrative is one of the greatest blessings that God has conferred on mankind; and one of the highest privileges which men can enjoy is that which has been conferred so abundantly on this age in the possession of the word of God.

2 Until the day. The fortieth day after the resurrection, ver. 3. See Lu. xxiv. 51. ¶ In which he was taken up. In which he ascended to heaven. He was taken up into a cloud, and is represented as having been borne or carried to heaven, ver. 9. ¶ After that, &c. This passage has been variously rendered. The Syriac translates it, "After he had given commandment unto the apostles whom he had chosen by the Holy Spirit." So also the Ethiopic version. Others have joined the words "through the Holy Ghost" to the phrase "was taken up," making it mean that he was taken up by the Holy Ghost. But the most natural and correct translation seems to be that which is in our version. ¶ Through the Holy Ghost. To understand this, it is necessary to call to mind the promise that Jesus made before his death, that after his departure, the Holy Ghost would descend to be a guide to his apostles. See Jn. xvi. 7-11, and the Notes on that place. It was to be his office to carry forward the work of redemption in applying it to the hearts of men. Whatever was done, therefore, after the death and resurrection of Jesus, was to be regarded as under the peculiar influence and direction of the Holy Ghost. Even the instructions of Jesus, and his commission to the apostles, were to be regarded as coming within the department of the sacred Spirit, or within the province of his peculiar work. The instructions were given by divine authority, by infallible guidance, and as a part of the work which the Holy Spirit was sent down to accomplish. Under the direction and guidance of that Spirit the apostles were to go forth; by his aid they were to preach the gospel, to organize the church, to establish its order and its doctrines; and hence the entire work was declared to be by his direction. Though in his larger and more mighty influences the Spirit did not descend until the day of Pentecost (Lu. xxiv. 49; comp. Ac. ii.), yet in some measure his influence was imparted to the apostles before the ascension of Christ, Jn. xx. 22. ¶ Had given commandments. Particularly the command to preach the gospel to all nations, Mat. xxviii. 19; Mar. xvi. 15-19. It may be worthy of remark, that the word commandments, as a noun in the plural number, does not occur in

taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen :

3 To whom also he showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking the original. The single word which is translated, "had given commandments" is a participle, and means simply having commanded. There is no need, therefore, of supposing that there is reference here to any other command than to that great and glorious injunction to preach the gospel to every creature. That was a command of so much importance as to be worthy of a distinct record, as constituting the sum of all that the Saviour taught them after his resurrection. ¶ The apostles. The eleven that remained after the treason and death of Judas. ¶ Whom he had chosen. Mat. x. 1-4; Lu. vi. 12-16.

3. He showed himself. The resurrection of Jesus was the great fact on which the truth of the gospel was to be established. Hence the sacred writers so often refer to it, and establish it by so many arguments. As the fact of his resurrection lay at the foundation of all that Luke was about to record in his history, it was of importance that he should state clearly the sum of the evidence of it in the beginning of his work. ¶ After his passion. After he suffered, referring particularly to his death as the consummation of his sufferings. The word passion with us means commonly excitement or agitation of mind, as love, hope, fear, anger, &c. The original means after he suffered. The word passion, applied to the Saviour, denotes his last sufferings. Thus, in the Litany of the Episcopal Church, it is beautifully said, "By thine agony and bloody sweat; by thy cross and passion, good Lord, deliver us." The Greek word of the same derivation is rendered sufferings in 1 Pe. i. 11; iv. 13; Col. i. 24. ¶ By many infallible proofs. The word rendered here infallible proofs does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. In Greek authors it denotes an infallible sign or argument by which anything can be certainly known (Schleusner). Here it means the same—evidence that he was alive which could not deceive, or in which they could not be mistaken. That evidence consisted in his eating with them, conversing with them, meeting them at various times and places, working miracles (Jn. xxi. 6, 7), and with them, "commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of uniformly showing himself to be the same friend with whom they had been familiar for more than three years. This evidence was infallible—(1) Because it was to them unexpected. They had manifestly not believed that he would rise again, Jn. xx. 25; Lu. xxiv. 19-24. There was, therefore, no delusion resulting from any expectation of seeing him, or from a design to impose on men. (2) It was impossible that they could have been deceived in relation to one with whom they had been familiar for more than three years. No men in the possession of reason could be made to believe that they really saw, talked with, and ate with, a friend whom they had known so long and familiarly, unless it was real. (3) There were enough of them to avoid the possibility of deception. Though it might be pretended that one man could be imposed on, yet it could not be that an imposition could be practised for forty days on eleven men, who were all at first incredulous. (4) He was with them sufficient time to give evidence of his personal identity. It might be pretended, if they had seen him but once, that they were deceived. But they saw him often, and for the space of more than a month. (5) They saw him in various places and at times in which there could be no deception. If they had pretended that they saw him rise, or saw him at twilight in the morning when he rose, it might have been said that they were deluded by something that was merely the result of imagination. It might have been said that, expecting to see him rise, their hopes, in the agitated state of their minds, deceived them, and that they only fancied that they saw him. But it is not pretended by the sacred writers that they saw him rise. An impostor would have affirmed this, and would not have omitted it. But the sacred writers affirmed that they saw him after he was risen; when they were free from agitation; when they could judge coolly; in Jerusalem; in their own company when at worship; when journeying to Emmaus; when in Galilee; when he went with them to Mount Olivet; and when he ascended to heaven: and how could they have been deceived in this? (6) He appeared to them as he had always done, as a friend, companion, and benefactor; he ate with them, wrought a miracle before them, was engaged in the same work as he was before he suffered, renewed the same promise of the Holy Spirit, and gave them his commands respecting the work which he had died to establish, and the work which he required them to do—carrying out the same purposes and plans which he had before he died. In all these circumstances it was impossible that they should be deceived. ¶ Being seen of them forty days. There are no less than THIRTEEN different appearances of Jesus to his disciples recorded. For an account of them, see the Notes at the end of the gospel of Matthew. ¶ Speaking to them, &c. He was not only seen by them, but he continued the same topics of discourse as before his sufferings; thus showing that he was the same person that had suffered, and that his heart was still intent on the same great work. And as his heart was occupied with the same purposes which engaged his attention before he suffered, we are taught by this that we should aim at the same great work in all the circumstances of our being. Afflictions, persecutions, and the prospect of death never turned him from his great plan; nor should they be allowed to divert our minds from the great work which God has given us to do. ¶ The things pertaining to the kingdom of God. For an explanation of this phrase, the kingdom of God, see the Notes on Mat. iii. 2. The meaning is, Jesus gave them instructions about the organization, spread, and edification of his church.

4. And being assembled together. Margin, "or, eating together." This sense is given to this place in the Latin Vulgate, the Ethiopic, and the Syriac versions. But the Greek word has not properly this signification. It has the meaning of congregating, or assembling. It should have been, however, translated in the active sense, "and having assembled them together." The apostles were scattered after his death. But this passage denotes that he had assembled them together by his authority, for the purpose of giving them a charge the Father, which, saith he, 'ye have heard of me:

5 For <sup>a</sup>John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be <sup>b</sup>baptized

respecting their conduct when he should have left them. When this occurred does not appear from the narrative; but it is probable that it was not long before his ascension; and it is clear that the place where they were assembled was Jerusalem. ¶ But wait for the promise of the Father. For the fulfilment of the promise respecting the descent of the Holy Spirit made by the Father. ¶ Which ye have heard of me. Which I have made to you. See Jn. xiv. 16, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7-13.

5. For John truly baptized, &c. These are the words of Jesus to his apostles, and he evidently has reference to what was said of John's baptism compared with his own in Mat. iii. 11; Jn. i. 33. In those verses John is represented as baptizing with water, but the Messiah who was to come, as baptizing with the Holy Ghost and with fire. This promise was now about to be fulfilled in a remarkable manner. See Ac. ii. ¶ Not many days hence. This was probably spoken not long before his ascension, and of course not many days before the day of Pentecost.

6. When they therefore were come together. At the Mount of Olives. See ver. 9, 12. ¶ Wilt thou at this time, &c. The apostles had entertained the common opinions of the Jews about the temporal dominion of the Messiah. They expected that he would reign as a prince and conqueror, and would free them from the bondage of the Romans. Many instances where this expectation is referred to occur in the gospels, notwithstanding all the efforts which the Lord Jesus made to explain to them the true nature of his kingdom. This expectation was checked, and almost destroyed by his death (Lu. xxiv. 21), and it is clear that his death was the only means which could effectually change their opinions on this subject. Even his own instructions would not do it; and nothing but his being taken from them could direct their minds effectually to the true nature of his kingdom. Yet, though his death checked their expectations, and appeared to thwart their plans, his return to life excited them again. They beheld him with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence.

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, with them; they were assured that it was the same Saviour; they saw now that his enemies had no power over him; they could not doubt that a being who could rise from the dead could easily accomplish all his plans. And as they did not doubt now that he would restore the kingdom to Israel, they asked whether he would do it at that time? They did not ask whether he would do it at all, or whether they had correct views of his kingdom; but, taking that for granted, they asked him whether that was the time in which he would do it. The emphasis of the inquiry lies in the expression, "at this time," and hence the answer of the Saviour refers solely to the point of their inquiry, and not to the correctness or incorrectness of their opinions. From these expectations of the apostles we may learn, (1) That there is nothing so difficult to be removed from the mind as prejudice in favour of erroneous opinions. (2) That such prejudice will survive the plainest proofs to the contrary. (3) That it will often manifest itself even after all proper means have been taken to subdue it. Erroneous opinions thus maintain a secret ascendancy in a man's mind, and are revived by the slightest circumstances, even long after it was supposed that they were overcome, and in the face of the plainest proofs of reason or of Scripture. ¶ Restore. Bring back; put into its former situation. Judea was formerly governed by its own kings and laws; now, it was subject to the Romans. This bondage was grievous, and the nation sighed for deliverance. The inquiry of the apostles evidently was, whether he would now free them from the bondage of the Romans, and restore them to their former state of freedom and prosperity, as in the times of David and Solomon. See Is. i. 26. The word "restore" also may include more than a reducing it to its former state. It may mean, wilt thou now bestow the kingdom and dominion to Israel, according to the prediction in Da. vii. 27? ¶ The kingdom. The dominion; the empire; the reign. The expectation was that the Messiah—the king of Israel—would reign over men, and that thus the na-

Lord, 'wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

7 And he said unto them, 'It is not for you to know the times or

tion of the Jews would extend their empire over all the earth. ¶ To Israel. To the Jews, and particularly to the Jewish followers of the Messiah. Lightfoot thinks that this question was asked in indignation against the Jews. "Wilt thou confer dominion on a nation which has just put thee to death?" But the answer of the Saviour shows that this was not the design of the question.

7. It is not for you to know. The question of the apostles respected the time of the restoration; it was not whether he would do it. Accordingly, his answer meets precisely their inquiry; and he tells them in general that the time of the great events of God's kingdom was not to be understood by them. They had asked a similar question on a former occasion, Mat. xxiv. 3, "Tell us when shall these things be?" Jesus had answered them then by showing them that certain signs would precede his coming, and then by saying (ver. 36), "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." God has uniformly reprobated a vain curiosity on such points, 1 Th. v. 1, 2; 2 Pe. iii. 10; Lu. xii. 39, 40. ¶ The times, or the seasons. The difference between these words is, that the former denotes any time or period that is indefinite or uncertain; the latter denotes a fixed, definite, or appropriate time. They seem to be used here to denote the periods that would mark or determine all future events. ¶ The Father hath put, &c. So entirely had the Father reserved the knowledge of these to himself, that it is said that even the Son did not know them. See Mar. iii. 32, and the Notes on that place. ¶ In his own power. That is, he has fixed them by his own authority, he will bring them about in his own time and way; and therefore it is not proper for men anxiously to inquire into them. All prophecy is remarkably obscure in regard to the time of its fulfilment. The reasons why it is so are such as the following: (1) To excite men to watch for the events that are to come, as the time is uncertain, and they will come "like a thief in the night." (2) As they are to be brought about by human agency, they are so arranged as to call forth that agency. If men knew just when an event was to come to pass, they might be remiss, and feel that their own efforts were not needed. (3) The knowledge of future scenes—of the exact time, might alarm men, and absorb their thoughts so entirely as to prevent a proper attention to the present duties of life. Duty is ours now; God will provide for future scenes. (4) Promises sufficiently clear and full are therefore given us to encourage us, but not so full as to excite a vain and idle curiosity. All this is eminently true of our own death, one of the most important future scenes through which we are to pass. It is certainly before us; it is near; it cannot be long delayed; it may come at any moment. God has fixed the time, but will not inform us when it shall be. He does not gratify a vain curiosity; nor does he terrify us by announcing to us the day or the hour when we are to die, as we do a man that is to be executed. This would be to make our lives like that of a criminal sentenced to die, and we should through all our life, through fear of death, be subject to bondage, He. ii. 15. He has made enough known to excite us to make preparation, and to be always ready, having our loins girt about and our lamps trimmed and burning, Lu. xii. 35.

8. But ye shall receive power, &c. Literally, as it is translated in the margin, "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you." This was said to them to console them. Though they could not know the times which God reserved in his own appointment, yet they should receive the promised Guide and Comforter. The word power here refers to the help or aid which the Holy Spirit would grant; the power of speaking with new tongues; of preaching the gospel with great effect; of enduring great trials, &c. See Mar. xvi. 17, 18. The apostles had impatiently asked him if he was then about to restore the kingdom to Israel. Jesus by this answer rebuked their impatience, taught them to repress their ill-timed ardour; and assured them again of the coming upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and of the Holy Ghost. ¶ Ye shall be witnesses. For this purpose they were appointed; and to prepare them for this they had been with him for more than three years. They had seen his manner of life, his miracles, his meekness, his sufferings; they had listened to his instructions, and had conversed and eaten with him as a friend; they had seen him after he was risen, and were about to see him ascend to heaven; and they were thus qualified to bear witness to these things in all parts of the earth. Their number was so great that it could not be pretended that they were deceived; they had been so intimate with him and his plans that they were qualified to state what his doctrines and purposes were; and there was no motive but conviction of the truth that could induce them to make the sacrifices which they would be required to make in communicating these things to the world. In every respect, therefore, they were qualified to be impartial and competent witnesses. The original word here is μάρτυρες, martyrs. From this word the name martyrs has been given to those who suffered in times of persecution. The reason why this name was given to them was that they bore witness to the life, instructions, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, even in the midst of persecution and death. It is commonly supposed that nearly all of the apostles bore witness as martyrs in this sense to the truths of the Christian religion, but of this there is not clear proof. See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, vol. i. p. 55, 56. Still the word here does not necessarily mean that they to whom this was addressed would be martyrs, or would be put to death in bearing witness to the Lord Jesus; but that they were everywhere to testify to what they knew of him. The fact that this was the design of their appointment, and that they actually bore such testimony, is abundantly confirmed in the Acts of the Apostles, ch. i. 22; v. 32; x. 39, 42; xxii. 15. ¶ In Jerusalem. In the capital of the nation. See Ac. ii. The great work of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost occurred there. Most of the disciples remained in Jerusalem until the persecution that arose about the death of Stephen, Ac. viii. 1, 4. The apostles remained there till Herod put James to death. Comp. Ac. viii. 1, with xii. 1, 2. This was about eight years. During this time, however, Paul was called to the apostleship, and Peter had preached the gospel to Cornelius, Philip to the eunuch, &c. ¶ In all Judea. Judea was the southern division of the Holy Land, and included Jerusalem as the capital. See Notes on Mat. ii. 22. ¶ And in Samaria. This was the middle portion of Palestine. Notes, Mat. ii. 22. This was fulfilled by the disciples. See ch. viii. 1, "And they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria;" comp. ver. 4, 5, "They that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them." See also ver. 14; ch. ix. 31. ¶ And unto the uttermost parts of the earth. The word earth, or land, is sometimes taken to denote only the land of Palestine. But here there does not seem to be a necessity for limiting it thus. If Christ had intended that, he would have mentioned Galilee, as being the only remaining division of the country. But as he had expressly directed them to preach the gospel to all nations, the expression here is clearly to be considered as including the Gentile lands as well as the Jewish. The evidence that they did this is found in the subsequent parts of this book, and in the history of the church. It was in this way that Jesus replied to their question. Though he did not tell them the time when it was to be done, nor affirm that he would restore the kingdom to Israel, yet he gave them an answer that implied that the work should advance—should advance much farther than the land of Israel; and that they would have much to do in promoting it. All the commands of God, and all his communications, are such as to call up our energy, and teach us that we have much to do. The uttermost parts of the earth have been given to the Saviour (Ps. ii. 8), and the church should not rest until he whose right it is shall come and reign, Eze. xxi. 27. 9. While they beheld. While they saw him. It was of importance to state that circumstance, and to state it distinctly.

It is not affirmed in the New Testament that they saw him rise from the dead, because the evidence of that fact could be better established by their seeing him after he was risen. But the truth of his ascension to heaven could not be confirmed in that manner. Hence it was so arranged that he should ascend in open day, and in the presence of his apostles; and that not when they were asleep, or were inattentive to what was occurring, but when they were engaged in a conversation that would fix the attention, and even when they were looking upon him. Had Jesus vanished secretly, or had he disappeared in the night, the apostles would have been amazed and confounded; perhaps they would even have doubted whether they had not been deceived. But when they saw him leave them in this manner, they could not doubt that he had ascended to heaven, and that God approved his work, and would carry it forward. This event was exceedingly important. (1) It was a confirmation of the truth of the Christian religion. (2) It enabled the apostles to state distinctly where the Lord Jesus was, and at once directed their affections and their thoughts away from the earth, and opened their eyes on the glory of the scheme of religion they were to establish. If their Saviour was in heaven, it settled the question about the nature of his kingdom. It was clear that it was not designed to be a temporal kingdom. The reasons why it was proper that the Lord Jesus should ascend to heaven rather than remain on earth were: (1) That he had finished the work which God gave him to do on the earth (Jn. xvii. 4; xix. 30), and it was proper that he should be received back to the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, Jn. xvii. 4, 5; Phi. ii. 6, 9, 10. (2) It was proper that he should ascend in order that the Holy Spirit might come down and perform his part of the work of redemption. Jesus, by his personal ministry, as a man, could be but in one place; the Holy Spirit could be in all places, and could apply the work to all men. See Note on Jn. xvi. 7. (3) A part of the work of Christ was yet to be performed in heaven. That was the work of intercession. The high-priest of the Jews not only made an atonement, but also presented the blood of sacrifice before the mercy-seat, as the priest of the people, Le. xvi. 11-14. This was done to typify the entrance of the great High-priest of our profession into the heavens, He. ix. 7, 8, 11, 12. The work which he performs there is the work of intercession, He. vii. 25. This is properly the work which an advocate performs in a court for his client. As applicable to Christ, the meaning is, that he, as our great High-priest, still manages our cause in heaven; secures our interests; obtains for us grace and mercy. His work, in this respect, consists in his appearing in the presence of God for us (He. ix. 24); in his presenting the merits of his blood (He. ix. 12, 14); and in securing the continuance of the mercy which has been bestowed on us, and which is still needful for our welfare. The Lord Jesus also ascended that he might assume and exercise the office of King in the immediate seat of power. All worlds were made subject to him for the welfare of the church; and it was needful that he should be solemnly invested with that power in the presence of God as the reward of his earthly toils. 1 Co. xv. 25, "He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." Comp. Ep. i. 20-22; Phi. ii. 6-11. ¶ A cloud received him. He entered into the region of the clouds, and was hid from their view. But two others of our race have been taken bodily from earth to heaven. Enoch was translated (Ge. v. 24; comp. He. xi. 5); and Elijah was taken up by a whirlwind, 2 Ki. ii. 11. It is remarkable that when the return of the Saviour is mentioned, it is uniformly said that he will return in the clouds, ver. 11; Mat. xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64; Mar. xiii. 26; Re. i. 7; Da. vii. 13. The clouds are an emblem of sublimity and grandeur, and perhaps this is all that is intended by these expressions, De. iv. 11; 2 Sa. xxii. 12; Ps. xcvi. 2; civ. 3.

10. Looked stedfastly. They fixed their eyes, or gazed intently toward heaven. Lu. iv. 20, "And the eyes of all them in the synagogue were fastened (Greek, the same word as here) on him." It denotes the intense gaze when we are deeply interested, and wish to see clearly and distinctly. They were amazed and confounded; what had occurred was unlooked for; for they had just been inquiring whether he would not, at that time, restore the kingdom to Israel. With this mingled amazement, disappointment, and curiosity, and with an earnest desire to catch the last glimpse of their beloved master, they naturally continued to gaze on the distant clouds where he had mysteriously disappeared from their view. Never was a scene more impressive, grand, and solemn than this. ¶ Toward heaven. Toward the distant clouds or sky which had received him. ¶ As he went up. Literally upon him going up; that is, they gazed on him as he ascended, and doubtless they continued to gaze after he had disappeared from their view. ¶ Two men. From the raiment of these "men," and the nature of their message, it seems clear that they were angelic beings, who were sent to meet and comfort the disciples on this occasion. They appeared in human form, and Luke describes them as they appeared. Angels are not unfrequently called men. Lu. xxiv. 4, "Two men stood by them in shining garments," &c. Comp. Jn. xx. 12; Mat. xxviii. 5. As two angels are mentioned only as addressing the apostles after the resurrection of Jesus (Jn. xx. 12; Lu. xxiv. 4), it is no unnatural supposition that these were the same who had been designated to the honourable office of bearing witness to his resurrection, and of giving them all the information about that resurrection, and of his ascension, which their circumstances needed. ¶ In white apparel. Angels are commonly represented as clothed in white. See Notes on Jn. xx. 12; Mat. xxviii. 3; Mar. xvi. 5. It is an emblem of purity; and the worshippers of heaven are represented as clothed in this manner. Re. iii. 4, "They shall walk with me in white;" ver. 5, "He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment;" iv. 4; vii. 9, 13, 14.

11. Ye men of Galilee. Galilee was the place of their former residence, and they were commonly known by the name of Galileans. ¶ Why stand ye, &c. There is doubtless a slight degree of censure implied in this, as well as a design to call their attention away from a vain attempt to see the departed Saviour. The impropriety may have been (1) In the feeling of disappointment, as if he would not restore the kingdom to Israel. (2) Possibly they were expecting that he would again soon appear, though he had often foretold them that he would ascend to heaven. (3) There might have been an impropriety in their earnest desire for the mere bodyly presence of the Lord Jesus, when it was more important that he should be in heaven. We may see here also that it is our duty not to stand in idleness, and to gaze even toward heaven. We, as well as the apostles, have a great work to do, and we should actively engage in it without delay. ¶ Gazing up. Looking up. ¶ This same Jesus. This was said to comfort them. The same tried friend who had been so faithful to them would return. They ought not, therefore, to look with despondency at his departure. ¶ Into heaven. This expression denotes into the immediate presence of God; or into the place of perpetual purity and happiness, where God peculiarly manifests his favour. The same thing is frequently designated by his sitting on the right hand of God, as emblematic of power, honour, and favour. See Notes on Mar. xvi. 19; xiv. 62; He. i. 3; viii. 1; Ac. vii. 55; Ro. viii. 34; Ep. i. 20. ¶ Shall so come. At the day of judgment. Jn. xiv. 3, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again," &c. ¶ In like manner, &c. In clouds, as he ascended. See Notes on ver. 9; 1 Th. iv. 16. This address was designed to comfort the disciples. Though their master and friend was taken from them, yet he was not removed for ever. He would come again with similar majesty and glory to vindicate his people, and to tread his enemies under his feet. The design for which he will come will be to judge the world, Mat. xxv. There will be an evident fitness and propriety in his coming for such reasons as the following: (1) Because his appropriate work in heaven as mediator will have been accomplished; his people will have been saved; the great enemy of God and man will have been subdued; death will have been conquered; and the gospel will have shown its power in subduing all forms of wickedness; in removing the effects of sin; in establishing the law, and in vindicating the honour of God; and all will have been done that is necessary to establish the authority of God throughout the universe. It will be proper, therefore, that this mysterious order of things shall be wound up, and the results become a matter of record in the history of the universe. This will be better than it would be to suffer an eternal millennium on the earth, while the saints should many of them slumber, and the wicked still be in their graves. (2) It is proper that he should come to vindicate his people, and raise them up to glory. Here they have been persecuted, oppressed, put to death. Their character is assailed; they are poor; and the world despises them. It is fit that God should show himself to be their friend; that he should do justice to their injured names and motives; that he should bring out hidden and obscure virtue, and vindicate it; that he should enter every grave and bring forth his friends to life. (3) It is proper that he should show his hatred of sin. Here it triumphs. The wicked are rich, and honoured, and mighty, and say, Where is the promise of his coming? 2 Pe. iii. 4. It is right that he should defend his cause. Hence the Lord Jesus will come to guard the avenues to heaven, and to see that the universe suffers no wrong by the admission of an improper person to the skies. (4) The great transactions of redemption have been public, open, often grand. The apostasy was public, in the face of angels and of the universe. Sin has been open, public high-handed. Misery has been public, and has rolled its deep and turbid waves in the face of the universe. Death has been public; all worlds have seen the race cut down and moulder. The death of Jesus was public: the angels saw it; the heavens were clothed with mourning; the earth shook, and the dead arose. Jesus was publicly whipped, cursed, crucified; and it is proper that he should publicly triumph—that all heaven rejoicing, and all hell at length humbled, should see his public victory. Hence he will come with clouds—with angels—with fire—and will raise the dead, and exhibit to all the universe the amazing close of the scheme of redemption. (5) We have in these verses a description of the most grand and wonderful events that this world has ever known—the ascension and return of the Lord Jesus. Here is consolation for the Christian; and here is a source of ceaseless alarm to the sinner.

12. Then they returned to Jerusalem. In Lu. xxiv. 52, we are told that they worshipped Jesus before they returned, and it is probable that the act of worship to which he refers was that which is mentioned in this chapter—their gazing intently on their departing Lord. ¶ From the mount called Olivet. From the Mount of Olives. See Notes on Mat. xxi. 1. The part of the mountain from which he ascended was the eastern declivity, where stood the little village of Bethany, Lu. xxiv. 50. ¶ A sabbath-day's journey. As far as might be lawfully travelled by a Jew on the Sabbath. This was 2000 paces or cubits, or seven furlongs and a half—not quite one mile. See Notes on Mat. xxiv. 20. The distance of a lawful journey on the Sabbath was not fixed by the laws of Moses, but the Jewish teachers had fixed it at 2000 paces. This measure was determined on because it was a tradition that in the camp of the Israelites, when coming from Egypt, no part of the camp was more than 2000 paces from the tabernacle, and over this space, therefore, they were permitted to travel for worship. Perhaps, also, some countenance was given to this from the fact that this was the extent of the suburbs of the Levitical cities, Nu. xxxv. 5. Mount Olivet was but five furlongs from Jerusalem, and Bethany was fifteen furlongs. But on the eastern declivity of the mountain the tract of country was called, for a considerable space, the region of Bethany; and it was from this place that the Lord Jesus ascended.

13. Were come in. To Jerusalem. ¶ They went up into an upper room. The word ἀνέβησαν, here translated upper room, occurs but four times in the New Testament: Ac. ix. 37, “She (Dorcas) was sick and died; whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber" (see also ver. 39); xx. 8, "And there were many lights in the upper chamber where they were gathered together." The room so designated was an upper chamber used for devotion, or as a place where to lay the dead before burial, or occasionally for conversation, &c. Here it evidently means the place where they were assembled for devotion. Luke (xxiv. 53) says they were continually in the temple praising and blessing God; and some have supposed that the upper room here designated was one of the rooms in the temple. But there is no evidence of that, and it is not very probable. Such a room as that here referred to was a part of every house, especially in Jerusalem; and the disciples probably selected one where they might be together, and yet so retired that they might be safe from the Jews. The expression used in Lu. xxiv. 53, "They were continually—διαταύρε—in the temple," signifies no more than that this was a frequent or customary resort; they were always in the temple at the usual seasons of devotion, or they were in the constant habit of resorting thither. "Even De Wette allows that there is no discrepancy." ¶ Where abode. Where were remaining. This does not mean that this was their permanent habitation; but they remained there waiting for the descent of the Holy Spirit. ¶ Peter, &c. All the apostles were there which Jesus had at first chosen except Judas, Lu. vi. 13-16.

14. These all continued, &c. The word continued denotes persevering and constant attention. The main business was devotion. Ac. vi. 4, "We will give ourselves continually to the ministry of the word." Ro. xii. 12, "Continuing instant in prayer;" xiii. 6, "Attending continually upon this very thing." It is their main and constant employment. Comp. Col. iv. 2. ¶ With one accord. Greek, ενσυμαδί—with one mind. The word denotes the entire harmony of their views and feelings. There were no schisms, no divided interests, no discordant purposes. This is a beautiful picture of devotion, and a specimen of what social worship ought now to be, and a beautiful illustration of Ps. cxxxiii. The apostles felt that they had one great object; and their deep grief at the loss of their master, and their doubts and perplexities, led them, as all afflictions ought to lead us, to the throne of grace. ¶ In prayer and supplication. These words are nearly synonymous, and are often interchanged. They express here petitions to God for blessings, and prayer to avert impending evils. ¶ With the women. The women that had followed the Lord Jesus from Galilee, Lu. viii. 2, 3; xxiii. 49, 55; xxiv. 10; Mat. xxvii. 55. The women particularly mentioned are Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Joses, the mother of Zebedee's children, Joanna the wife of Chuza, and Susanna. Besides these, there were others whose names are not mentioned. Most of them were relatives of the apostles or of the Saviour; and it is not improbable that some of them were wives of the apostles. Peter is known to have been married (Mat. viii. 14), and had his wife in attendance with him in his travels (1 Co. ix. 5); and the same was doubtless true of some of the other apostles, 1 Co. ix. 5. Mary, the mother of Jesus, is here particularly mentioned, showing that she now cast in her lot with the apostles. She had, besides, been specially intrusted to the care of John (Jn. xix. 26, 27), and had no other home. This is the last time that she is mentioned in the New Testament. ¶ And with his brethren. See Notes on Mat. xii. 46. At first they had been unbelieving about the claims of Jesus (Jn. vii. 5); but it seems that they had been subsequently converted.

stood up. Peter standing up, or rising. This is a customary expression in the Scriptures when one begins to do a thing, Lu. xv. 18. The reason why Peter did this may be seen in the Notes on Mat. xvi. 16, 17. It is not improbable, besides, that Peter was the most aged of the apostles; and from his uniform conduct we know that he was the most ardent. It was perfectly characteristic, therefore, for him to introduce the business of the election of a new apostle. ¶ The disciples. This was the name which was given to them as being learners in the school of Christ. See Notes on Mat. v. 1. ¶ The number of the names. The number of the persons, or individuals. The word name is often used to denote the person, Re. iii. 4; Ac. iv. 12; xviii. 15; Ep. i. 21. In Syriac it is, "The assembly of men was about an hundred and twenty." This was the first assembly convened to transact the business of the church; and it is not a little remarkable that the vote in so important a matter as electing an apostle was by the entire church. It settles the question that the election of a minister and pastor should be by the church, and that a pastor should not be placed over a church by a patron, or by an ecclesiastical body. If a case could ever occur where it would be right and proper that one should be selected to exercise the office of a minister of Christ by the ministry only, the election of one to fill the office of an apostle was such a case. And yet in this the entire church had a voice. Whether this was all the true church at this time does not appear from the history. This expression cannot mean that there were no more Christians, but that these were all that had convened in the upper room. It is certain that our Saviour had, by his own ministry, brought many others to be his true followers. Comp. 1 Co. xv. 6.

Syriac renders it more appropriately than by the introduction of the conjunction "and"—"Men, our brethren." ¶ This scripture. This prediction contained in the writings of the Old Testament. Comp. Notes on Jn. v. 39. The passage to which Peter refers is commonly supposed to be that recorded in Ps. xli. 9, "Yea, mine own familiar friend . . . hath lifted up his heel against me." This is expressly applied to Judas by our Saviour, in Jn. xiii. 18. But it seems clear that the reference is not to the 41st Psalm, but to the passage in the 69th Psalm which Peter proceeds to quote in ver. 20. ¶ Must needs be fulfilled. It would certainly be fulfilled. Not that there was any physical necessity or any compulsion; but it could not but occur that a prediction of God would be fulfilled. This makes no affirmation about the freedom of Judas in doing it. A man will be just as free in wickedness if it be foretold that he will be wicked, as if it had never been known to any other being but himself. ¶ The Holy Ghost, &c. This is a strong attestation to the inspiration of David, and accords with the uniform testimony of the New Testament, that the sacred writers spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, 2 Pe. i. 21. ¶ Concerning Judas. In what respect this was concerning Judas, see ver. 20. ¶ Which was guide, &c., Mat. xxvi. 47; Jn. xviii. 3.

17. He was numbered with us. He was chosen as an apostle by the Lord Jesus, Lu. vi. 13-16. This does not mean that he was a true Christian, but that he was reckoned among the apostles. Long before he betrayed him, Jesus declared that he was a devil, Jn. vi. 70. He knew his whole character when he chose him, Jn. ii. 25. If it be asked why he chose such a man to be an apostle; why he was made the treasurer of the apostles, and was admitted to the fullest confidence; we may reply, that a most important object was gained in having such a man—a spy—among them. It might be pretended, when the apostles bore testimony to the purity of life, of doctrine, and of purpose of the Lord Jesus, that they were interested and partial friends; that they might be disposed to suppress some of his real sentiments, and represent him in a light more favourable than the truth. Hence the testimony of such a man as Judas, if favourable, must be invaluable. It would be free from the charge of partiality. If Judas knew anything unfavourable to the character of Jesus, he would have communicated it to the Sanhedrim. If he knew of any secret plot against the government, or seditious purpose, he had every inducement to declare it. He had every opportunity to know it; he was with him; heard him converse; was <sup>x</sup>a member of his family, and admitted to terms of familiarity. Yet even Judas could not be bought or bribed, to testify against the moral character of the Saviour. If he had done it, or could have done it, it would have preserved him from the charge of treason; would have entitled him to the reputation of a public benefactor in discovering secret sedition; and would have saved him from the pangs of remorse, and from self-murder. Judas would have done it if he could. But he alleged no such charge; he did not even dare to lisp a word against the pure designs of the Lord Jesus; and his own reproofs of conscience (Mat. xxvii. 4), and his voluntary death (Mat. xxvii. 5), furnish the highest proof that can be desired of his conviction that the betrayed Redeemer was innocent. Judas would have been just the witness which the Jews desired of the treasonable purposes of Jesus. But that could not be procured, even by gold; and they were compelled to suborn other men to testify against the Son of God, Mat. xxvi. 60. We may add here, that the introduction of such a character as that of Judas Iscariot into the number of the apostles, and the use to be made of his testimony, would never have occurred to the author of a forged book. He would have said that they were all the true friends of the Lord Jesus. To have invented such a character as that of Judas, and to make him perform such a part in the plan as the sacred writers do, would have required too much art and cunning—was too refined and subtle a device, to have been thought of unless it had actually occurred.

18. Now this man, &c. The money which was given for betraying the Lord Jesus was thrown down in the temple, and the field was purchased with it by the Jewish priests. See Mat. xxvii. 5, 10, and the Notes on that place. A man is said often to do a thing when he furnishes means for doing it. Comp. Mat. xxvii. 60, “And laid it [the body of Jesus] in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock.” That is, had caused to be hewn out. Jn. iv. 1, “When, therefore, the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John.” Through his disciples, for Jesus himself baptized not, ver. 2. The same principle is recognized in law in the well-known maxim, Qui facit per alium, facit per se. ¶ The reward of iniquity. The price which he had for that deed of stupendous wickedness—the betraying of the Lord Jesus. ¶ And falling headlong. The word here rendered headlong.—renis (Latin pronus, whence the English word prone)—means properly bent forward, head foremost; and the idea is, that his position in hanging himself was such that when the cord broke he fell headlong, or fell forward on his face. This can easily be supposed if he threw himself from a rock or elevated place. He first hanged himself, and then fell and was burst asunder. See Notes on Mat. xxvii. 5.

19. It was known, &c., Mat. xxvii. 8. The scene in the temple; the acts of the priests in purchasing the field, &c., would make it known; and the name of the field would preserve the memory of the guilt of Judas. ¶ Their proper tongue. The language spoken by the Jews—the Syro-Chaldaic. ¶ Aceldama. This is composed of two Syro-Chaldaic words, and means literally, the field of blood.

25. This is the prediction doubtless to which Peter refers in ver. 16. The intermediate passage in ver. 18, 19, is probably a parenthesis; the words of Luke, not of Peter. So Calvin, Kuinoel, Olshausen, De Wette, and Hackett understand it. It is not probable that Peter would introduce a narrative like this, with which they were all familiar, in an address to the disciples. The Hebrew in the Psalm is, "Let their habitation (Heb. fold, inclosure for cattle; tower, or palace) be desolate, and let none dwell in their tents." This quotation is not made literally from the Hebrew, nor from the Septuagint. The plural is changed to the singular, and there are some other slight variations. The Hebrew is, "Let there be no one dwelling in their tents." The reference to the tents is omitted in the quotation. The term habitation, in the Psalm, means evidently the dwelling-place of the enemies of the writer of the Psalm. It is an image expressive of their overthrow and defeat by a just God: "Let their families be scattered, and the places where they have dwelt be without an inhabitant, as a reward for their crimes." If the Psalm was originally composed with reference to the Messiah and his sufferings, the expression here was not intended to denote Judas in particular, but one of his foes who was to meet the just punishment of rejecting, betraying, and murdering him. The change, therefore, which Peter made from the plural to the singular, and the application to Judas especially as one of those enemies, accords with the design of the Psalm, and is such a change as the circumstances of the case justified and required. It is an image, therefore, expressive of judgment and desolation coming upon his betrayer—an image to be literally fulfilled in relation to his habitation, drawn from the desolation when a man is driven from his home, and when his dwelling-place becomes tenantless. It is not a little remarkable that this Psalm is repeatedly quoted as referring to the Messiah: ver. 9, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up," expressly applied to Christ in Jn. ii. 17; ver. 21, "They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink"

—the thing which was done to Jesus on the cross, Mat. xxvii. 34. The whole Psalm is expressive of deep sorrow—of persecution, contempt, weeping, being forsaken, and is throughout applicable to the Messiah; with what is remarkable, not a single expression necessarily limited to David. It is not easy to ascertain whether the ancient Jews referred this Psalm to the Messiah. A part of the title to the Psalm in the Syriac version is, "It is called a prophecy concerning those things which Christ suffered, and concerning the casting away of the Jews." The prophecy in ver. 25 is not to be understood of Judas alone, but of the enemies of the Messiah in general, of which Judas was one. On this principle the application to Judas of the passage by Peter is to be defended. ¶ And his bishopric let another take. This is quoted from Ps. cix. 8, "Let his days be few, and let another take his office." This is called "a Psalm of David," and is of the same class as Ps. vi., xxii., xxv., xxxviii., xlvi. This class of Psalms is commonly supposed to have expressed David's feelings in the calamitous times of the persecution by Saul, the rebellion of Absalom, &c. They are all also expressive of the condition of a suffering and persecuted Messiah, and many of them are applied to him in the New Testament. The general principle on which most of them are applicable is, not that David personated or typified the Messiah—which is nowhere affirmed, and which can be true in no intelligible sense—but that he was placed in circumstances similar to the Messiah; was encompassed with like enemies; was persecuted in the same manner. They are expressive of high rank, office, dignity, and piety, cast down, waylaid, and encompassed with enemies. In this way they express general sentiments as really applicable to the case of the Messiah as to David. They were placed in similar circumstances. The same help was needed. The same expressions would convey their feelings. The same treatment was proper for their enemies. On this principle it was that David deemed his enemy, whoever he was, unworthy of his office, and desired that it should be given to another. In like manner, Judas

which have companied with us all had rendered himself unworthy of his office, and there was the same propriety that it should be given to another. And as the office had now become vacant by the death of Judas, and according to one declaration in the Psalms, so, according to another, it was proper that it should be conferred on some other person. The word rendered "office" in the Psalm means the care, charge, business, oversight of anything. It is a word applicable to magistrates, whose care it is to see that the laws are executed; and to military men who have charge of an army, or a part of an army. In Job x. 12 it is rendered "thy visitation." In Nu. iv. 16, "and to the office of Eleazar" &c. In the case of David it refers to those who were intrusted with military or other offices who had treacherously perverted them to persecute and oppose him, and who had thus shown themselves unworthy of the office. The Greek word which is used here, ιανόντων, is taken from the Septuagint, and means the same thing as the Hebrew. It is well rendered in the margin "office, or charge." It means charge or office in general, without in itself specifying of what kind. It is the concrete of the noun ιανός, commonly translated "bishop," and means his office, charge, or duty. That word means simply having the oversight of anything, and as applied to the officers of the New Testament, it denotes merely their having charge of the affairs of the church, without specifying the nature or the extent of their jurisdiction. Hence it is often interchanged with presbyter or elder, and denotes the discharge of the duties of the same office: Ac. xx. 28, "Take heed (presbyters or elders, ver. 17) to yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers"—ιανόντων—bishops; He. xii. 15, "Looking diligently," &c.—ιανοτοῦντες; Phi. i. 1, "with the bishops and deacons;" "Paul called presbyters bishops, for they had at that time the same name" (Theodoret, as quoted by Schleusner); 1 Pe. v. 2, "Feed the flock of God (that is, you who are elders, or presbyters, v. 1), taking the oversight thereof"—ιανοτοῦντες. These passages show that the term in the New Testament designates the supervision the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us,

or care which was exercised over the church, by whomsoever performed, without specifying the nature or extent of the jurisdiction. It is scarcely necessary to add that Peter here did not intend to affirm that Judas sustained any office corresponding to what is now commonly understood by the term "bishop."

21, 22. Wherefore of these men. Of those who had witnessed the life and works of Christ, and who were therefore qualified to discharge the duties of the office from which Judas fell. Probably Peter refers to the seventy disciples, Lu. x. 1, 2. ¶ Went in and out. A phrase signifying that he was their constant companion. It expresses in general all the actions of the life, Ps. cxxi. 8; De. xxviii. 19; xxxi. 2. ¶ Beginning from the baptism of John. The words "beginning from" in the original refer to the Lord Jesus. The meaning may be thus expressed, "during all the time in which the Lord Jesus, beginning (his ministry) at the time when he was baptized by John, went in and out among us, until the time when he was taken up," &c. From those who had during that time been the constant companions of the Lord Jesus must one be taken, who would thus be a witness of his whole ministry. ¶ Must one be ordained. It is fit or proper that one should be ordained. The reason of this was, that Jesus had originally chosen the number twelve for this work, and as one of them had fallen, it was proper that the vacancy should be filled by some person equally qualified for the office. The reason why it was proper that he should be taken from the seventy disciples was, that they had been particularly distinguished by Jesus himself, and had been witnesses of most of his public life, Lu. x. 1-16. The word ordained with us has a fixed and definite signification. It means to set apart to a sacred office with proper forms and solemnities, commonly by the imposition of hands. But this is not, of necessity, the meaning of this passage. The Greek word usually denoting ordination is not used here. The expression is literally, "must one be, or become, γείσθαι, a witness with us of his resurrection." The expression does not im-of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection.

23 And they appointed two, Jo-ply that he must be set apart in any particular manner, but simply that one should be designated or appointed for this specific purpose, to be a witness of the resurrection of Christ.

23. And they appointed two. They proposed, or, as we should say, nominated two. Literally, they placed two, or made them to stand forth, as persons do who are candidates for office. These two were probably more distinguished by prudence, wisdom, piety, and age than the others, and they were so nearly equal in qualifications that they could not determine which was the best fitted for the office. ¶ Joseph called Barsabas, &c. It is not certainly known what the name Barsabas denotes. The Syriac word Bar means son, and the word Sabas has been translated an oath, rest, quiet, or captivity. Why the name was given to Joseph is not known; but probably it was the family name—Joseph son of Sabas. Some have conjectured that this was the same man who, in ch. iv. 36, is called Barnabas. But of this there is no proof. Lightfoot supposes that he was the son of Alpheus and brother of James the Less, and that he was chosen on account of his relationship to the family of the Lord Jesus. ¶ Was surnamed Justus. Who was called Justus. This is a Latin name, meaning just, and was probably given him on account of his distinguished integrity. It was not uncommon among the Jews for a man to have several names, Mat. x. 3. ¶ And Matthias. Nothing is known of the family of this man, or of his character, further than that he was numbered with the apostles, and shared their lot in the toils, the persecutions, and the honours of preaching the gospel to mankind.

24. And they prayed. As they could not agree on the individual, they invoked the direction of God in their choice—an example which should be followed in every selection of an individual to exercise the duties of the sacred office of the ministry. ¶ Which knowest the hearts of all men. This is often declared to be the peculiar prerogative of God, Je. xvii. 10, “I, Je- seph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias.

24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, “which knowest the *hovah, search the heart,” &c.; Ps. cxxxix. 1, 23; 1 Ch. xxviii. 9. Yet this attribute is also expressly ascribed to Jesus Christ, Re. ii. 18; comp. 23, “These things saith the Son of God—I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts;” Jn. ii. 25; vi. 64; xvi. 19. There are strong reasons for supposing that the apostles on this occasion addressed this prayer to the Lord Jesus Christ. (1) The name Lord—Kύρος—is the common appellation which they gave to him, Ac. ii. 36; vii. 59, 60; x. 36; 1 Co. ii. 8; Phi. ii. 11; Re. xi. 8, et al. (2) We are told that they worshipped him, or rendered him divine honours after his ascension, Lu. xxiv. 52. (3) The disciples were accustomed to address him after his crucifixion by the names Lord or God indifferently, Ac. i. 6; Jn. xx. 28; Ac. vii. 59. (4) This was a matter pertaining especially to the church which the Lord Jesus had redeemed, and to his own arrangement in regard to it. He had chosen the apostles; he had given them their commission; he had fixed their number; and, what is worthy of special remark here, he had been the companion of the very men here designated as candidates for the office, and knew their qualifications for this work. If the apostles ever called on the Lord Jesus after his ascension, this was a case in which they would be likely to do it. That it was done is clear from the account of the death of Stephen, Ac. vii. 59, 60. And in this important matter of ordaining a new apostle to be a witness for Jesus Christ, nothing was more natural than that they should address him, though bodily absent, as they would assuredly have done if he were present. But if on this occasion they did actually address Christ, then two things clearly follow. First, that it is proper to render him divine homage, agreeably to the uniform declarations of the Scripture: Jn. v. 23, “That all men should honour the Son even as they honour the Father;” He. i. 6, “And let all the angels of God worship him;” Phi. ii. 10, 11; Re. v. 8-14; 1 Th. iii. 11, 12. Secondly, he must be divine. To none other but God can religious homage be rendered; and none other* hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen,

25 That he may take part of this can be described as knowing the hearts of all men. The reason why they appealed to him on this occasion as the searcher of the heart was doubtless the great importance of the work to which the successor of Judas was to be called. One apostle of fair external character had proved a traitor; and, with this fact before them, they appealed to the Saviour himself to select one who would be true to him, and not bring dishonour on his cause. ¶ Show whether, &c. Show which of them. ¶ Thou hast chosen. Which of the two thou hast judged to be best qualified for the work.

25. That he may take part of this ministry. The word rendered part—παρτησον—is the same which in the next verse is rendered lots. It properly means a lot or portion—the portion divided to a man, or assigned to him by casting lots; and also the instrument or means by which the lot is determined. The former is its meaning here; the office, or portion of apostolic work, which would fall to him by taking the place of Judas.

¶ Ministry and apostleship. This is an instance of the figure of speech hendiadys, when two words are used to express one thing. It means the apostolic ministry. See instances in Ge. i. 14,

"Let them be for signs and for seasons," that is, signs of seasons; Ac. xxiii. 6, "Hope and resurrection of the dead," that is, hope of the resurrection of the dead.

¶ From which Judas by transgression fell. Literally, went aside—παρεστηση—“as opposed to the idea of adhering faithfully to the character and service which his apostleship required of him” (Prof. Hackett).

The transgression referred to was his treason and suicide.

These words by different interpreters have been referred both to Matthias and Judas. Those who refer them to Matthias say that they mean that Judas fell that Matthias might go to his own place, that is, to a place for which he was fitted, or well qualified. But to this there are many objections. 1. The apostolic office could with no propriety be called, in reference to Matthias, his own place, until it was actually conferred on him.

2. There is no instance in which the expression to go to his own place is applied to a successor in office.

ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

3. It is not true that the design or reason why Judas fell was to make way for another. He fell by his crimes; his avarice, his voluntary and enormous wickedness. 4. The former part of the sentence contains this sentiment: “Another must be appointed to this office which the death of Judas has made vacant.” If this expression, “that he might go,” &c., refers to the successor of Judas, it expresses the same sentiment, but more obscurely. 5. The obvious and natural meaning of the phrase is to refer it to Judas. But those who suppose that it refers to Judas differ greatly about its meaning. Some suppose that it refers to his own house, and that the meaning is, that he left the apostolic office to return to his own house; and they appeal to Nu. xxiv. 25. But it is not true that Judas did this; nor is there the least proof that it was his design. Others refer it to the grave, as the place of man, where all must lie; and particularly as an ignominious place where it was proper that a traitor like Judas should lie. But there is no example where the word place is used in this sense, nor is there an instance where a man, by being buried, is said to return to his own or proper place. Others have supposed that the manner of his death by hanging is referred to as his own or his proper place. But this interpretation is evidently an unnatural and forced one. The word place cannot be applied to an act of self-murder. It denotes habitation, abode, situation in which to remain; not an act. These are the only interpretations of the passage which can be suggested, except the common one of referring it to the abode of Judas in the world of woe. This might be said to be his own, as he had prepared himself for it, and as it was proper that he who betrayed his Lord should dwell there. This interpretation may be defended by the following considerations: 1. It is the obvious and natural meaning of the words. It commends itself by its simplicity and its evident connection with the context. It has in all ages been the common interpretation; nor has any other been adopted, except in cases where there was a theory to be defended about future punishment.

Unless men had previously made up their minds not to believe in future punishment, no one would ever have thought of any other interpretation. This fact alone throws strong light on the meaning of the passage. 2. It accords with the crimes of Judas, and with all that we know of him. What the future doom of Judas would be was not unknown to the apostles. Jesus Christ had expressly declared this—"it had been good for that man if he had not been born;" a declaration which could not be true if, after any limited period of suffering, he were at last admitted to eternal happiness. See Mat. xxvi. 24, and the Notes on that place. This declaration was made in the presence of the eleven apostles, at the institution of the Lord's supper, and at a time when their attention was absorbed with deep interest in what Christ said; and it was therefore a declaration which they would not be likely to forget. As they knew the fate of Judas beforehand, nothing was more natural for them than to speak of it familiarly as a thing which had actually occurred when he betrayed his Lord and hung himself. 3. The expression "to go to his own place" is one which is used by the ancient writers to denote going to an eternal destiny. Thus the Jewish Tract, Baal Turim, on Nu. xxiv. 25, says, "Balaani went to his own place, that is, to Gehenna," to hell. Thus the Targum, or Chaldee Paraphrase on Ec. vi. 6, says, "Although the days of a man's life were two thousand years, and he did not study the law, and do justice, in the day of his death his soul shall descend to hell, to the one place where all sinners go." Thus Ignatius in the Epistle to the Magnesians says, "Because all things have an end, the two things death and life shall lie down together, and each one shall go to his own place." The phrase his own place means the place or abode which was fitted for him, which was his appropriate home. Judas was not in a place which beffited his character when he was an apostle; he was not in such a place in the church; he would not be in heaven. Hell was the only place which was fitted to the man of avarice and of treason. And if this be the true interpretation of this passage, then it follows, 1. That there will be such a thing as future, eternal punishment. There is certainly one man in hell, and ever will be. If there is one there, for the same reason there may be others. All objections to the doctrine are removed by this single fact; and it cannot be true that all men will be saved. 2. Each individual in eternity will find his own proper place. The punishment of hell is not an arbitrary appointment. Every man will go to the place for which his character is fitted. The hypocrite is not fitted for heaven. The man of pride, and avarice, and pollution, and falsehood, is not fitted for heaven. The place adapted to such men is hell; and the design of the judgment will be to assign to each individual his proper abode in the eternal world. It would not be fit that the holy and pure should dwell for ever in the same place with the unholy and impure; and the Lord Jesus will come to assign to each his appropriate eternal habitation. 3. The sinner will have no cause of complaint. If he is assigned to his proper place, he cannot complain. If he is unfit for heaven, he cannot complain that he is excluded. And if his character and feelings are such as make it proper that he should find his eternal abode among the enemies of God, then he must expect that a God of justice and equity will assign him such a doom. But, 4. This will not alleviate his pain; it will deepen his woe. He will have the eternal consciousness that that, and that only, is his place—the abode for which he is fitted. The prison is no less dreadful because a man is conscious that he deserves it. The gallows is not the less terrible because the man knows that he deserves to die. And the consciousness of the sinner that he is unfit for heaven; that there is not a solitary soul there with whom he could have sympathy or friendship; that he is fit for hell, and hell only, will be an ingredient of eternal bitterness in the cup of woe that awaits him. Let not the sinner then hope to escape; for God will assuredly appoint his residence in that world to which his character here is adapted.

The character and end of Judas is one of the most important and instructive things in history. It teaches us, 1. That Christ may employ wicked men for important purposes in his kingdom. See Notes on ver. 17. He does no violence to their freedom; suffers them to act as they please, but brings important ends out of their conduct. One of the most conclusive arguments for the pure character of Jesus Christ is drawn from the silent testimony of Judas. 2. The character of Judas was eminently base and wicked. He was influenced by one of the worst human passions; and yet he concealed it from all the apostles. It was remarkable that any man should have thought of making money in such a band of men; but avarice will show itself everywhere. 3. We see the effects of covetousness in the church. It led to the betraying of Jesus Christ, and to his death; and it has often betrayed the cause of pure religion since. There is no single human passion that has done so much evil in the church of God as this. It may be consistent with external decency and order, and in accordance with the principles on which the world acts, and which it approves, and it may therefore be indulged without disgrace, while open and acknowledged vices would expose their possessors to shame and ruin. And yet it paralyses and betrays religion probably more than any single propensity of man. 4. The character of an avaricious man in the church will be developed. Opportunities will occur when it will be seen and known by what principle he is influenced. So it was with Achan (Jos. vii. 21); so it was with Judas; and so it will be with all. Occasions will occur which will test the character, and show what manner of spirit a man is of. Every appeal to a man's benevolence, every call upon his charity, shows what spirit influences him — whether he is actuated by the love of gold, or by the love of Christ and his cause.

26. And they gave forth their lots. Some have supposed that this means they voted. But to this interpretation there are insuperable objections. 1. The word lots, κλήρον, is not used to express votes, or suffrage. 2. The expression "the lot fell upon" is not consistent with the notion of voting. It is commonly expressive of casting lots. 3. Casting lots was common among the Jews on important and difficult occasions, and it was natural that the apostles should resort to it in this. Thus David divided the priests by lot, 1 Ch. xxiv. 5. The land of Canaan was divided by lot, Nu. xxvi. 55; Jos. xv., xvi., xvii., &c. Jonathan, son of Saul, was detected as having violated his father's command and as bringing calamity on the Israelites by lot, 1 Sa. xiv. 41, 42. Achan was detected by lot, Jos. vii. 16-18.

In these instances the use of the lot was regarded as a solemn appeal to God for his direct interference in cases which they could not themselves decide. Pr. xvi. 33, "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." The choice of an apostle was an event of the same kind, and was regarded as a solemn appeal to God for his direction and guidance in a case which the apostles could not determine. The manner in which this was done is not certainly known. The common mode of casting lots was to write the names of the persons on pieces of stone, wood, &c., and put them in one urn, and the name of the office, portion, &c., on others. These were then placed in an urn with other pieces of stone, &c., which were blank. The names were then drawn at random, and also the other pieces, and this settled the case. The casting of a lot is determined by laws of nature as regularly as anything else. There is properly no chance in it. We do not know how a die may turn up; but this does not imply that it will turn up without any regard to rule, or at hap-hazard. We cannot trace the influences which may determine either this or that side to come up; but it is done by regular and proper laws, and according to the circumstances of position, force, &c., in which it is cast. Still, although it does not imply any special or miraculous interposition of Providence; though it may not be absolutely wrong, in cases which cannot otherwise be determined, to use the lot, yet it does not follow that it is proper often to make this appeal. Almost all cases of doubt can be determined more satisfactorily in some other way than by the lot. The habit of appealing to it engenders the love of hazards and of games; leads to heart-burnings, to jealousies, to envy, to strife, and to dishonesty. Still less does the example of the apostles authorize games of hazard, or lotteries, which are positively evil, and attended with ruinous consequences, apart from any inquiry about the lawfulness of the lot. They either originate in, or promote covetousness, neglect of regular industry, envy, jealousy, disappointment, dissipation, bankruptcy, falsehood, and despair. What is gained by one is lost by another, and both the gain and the loss promote some of the worst passions of man—boasting, triumph, self-confidence, indolence, dissipation, on the one hand; and envy, disappointment, sullenness, desire of revenge, remorse, and ruin on the other. God intended that man should live by sober toil. All departures from this great law of our social existence lead to ruin. ¶ Their lots. The lots which were to decide their case. They are called theirs, because they were to determine which of them should be called to the apostolic office. ¶ The lot fell. This is an expression applicable to casting lots, not to voting. ¶ He was numbered. By the casting of the lot, ovyxarevnois. This word is from ψῖφος—a calculus, or pebble, by which votes were given or lots were cast. It means, that by the result of the lot he was reckoned as an apostle. Nothing farther is related of Matthias in the New Testament. Where he laboured, and when and where he died, is unknown; nor is there any tradition on which reliance is to be placed. The election of Matthias, however, throws some light on the organization of the church. 1. He was chosen to fill the place vacated by Judas, and for a specific purpose, to be a witness of the resurrection of Christ. There is no mention of any other design. It was not to ordain men exclusively, or to rule over the churches, but to be a witness to an important fact. 2. There is no intimation that it was designed that there should be successors to the apostles in the peculiar duties of the apostolic office. The election was for a definite object, and was therefore temporary. It was to fill up the number originally appointed by Christ. When the purpose for which he was appointed was accomplished, the peculiar part of the apostolic work ceased of course. 3. There could be no succession in future ages to the peculiar apostolic office. They were to be witnesses of the work of Christ, and when the desired effect resulting from such a witnessing was accomplished, the office itself would cease. Hence there is no record that after this the church even pretended to appoint successors to the apostles, and hence no ministers of the gospel can now were all with one accord in one place.

2 And suddenly there came a pretend to be their successors in the peculiar and original design of the appointment of the apostles. 4. The only other apostle mentioned in the New Testament is the apostle Paul, not appointed as the successor of the others, not with any peculiar design except to be an apostle to the Gentiles, as the others were to the Jews, and appointed for the same end, to testify that Jesus Christ was alive, and that he had seen him after he rose, 1 Co. xv. 8; ix. 1, 15; Ac. xxii. 8, 9, 14, 15; xxvi. 17, 18. The ministers of religion, therefore, are successors of the apostles, not in their peculiar office as witnesses, but as preachers of the word, and as appointed to establish, to organize, to edify, and to rule the churches. The peculiar work of the apostleship ceased with their death. The ordinary work of the ministry, which they held in common with all others who preach the gospel, will continue to the end of time.

CHAPTER II.

1. And when the day of Pentecost. The word Pentecost is a Greek word signifying the fiftieth part of a thing, or the fiftieth in order. Among the Jews it was applied to one of their three great feasts which began on the fiftieth day after the Passover. This feast was reckoned from the sixteenth day of the month ABIB, or April, or the second day of the Passover. The paschal lamb was slain on the fourteenth of the month at even, Le. xxiii. 5; on the fifteenth of the month was a holy convocation—the proper beginning of the feast; on the sixteenth was the offering of the first-fruits of harvest, and from that day they were to reckon seven weeks, that is, forty-nine days, to the feast called the feast of Pentecost, so that it occurred fifty days after the first day of the feast of the Passover. This feast was also called the feast of weeks, from the circumstance that it followed a succession of weeks, Ex. xxxiv. 22; Nu. xxviii. 26; De. xvi. 10. It was also a harvest festival, and was accordingly called the feast of harvest; and it was for this reason that two loaves made of new meal were offered on this occasion as first-fruits, Le. xxiii. 17, 20; Nu. xxviii. 27-31. ¶ Was fully come. When the day had arrived. The word here used means literally to be completed, and as employed here refers, not to the day itself, but to the completion of the interval which was to pass before its arrival (Olshausen). See Lu. ix. 51. Comp. Mar. i. 15; Lu. i. 57. This fact is mentioned, that the time of the Pentecost had come, or fully arrived, to account for what is related afterward, that there were so many strangers and foreigners present. The promised influences of the Spirit were withheld until the greatest possible number of Jews should be present at Jerusalem at the same time, and thus an opportunity be afforded of preaching the gospel to vast multitudes in the very place where the Lord Jesus was crucified, and also an opportunity be afforded of sending the gospel by them into distant parts of the earth. ¶ They were all. Probably not only the apostles, but also the one hundred and twenty mentioned in ch. i. 15. ¶ With one accord. See ch. i. 14. It is probable that they had continued together until this time, and given themselves entirely to the business of devotion. ¶ In one place. Where this was cannot be known. Commentators have been much divided in their conjectures about it. Some have supposed that it was in the upper room mentioned in ch. i. 13; others that it was a room in the temple; others that it was in a synagogue; others that it was among the promiscuous multitude that assembled for devotion in the courts of the temple. See ver. 2. It has been supposed by many that this took place on the first day of the week; that is, on the Christian Sabbath. But there is a difficulty in establishing this. There was probably a difference among the Jews themselves as to the time of observing this festival. The law said that they should reckon seven Sabbaths; that is seven weeks, "from the morrow after the sabbath," Le. xxiii. 15. By this Sabbath the Pharisees understood the second day of the Passover, on whatever day of the week it occurred, which was kept as a day of holy convocation, and which might be called a Sabbath. But the Karaite Jews, or those who insisted on a literal interpretation of the Scriptures, maintained that by the Sabbath here was meant the usual Sabbath, the seventh day of the week. Consequently with them the day of Pentecost always occurred on the first day of the week; and if the apostles fell in with their views, the day was fully come on what is now the Christian Sabbath. But if the views of the Pharisees were followed, and the Lord Jesus had with them kept the Passover on Thursday, as many have supposed, then the day of Pentecost would have occurred on the Jewish Sabbath, that is, on Saturday (Kuinoel; Lightfoot). It is impossible to determine the truth on this subject. Nor is it of much importance. According to the later Jews, the day of Pentecost was kept also as a festival to commemorate the giving of the law on Mount Sinai; but no trace of this custom is to be found in the Old Testament.

2. And suddenly. It burst upon them at once. Though they were waiting for the descent of the Spirit, yet it is not probable that they expected it in this manner. As this was an important event, and one on which the welfare of the church depended, it was proper that the gift of the Holy Spirit should take place in some striking and sensible manner, so as to convince their own minds that the promise was fulfilled, and so as deeply to impress others with the greatness and importance of the event. ¶ There came a sound —  $\delta\chi\sigma$ . This word is applied to any noise or report. He. xii. 19, "The sound of a trumpet;" Lu. iv. 37, "The fame of him," &c. Comp. Mar. i. 28. ¶ From heaven. Appearing to rush down from the sky. It was fitted, therefore, to attract their attention no less from the direction from which it came, than on account of its suddenness and violence. Tempests blow commonly horizontally. This appeared to come from above; and this is all that is meant by the expression "from heaven." ¶ As of a rushing mighty wind. Literally, "as of a violent blast borne along" —  $\phi\epsilon\kappa\mu\eta\tau\mu$  — rushing along like a tempest. Such a wind is sometimes borne along so violently, and with such a noise, as to make it difficult even to hear the thunder in the gale. Such appears to have been the sound of this remarkable phenomenon. It does not appear that there was any wind, but the sudden sound was like such a sweeping tempest. It may be remarked, however, that the wind in the sacred Scriptures is often put as an emblem of a divine influence. See Jn. iii. 8. It is invisible, yet mighty, and thus represents the agency of the Holy Spirit. The same word in Hebrew ( $\text{רְוחַ}$ ) and in Greek ( $\pi\pi\mu\mu\alpha$ ) is used to denote both. The mighty power of God may be de-

noted also by the violence of a tempest, 1 Ki. xix. 11; Ps. xxix.; civ. 3; xviii. 10. In this place the sound as of a gale was emblematic of the mighty power of the Spirit, and of the effects which his coming would accomplish among men. ¶ And it filled. Not the wind filled, but the sound. This is evident (1) Because there is no affirmation that there was any wind. (2) The grammatical structure of the sentence will admit no other construction. The word "filled" has no nominative case but the word sound: "and suddenly there was a sound as of a wind, and (the sound) filled the house." In the Greek, the word "wind" is in the genitive or possessive case. It may be remarked here that this miracle was really far more striking than the common supposition makes it to have been. A tempest would have been terrific. A mighty wind might have alarmed them. But there would have been nothing unusual or remarkable in this. Such things often happened; and the thoughts would have been directed of course to the storm as an ordinary, though perhaps alarming occurrence. But when all was still; when there was no storm, no wind, no rain, no thunder, such a rushing sound must have arrested their attention, and directed all minds to a phenomenon so unusual and unaccountable. ¶ All the house. Some have supposed that this was a room in or near the temple. But as the temple is not expressly mentioned, this is improbable. It was probably the private dwelling mentioned in ch. i. 13. If it be said that such a dwelling could not contain so large a multitude as soon assembled, it may be replied that their houses had large central courts (See Notes on Mat. ix. 2), and that it is not affirmed that the transactions recorded in this chapter occurred in the room which they occupied. It is probable that it took place in the court and around the house.

3. And there appeared unto them. There were seen by them, or they saw. The fire was first seen by them in the room before it rested in the form of tongues on the heads of the disciples. Perhaps the fire appeared at first as scintillations or coruscations, until it became fixed on their heads. ¶ Tongues—γλῶσσαι. The word tongue occurs often in the Scriptures to denote the member which is the instrument of taste and speech, and also to denote language or speech itself. It is also used, as with us, to denote that which in shape resembles the tongue. Thus Jos. vii. 21, 24 (in Hebrew), "a tongue of gold," that is, a wedge of gold; Jos. xv. 5; xviii. 19; Is. xi. 15, "The tongue of the sea," that is, a bay or gulf. Thus also we say a tongue of land. The phrase "tongue of fire" occurs once, and once only, in the Old Testament (Is. v. 24), "Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble (Heb. tongue of fire), and the flame consumeth," &c. In this place the name tongue is given from the resemblance of a pointed flame to the human tongue. Anything long, narrow, and tending to a point is thus in the Hebrew called a tongue. The word here means, therefore, slender and pointed appearances of flame, perhaps at first moving irregularly around the room. ¶ Cloven. Divided, separated—διαμεριζόμενος—from the verb διαμερίζω, to divide, or distribute into parts. Mat. xxvii. 35, "They parted his garments;" Lu. xxii. 17, "Take this (the cup) and divide it among yourselves." Probably the common opinion is, that these tongues or flames were, each one of them, split, or forked, or cloven. But this is not the meaning of the expression. The idea is that they were separated or divided one from another; it was not one great flame, but was broken up, or cloven into many parts, and probably these parts were moving without order in the room. In the Syriac it is, "And there appeared unto them tongues which divided themselves like fire, and sat upon each of them." The old Ethiopic version reads it, "And fire, as it were, appeared to them and sat on them." ¶ And sat upon each of them. Or rested, in the form of a lambent or gentle flame, upon the head of each one. This showed that the prodigy was directed to them, and was a very significant emblem of the promised descent of the Holy Spirit. After the rushing sound and the appearance of the flames, they could not doubt that here was some remarkable interposition of God. The appearance of fire, or

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them:

flame, has always been regarded as a most striking emblem of the Divinity. Thus, Ex. iii. 2, 3, God is said to have manifested himself to Moses in a bush which was burning, yet not consumed. Thus, Ex. xix. 16–20, God descended on Mount Sinai in the midst of thunders, and lightnings, and smoke, and fire, striking emblems of his presence and power. See also Ge. xv. 17. Thus De. iv. 24, God is said to be “a consuming fire.” Comp. He. xii. 29. See Eze. i. 4; Ps. xviii. 12–14. The classic reader will also instantly recall the beautiful description in Virgil (Aeneid, b. ii. 680–691). Other instances of a similar prodigy are also recorded in profane writers (Pliny, H. N., ii. 37; Livy, i. 39). These appearances to the apostles were emblematic, doubtless, (1) Of the promised Holy Spirit, as a Spirit of purity and of power. The prediction of John the Baptist, “He shall baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire” (Mat. iii. 11) would probably be recalled at once to their memory. (2) The peculiar appearance, that of tongues, was an emblem of the diversity of languages which they were about to be able to utter. Any form of fire would have denoted the presence and power of God; but a form was adopted expressive of what was to occur. Thus any divine appearance or manifestation at the baptism of Jesus might have denoted the presence and approbation of God; but the form chosen was that of a dove descending—expressive of the mild and gentle virtues with which he was to be imbued. So in Eze. i. 4, any form of flame might have denoted the presence of God; but the appearance actually chosen was one that was strikingly emblematical of his providence. In the same way, the appearance here symbolized their peculiar endowments for entering on their great work—the ability to speak with new tongues.

4. Were all filled with the Holy Ghost. Were entirely under his sacred influence and power. See Notes on Lu. i. 41, 67. To be filled with anything is a phrase denoting that all the faculties are pervaded by it, engaged in it, or under its influence, Ac. iii. 10, “Were filled with wonder and amazement;” v. 17, “Filled with indignation;” xiii.

speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

45, “Filled with envy;” ver. 52, “Filled with joy and the Holy Ghost.” ¶ Began to speak with other tongues. In other languages than their native tongue. The languages which they spoke are specified in ver. 9–11. ¶ As the Spirit gave them utterance. As the Holy Spirit gave them power to speak. This language implies plainly that they were now endowed with a faculty of speaking languages which they had not before learned. Their native tongue was that of Galilee, a somewhat barbarous dialect of the common language used in Judea—the Syro-Chaldaic. It is possible that some of them might have been partially acquainted with the Greek and Latin, as each of those languages was spoken among the Jews to some extent; but there is not the slightest evidence that they were acquainted with the languages of the different nations afterward specified. Various attempts have been made to account for this remarkable phenomenon without supposing it to be a miracle. But the natural and obvious meaning of the passage is, that they were endowed by the supernatural power of the Holy Ghost with ability to speak foreign languages, and languages to them before unknown. It does not appear that each one had the power of speaking all the languages which are specified (ver. 9–11), but that this ability was among them, and that together they could speak these languages, probably some one and some another. The following remarks may perhaps throw some light on this remarkable occurrence. (1) It was predicted in the Old Testament that what is here stated would occur in the times of the Messiah. Thus, in Is. xxviii. 11, “With . . . another tongue will he speak unto this people.” Comp. I Co. xiv. 21, where this passage is expressly applied to the power of speaking foreign languages under the gospel. (2) It was promised by the Lord Jesus that they should have this power, Mar. xvi. 17, “These signs shall follow them that believe . . . they shall speak with new tongues.” (3) The ability to do it existed extensively and long in the church, I Co. xii. 10, 11, “To another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit;” ver.

5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

28, "God hath set in the church . . . diversities of tongues" Comp. also ver. 30, and ch. xiv. 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 13, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 27, 39. From this it appears that the power was well known in the church, and was not confined to the apostles. This also may show that in the case in the Acts, the ability to do this was conferred on other members of the church as well as the apostles. (4) It was very important that they should be endowed with this power in their great work. They were going forth to preach to all nations; and though the Greek and Roman tongues were extensively spoken, yet their use was not universal, nor is it known that the apostles were skilled in those languages. To preach to all nations, it was indispensable that they should be able to understand their language. And in order that the gospel might be rapidly propagated through the earth, it was necessary that they should be endowed with ability to do this without the slow process of being compelled to learn them. It will contribute to illustrate this to remark that one of the principal hindrances in the spread of the gospel now arises from the inability to speak the languages of the nations of the earth, and that among missionaries of modern times a long time is necessarily spent in acquiring the language of a people before they are prepared to preach to them. (5) One design was to establish the gospel by means of miracles. Yet no miracle could be more impressive than the power of conveying their sentiments at once in all the languages of the earth. When it is remembered what a slow and toilsome process it is to learn a foreign tongue, this would be regarded by the heathen as one of the most striking miracles which could be wrought, 1 Co. xiv. 22, 24, 25. (6) The reality and certainty of this miracle is strongly attested by the early triumphs of the gospel. That the gospel was early spread over all the world, and that, too, by the apostles of Jesus Christ, is the clear testimony of all history. They preached it in Arabia, Greece, Syria, Asia, Persia, Africa, and Rome. Yet how could this have been effected without a miraculous power of speaking the languages used in all those places?

Now, it requires the toil of many years to speak in foreign languages; and the recorded success of the gospel is one of the most striking attestations to the fact of the miracle that could be conceived. (7) The corruption of language was one of the most decided effects of sin, and the source of endless embarrassments and difficulties, Gen. xi. It is not to be regarded as wonderful that one of the effects of the plan of recovering men should be to show the power of God over all evil, and thus to furnish striking evidence that the gospel could meet all the crimes and calamities of men. And we may add, (8) That from this we see the necessity now of training men who are to be missionaries to other lands. The gift of miracles is withdrawn. The apostles, by that miracle, simply were empowered to speak other languages. That power must still be had if the gospel is to be preached. But it is now to be obtained, not by miracle, but by slow and careful study and toil. If possessed, men must be taught it. And as the church is bound (Mat. xxviii. 19) to send the gospel to all nations, so it is bound to provide that the teachers who shall be sent forth shall be qualified for their work. Hence one of the reasons of the importance of training men for the holy ministry.

5. There were dwelling at Jerusalem. The word rendered dwelling—κατοικοῦντες—properly means to have a fixed and permanent habitation, in distinction from another word—παρεισοῦντες—which means to have a temporary and transient residence in a place. But it is not always confined to this signification; and it is not improbable that many wealthy foreign Jews had a permanent residence in Jerusalem for the convenience of being near the temple. This was the more probable, as about that time the Messiah was expected to appear, Mat. ii. ¶ Jews. Jews by birth; of Jewish descent and religion. ¶ Devout men—ἀριστεροὶ ιερατεῖς. Literally, men of cautious and circumspect lives, or who lived in a prudent manner. The term is then applied to men who were cautious about offending God; who were careful to observe his commandments. It is hence a general expression to denote pious or religious men, Ac. viii. 2,

"And devout men carried Stephen to his burial;" Lu. ii. 25, "And the same man (Simeon) was just, and devout." The word devout means "yielding a solemn and reverential attention to God in religious exercises, particularly in prayer, pious, sincere, solemn" (Webster), and very well expresses the force of the original. ¶ Out of every nation under heaven. A general expression meaning from all parts of the earth. The countries from which they came are more particularly specified in ver. 9-11. The Jews at that time were scattered into almost all nations, and in all places had synagogues. See Notes on Jn. vii. 35; Ja. i. 1; 1 Pe. i. 1. Still they would naturally desire to be present as often as possible at the great feasts of the nation in Jerusalem. Many would seek a residence there for the convenience of being present at the religious solemnities. Many who came up to the feast of the Passover would remain to the feast of the Pentecost. The consequence of this would be, that on such occasions the city would be full of strangers. We are told that when Titus besieged Jerusalem, an event which occurred at about the time of the feast of the Passover, there were no less than three millions of people in the city. Josephus also mentions an instance in which great multitudes of Jews from other nations were present at the feast of Pentecost (Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. iii. § 1). What is here stated as occurring at that time is true of the inhabitants of Jerusalem—four or five thousand in number—who reside there now. A large portion of them are from abroad. Prof. Hackett (Illustrations of Scripture, p. 228, 229) says of them, "Few of them, comparatively, are natives of the country. The majority of them are aged persons, who repair to the holy city to spend the remainder of their days and secure the privilege of being buried in the valley of the Kedron, which, as their traditions assert, is to be the scene of the last judgment. At the Jews' Wailing Place I met one day a venerable man, bowed with age, apparently beyond fourscore, who told me that, in obedience to his sense of duty, he had forsaken his children and home in England, and had come, unattended by any friend, to die and make his grave at Jerusalem. Others of them are those who come hither to fulfil a vow, or acquire the merit of a pilgrimage, and then return to the countries where they reside. Among them may be found representatives from almost every land, though the Spanish, Polish, and German Jews compose the greater number. Like their brethren in other parts of Palestine, except a few in some commercial places, they are wretchedly poor, and live chiefly on alms contributed by their countrymen in Europe and America. They devote most of their time to holy employments, as they are called; they frequent the synagogues, roam over the country to visit places memorable in their ancient history, and read assiduously the Old Testament and the writings of their Rabbis. Those of them who make any pretensions to learning understand the Hebrew and Rabbinic, and speak as their vernacular tongue the language of the country where they formerly lived, or whence their fathers emigrated."

6. When this was noised abroad. When the rumour of this remarkable transaction was spread, as it naturally would be. ¶ Were confounded—συντιθην. The word here used means literally to pour together, hence to confound, confuse. It is used (a) of an assembly or multitude thrown into confusion, Ac. xxi. 27; (b) of the mind as perplexed or confounded, as in disputation, Ac. ix. 22; and (c) of persons in amazement or consternation, as in this place. They did not understand this; they could not account for it. ¶ Every man heard them speak, &c. Though the multitude spoke different tongues, yet they now heard Galileans use the language which they had learned in foreign nations. ¶ His own language. His own dialect—διάλικτος. His own idiom, whether it was a foreign language, or whether it was a modification of the Hebrew. The word may mean either; but it is probable that the foreign Jews would greatly modify the Hebrew, or conform almost entirely to the language spoken in the country where they lived. We may remark here that this effect of the descent of the Holy Ghost was not peculiar to that time. A work of grace on the hearts of men in a revival of religion will always be noised abroad. A multitude will come together, and God often, as he did here, makes use of this motive to bring them under the influence of religion. Curiosity was the motive here, and it was the occasion of their being brought under the power of truth, and of their conversion. In thousands of cases this has occurred since. The effect of what they saw was to confound them, to astonish them, and to throw them into deep perplexity. They made no complaint at first of the irregularity of what was done, but were all amazed and overwhelmed. So the effect of a revival of religion is often to convince the multitude that it is indeed a work of the Holy One; to amaze them by the display of his power; and to silence opposition and cavil by the manifest presence and the power of God. A few afterward began to cavil (ver. 13), as some will always do in a revival; but the mass were convinced, as will be the case always, that this was a mighty display of the power of God.

7. Galileans. Inhabitants of Galilee. It was remarkable that they should speak in this manner, because, (1) They were ignorant, rude, and uncivilized, Jn. i. 46. Hence the term Galilean was used as an expression of the deepest reproach and contempt, Mar. xiv. 70; Jn. vii. 52. (2) Their dialect was proverbially barbarous and corrupt, Mar. xiv. 70; Mat. xxvi. 73. They were regarded as an outlandish people, unacquainted with other nations and languages, and hence the amazement that they could address them in the refined language of other people. Their native ignorance was the occasion of making the miracle more striking. The native weakness of Christian ministers makes the grace and glory of God more remarkable in the success of the gospel. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us," 2 Co. iv. 7. The success which God often grants to those who are of slender endowments and of little learning, though blessed with an humble and pious heart, is often amazing to the men of the world. God has "chosen the foolish

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in things of the world to confound the wise," 1 Co. i. 27. This should teach us that no talent or attainment is too humble to be employed for mighty purposes, in its proper sphere, in the kingdom of Christ; and that pious effort may accomplish much, and then burn in heaven with increasing lustre for ever, while pride, and learning, and talent may blaze uselessly among men, and then be extinguished in eternal night.

8. Wherein we were born. That is, as we say, in our native language; that which is spoken where we were born.

9. Parthians, &c. To show the surprising extent and power of this miracle, Luke enumerates the different nations that were represented then at Jerusalem. In this way the number of languages which the apostles spoke, and the extent of the miracle, can be ascertained. The enumeration of these nations begins at the east and proceeds to the west. Parthians mean those Jews or proselytes who dwelt in Parthia. This country was a part of Persia, and was situated between the Persian Gulf and the Tigris on the west, and the river Indus on the east. The term Parthia originally referred to a small mountainous district lying to the north-east of Media. Afterward it came to be applied to the great Parthian kingdom into which this province expanded. Parthia proper, or Ancient Parthia, lying between Asia and Hyrcaania, the residence of a rude and poor tribe, and traversed by bare mountains, woods, and sandy steppes, formed a part of the great Persian monarchy. Its inhabitants were of Scythian origin. About 256 years before Christ, Arsaces rose against the Syro-Macedonian power, and commenced a new dynasty in her own person, designated by the title of Arsacidæ. This was the beginning of the great Parthian empire, which extended itself in the early days of Christianity over all the provinces of what had been the Persian kingdom, having the Euphrates for its western boundary, by which it was separated from the dominions of Rome (Kitto's Encyclop.). Their empire lasted about four hundred years. The Parthians were much distinguished for their manner of fighting. They usually fought on horseback, and when appearing to retreat, discharged their arrows with great execution behind them. They long disputed the empire of the East with the Romans. The language spoken there was that of Persia, and in ancient writers Parthia and Persia often mean the same country. ¶ Medes. Inhabitants of Media. This country was situated westward and southward of the Caspian Sea, between 35° and 40° of north latitude. It had Persia on the south and Armenia on the west. It was about the size of Spain, and was one of the richest parts of Asia. In the Scriptures it is called Mudai, Ge. x. 2. The Medes are often mentioned, frequently in connection with the Persians, with whom they were often connected under the same government, 2 Ki. xvii. 6; xviii. 11; Es. i. 3, 14, 18, 19; Je. xxv. 25; Da. v. 28; vi. 8; viii. 20; ix. 1. The language spoken here was also that of Persia. ¶ Elamites. Elam is often mentioned in the Old Testament. The nation was descended from Elam, the son of Shem, Ge. x. 22. It is mentioned as being in alliance with Amraphel, the king of Shinar, and Arioch, king of Ellasar, and Tidal, king of nations, Ge. xiv. 1. Of these nations in alliance, Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, was the chief, Ge. xiv. 4. See also Ezr. ii. 7; viii. 7; Ne. vii. 12, 34; Is. xi. 11; xxi. 2; xxii. 6, &c. They are mentioned as a part of the Persian empire, and Daniel is said to have resided at Shushan, which is in the province of Elam, Da. viii. 2. The Greeks and Romans gave to this country the name of Elymias. It is now called Kusistan. It was bounded by Persia on the east, by Media on the north, by Babylon on the west, and by the Persian Gulf on the south. The Elamites were a warlike people, and celebrated for the use of the bow, Is. xxii. 6; Je. xlvi. 35. The language of this people was of course the Persian. Its capital, Shusan, called by the Greeks Susa, was much celebrated. It is said to have been fifteen miles in circumference, and was adorned with the celebrated palace of Ahasuerus. The inhabitants still pretend to show there the tomb of the prophet Daniel. ¶ Mesopotamia. This name, which is Greek,

Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, 10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in

Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, signifies between the rivers; that is, the region lying between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris. In Hebrew it was called Aram-Naharaim; that is, Aram, or Syria, of the two rivers. It was also called Padan Aram, the plain of Syria. In this region were situated some important places mentioned in the Bible: Ur of the Chaldees, the birthplace of Abraham (Ge. xi. 27, 28); Haran, where Terah stopped on his journey and died (Ge. xi. 31, 32); Charchemish (2 Ch. xxxv. 20); Hena (2 Ki. xix. 13); Sepharvaim (2 Ki. xvii. 24). This region, known as Mesopotamia, extended between the two rivers from their sources to Babylon on the south. It had on the north Armenia, on the west Syria, on the east Persia, and on the south Babylonia. It was an extensive, level, and fertile country. The language spoken here was probably the Syriac, with perhaps a mixture of the Chaldee. ¶ In Judea. This expression has greatly perplexed commentators. It has been thought difficult to see why Judea should be mentioned, as if it were a matter of surprise that they could speak in this language. Some have supposed that there is an error in the manuscripts, and have proposed to read Armenia, or India, or Lydia, or Idumea, &c. But all this has been without any authority. Others have supposed that the language of Galilee was so different from that of the other parts of Judea as to render it remarkable that they could speak that dialect. But this is an idle supposition. This is one of the many instances in which commentators have perplexed themselves to very little purpose. Luke recorded this as any other historian would have done. In running over the languages which they spoke, he enumerated this as a matter of course; not that it was remarkable simply that they should speak the language of Judea, but that they should speak so many, meaning about the same by it as if he had said they spoke every language in the world. It is as if a similar miracle were to occur at this time among an assembly of native Englishmen and foreigners. In describing it, nothing would be more natural than to say they spoke French, and German, and Spanish, and English, and Italian, &c. In this there would be nothing remarkable except that they spoke so many languages. ¶ Cappadocia. This was a region of Asia Minor, and was bounded on the east by the Euphrates and Armenia, on the north by Pontus, west by Phrygia and Galatia, and south by Mount Taurus, beyond which are Cilicia and Syria. The language which was spoken here is not certainly known. It was probably, however, a mixed dialect, made up of Greek and Syriac, perhaps the same as that of their neighbours, the Lycaonians, Ac. xiv. 11. This place was formerly celebrated for iniquity, and is mentioned in Greek writers as one of the three eminently wicked places whose name began with C. The others were Crete (comp. Tit. i. 12) and Cilicia. After its conversion to the Christian religion, however, it produced many eminent men, among whom were Gregory Nyssen and Basil the Great. It was one of the places to which Peter directed an epistle, 1 Pe. i. 1. ¶ In Pontus. This was another province of Asia Minor, and was situated north of Cappadocia, and was bounded west by Paphlagonia. Pontus and Cappadocia under the Romans constituted one province. This was one of the places to which the apostle Peter directed his epistle, 1 Pe. i. 1. This was the birthplace of Aquila, one of the companions of Paul, Ac. xviii. 2, 18, 26; Ro. xvi. 3; 1 Co. xvi. 19; 2 Ti. iv. 19. ¶ And Asia. Pontus and Cappadocia, &c., were parts of Asia. But the word Asia is doubtless used here to denote the regions or provinces west of these, which are not particularly enumerated. Thus it is used Ac. vi. 9; xvi. 6; xx. 16. It probably embraced Mysia, Aeolis, Ionia, Caria, and Lydia. "The term probably denoted not so much a definite region as a jurisdiction, the limits of which varied from time to time, according to the plan of government which the Romans adopted for their Asiatic provinces" (Prof. Hackett, in loco). The capital of this region was Ephesus. See also 1 Pe. i. 1. This region was frequently called Ionia, and was afterward the seat of the seven churches in Asia, Re. i. 4.

10. Phrygia, and Pamphylia. These were also two provinces of Asia Minor. Phrygia was surrounded by Galatia, Cappadocia, and Pisidia. Pamphylia was on the Mediterranean, and was bounded north by Pisidia. The language of all these places was doubtless the Greek, more or less pure. ¶ In Egypt. This was that extensive country, well known, on the south of the Mediterranean, watered by the Nile. It extends 600 miles from north to south, and from 100 to 120 east and west. The language used there was the Coptic. At present the Arabic is spoken. Vast numbers of Jews dwelt in Egypt, and many from that country would be present at the great feasts at Jerusalem. In this country the first translation of the Old Testament was made, which is now called the Septuagint. ¶ In the parts of Libya. Libya is a general name for Africa. It properly denoted the region which was near to Egypt; but the Greeks gave the name to all Africa. ¶ About Cyrene. This was a region about 500 miles west of Alexandria in Egypt. It was also called Pentapolis, because there were in it five celebrated cities. This country now belongs to Tripoli. Great numbers of Jews resided here. A Jew of this place, Simon by name, was compelled to bear our Saviour's cross after him to the place of crucifixion, Mat. xxvii. 32; Lu. xxiii. 26. Some of the Cyrenians are mentioned among the earliest Christians, Ac. xi. 20; xiii. 1. The language which they spoke is not certainly known. ¶ Strangers of Rome. This literally means "Romans dwelling or tarrying," that is, at Jerusalem. It may mean either that they were permanently fixed, or only tarrying at Jerusalem—οἱ ξεῖνοι ὑπὸ Ρωμαίων. They were doubtless Jews who had taken up their residence in Italy, and had come to Jerusalem to attend the great feasts. The language which they spoke was the Latin. Great numbers of Jews were at that time dwelling at Rome. Josephus says that there were eight synagogues there. The Jews are often mentioned by the Roman writers. There was a Jewish colony across the Tiber from Rome. When Judea was conquered, about sixty years before Christ, vast numbers of Jews were taken captive and carried to Rome. But they had much difficulty in managing them as slaves. They pertinaciously adhered to their religion, observed the Sabbath, and refused to join in the idolatrous rites of the Romans. Hence they were freed, and lived by themselves across the Tiber. ¶ Jews. Native-born Jews, or descendants of Jewish families. ¶ Proselytes. Those who had been converted to the Jewish religion from among the Gentiles. The great zeal of the Jews to 11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they were all amazed, make proselytes is mentioned by our Saviour as one of the peculiar characteristics of the Pharisees, Mat. xxiii. 15. Some have supposed that the expression Jews and proselytes refers to the Romans only. But it is more probable that reference is made to all those that are mentioned. It has the appearance of a hurried enumeration; and the writer evidently mentioned them as they occurred to his mind, just as we would in giving a rapid account of so many different nations.

11. Cretes. Crete, now called Candia, is an island in the Mediterranean, about 200 miles in length and 50 in breadth, about 500 miles south-west of Constantinople, and about the same distance west of Syria or Palestine. The climate is mild and delightful, the sky unclouded and serene. By some this island is supposed to be the Caphtor of the Hebrews, Ge. x. 14. It is mentioned in the Acts as the place touched at by Paul, Ac. xxvii. 7, 8, 13. This was the residence of Titus, who was left there by Paul to set in order the things that were wanting, &c., Tit. i. 5. The Cretans among the Greeks were famous for deceit and falsehood. See Notes on Tit. i. 12, 13. The language spoken there was probably the Greek. ¶ Arabians. Arabia is the great peninsula which is bounded north by part of Syria, east by the Euphrates and the Persian Gulf, south by the Indian Ocean, and west by the Red Sea. It is often mentioned in the Scriptures; and there were doubtless there many Jews. The language spoken there was the Arabic. ¶ In our tongues. The languages spoken by the apostles could not have been less than seven or eight, besides different dialects of the same languages. It is not certain that the Jews present from foreign nations spoke those languages perfectly, but they had doubtless so used them as to make them the common tongue in which they conversed. No miracle could be more decided than this. There was no way in which the apostles could impose on them, and make them suppose they spoke foreign languages, if they really did not; for these foreigners were abundantly able to determine that. It may be remarked that this miracle had most important effects besides that witnessed on the day of Pentecost. The gospel would be carried by those who were converted to all these places, and the way would be prepared for the labours of the apostles there. Accordingly, most of these places became afterward celebrated by the establishment of Christian churches and the conversion of great multitudes to the Christian faith. ¶ The wonderful works of God—τὰ μεγάλα τῶν Θεοῦ. The great things of God; that is, the great things that God had done in the gift of his Son; in raising him from the dead; in his miracles, ascension, &c. Comp. Lu. i. 49; Ps. lxxi. 19; xxvi. 7; lxvi. 3; xcii. 5; civ. 24; &c.

12. Were in doubt. This expression, διηρέοντες, denotes a state of hesitancy or anxiety about an event. It is applied to those who are travelling, and are ignorant of the way, or who hesitate about the road. They were all astonished at this; they did not know how to understand it or explain it, until some of them supposed that it was merely the effect of new wine.

13. Others, mocking, said. The word rendered “mocking” means to cavil, to deride. It occurs in the New Testament but in one other place: Ac. xvii. 32, “And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked.” This was an effect that was not confined to the day of Pentecost. There has seldom been a revival of religion, a remarkable manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit, that has not given occasion for profane mockery and merriment. One characteristic of wicked men is to deride those things which are done to promote their own welfare. Hence the Saviour himself was mocked; and the efforts of Christians to save others have been the subject of derision. Derision, and mockery, and a jeer, have been far more effectual in deterring men from becoming Christians than any attempts at sober argument. God will treat men as they treat him, Ps. xviii. 26. And hence he says to the wicked, “Because I have called and ye refused . . . but ye have set at naught my counsel; I

14 But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and also will laugh at your calamity, I will mock when your fear cometh," Pr. i. 24-26. ¶ These men are full of new wine. These men are drunk. In times of a revival of religion men will have some way of accounting for the effects of the gospel, and the way is commonly about as wise and rational as the one adopted on this occasion. "To escape the absurdity of acknowledging their own ignorance, they adopted the theory that strong drink can teach languages" (Dr. M'Lelland). In modern times it has been usual to denominate such scenes fanaticism, or wildfire, or enthusiasm. When men fail in argument, it is common to attempt to confute a doctrine or bring reproach upon a transaction by "giving it an ill name." Hence the names Puritan, Quaker, Methodist, &c., were at first given in derision, to account for some remarkable effect of religion on the world. Comp. Mat. xi. 19; Jn. vii. 20; viii. 48. And thus men endeavour to trace revivals to ungoverned and heated passions, and they are regarded as the mere offspring of fanaticism. The friends of revivals should not be discouraged by this; but they should remember that the very first revival of religion was by many supposed to be the effect of a drunken frolic. ¶ New wine—γλύκων. This word properly means the juice of the grape which distils before a pressure is applied, and called must. It was sweet wine, and hence the word in Greek meaning sweet was given to it. The ancients, it is said, had the art of preserving their new wine with the peculiar flavour before fermentation for a considerable time, and were in the habit of drinking it in the morning. See Hor. Sat., b. ii. iv. One of the methods in use among the Greeks and Romans of doing this was the following: An amphora or jar was taken and coated with pitch within and without, and was then filled with the juice which flowed from the grapes before they had been fully trodden, and was then corked so as to be air-tight. It was then immersed in a tank of cold water or buried in the sand, and allowed to remain six weeks or two months. The contents after this process were found to remain unchanged for a year, and hence the name αει γλύκων—always sweet. The process was not much unlike that which is so common now of preserving fruits and vegetables. Sweet wine, which was probably the same as that mentioned here, is also mentioned in the Old Testament, Is. xl ix. 26; Am. ix. 13.

14. But Peter. This was in accordance with the natural temperament of Peter. He was bold, forward, ardent; and he rose now to defend the apostles of Jesus Christ, and Christ himself, from an injurious charge. Not daunted by ridicule or opposition, he felt that now was the time for preaching the gospel to the crowd that had been assembled by curiosity. No ridicule should deter Christians from an honest avowal of their opinions, and a defence of the operations of the Holy Spirit. ¶ With the eleven. Matthias was now one of the apostles, and now appeared as one of the witnesses for the truth. They probably all arose, and took part in the discourse. Possibly Peter began to discourse, and either all spoke together in different languages, or one succeeded another. ¶ Ye men of Judea. Men who are Jews; that is, Jews by birth. The original does not mean that they were permanent dwellers in Judea, but that they were Jews, of Jewish families. Literally, "men, Jews." ¶ And all ye that dwell, &c. All others besides native-born Jews, whether proselytes or strangers, who were abiding at Jerusalem. This comprised, of course, the whole assembly, and was a respectful and conciliatory introduction to his discourse. Though they had mocked them, yet he treated them with respect, and did not render railing for railing (1 Pe. iii. 9), but sought to convince them of their error. ¶ Be this known, &c. Peter did not intimate that this was a doubtful matter, or one that could not be explained. His address was respectful, yet firm. He proceeded calmly to show them their error. When the enemies of religion deride us or the gospel, we should answer them kindly and respectfully, yet firmly. We should reason with them coolly, and convince them of their error, Pr. xv. 1. In this case Peter acted on the principle which he afterward enjoined on all, 1 Pe. iii. 15, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, 'seeing it is but the third hour of the day.

and fear." The design of Peter was to vindicate the conduct of the apostles from the reproach of intoxication; to show that this could be no other than the work of God; and to make an application of the truth to his hearers. This he did, (1) By showing that this could not be reasonably supposed to be the effect of new wine, ver. 15. (2) By showing that what had occurred had been expressly predicted in the writings of the Jewish prophets, ver. 16-21. (3) By a calm argument, proving the resurrection and ascension of Christ, and showing that this also was in accordance with the Jewish Scriptures, ver. 22-35. We are not to suppose that this was the whole of Peter's discourse, but that these were the topics on which he insisted, and the main points of his argument.

15. For these are not drunken, &c. The word these here includes Peter himself, as well as the others. The charge doubtless extended to all. ¶ The third hour of the day. The Jews divided their day into twelve equal parts, reckoning from sunrise to sunset. Of course the hours were longer in summer than in winter. The third hour would answer to our nine o'clock in the morning. The reasons why it was so improbable that they would be drunk at that time were the following: (1) It was the hour of morning worship, or sacrifice. It was highly improbable that, at an hour usually devoted to public worship, they would be intoxicated. (2) It was not usual for even drunkards to become drunk in the daytime, 1 Th. v. 7, "They that be drunken are drunken in the night." (3) The charge was, that they had become drunk with wine. Ardent spirits, or alcohol, that curse of our times, was unknown. It was very improbable that so much of the weak wine commonly used in Judea should have been taken at that early hour as to produce intoxication. (4) It was a regular practice with the Jews not to eat or drink anything until after the third hour of the day, especially on the Sabbath, and on all festival occasions. Sometimes this abstinence was main-

16 But this is that which was spoken by the prophet **Joel:*

17 And it shall come to pass in the last days, (saith God,) "I will pour out of my Spirit upon all tained until noon. So universal was this custom, that the apostle could appeal to it with confidence, as a full refutation of the charge of drunkenness at that hour. Even the intemperate were not accustomed to drink before that hour. The following testimonies on this subject from Jewish writers are from Lightfoot: "This was the custom of pious people in ancient times, that each one should offer his morning prayers with additions in the synagogue, and then return home and take refreshment" (Maimonides, Shabb., ch. 10). "They remained in the synagogue until the sixth hour and a half, and then each one offered the prayer of the Mincha before he returned home, and then he ate." "The fourth is the hour of repast, when all eat." One of the Jewish writers says that the difference between thieves and honest men might be known by the fact that the former might be seen in the morning at the fourth hour eating and sleeping, and holding a cup in his hand. But for those who made pretensions to religion, as the apostles did, such a thing was altogether improbable.

16. This is that. This is the fulfilment of that, or this was predicted. This was the second part of Peter's argument, to show that this was in accordance with the predictions in their own Scriptures. ¶ By the prophet Joel. Joel ii. 28-32. This is not quoted literally, either from the Hebrew or the Septuagint. The substance, however, is preserved.

17. It shall come to pass. It shall happen, or shall occur. ¶ In the last days. Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, after these things, or afterward. The expression the last days, however, occurs frequently in the Old Testament: Ge. xlix. 1, Jacob called his sons, that he might tell them what should happen to them in the last days, that is, in future times—Heb. in after times; Mi. iv. 1, "In the last days (Heb. in after times) the mountain of the Lord's house," &c.; Is. ii. 2, "In the last days the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the tops of the mountains," &c. The young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams;

expression then properly denoted the future times in general. But, as the coming of the Messiah was to the eye of a Jew the most important event in the coming ages—the great, glorious, and crowning scene in all the vast futurity, the phrase came to be regarded as properly expressive of that. It stood in opposition to the usual denomination of earlier times. It was a phrase in contrast with the days of the patriarchs, the kings, the prophets, &c. The last days, or the closing period of the world, were the days of the Messiah. It does not appear from this, and it certainly is not implied in the expression, that they supposed the world would then come to an end. Their views were just the contrary. They anticipated a long and glorious time under the dominion of the Messiah, and to this expectation they were led by the promise that his kingdom should be for ever; that of the increase of his government there should be no end, &c. This expression was understood by the writers of the New Testament as referring undoubtedly to the times of the gospel. And hence they often used it as denoting that the time of the expected Messiah had come, but not to imply that the world was drawing near to an end: He. i. 2, “God hath spoken in these last days by his Son;” 1 Pe. i. 20, “Was manifested in these last times for you;” 2 Pe. iii. 3; 1 Pe. i. 5; 1 Jn. ii. 18, “Little children, it is the last time,” &c.; Jude 18. The expression the last day is applied by our Saviour to the resurrection and the day of judgment, Jn. vi. 39, 40, 44, 45; xi. 24; xii. 48. Here the expression means simply in those future times, when the Messiah shall have come. ¶ I will pour out of my Spirit. The expression in Hebrew is, “I will pour out my Spirit.” The word pour is commonly applied to water or to blood, to pour it out, or to shed it, Is. lvii. 6; to tears, to pour them out, that is, to weep, &c., Ps. xlvi. 4; 1 Sa. i. 15. It is applied to water, to wine, or to blood, in the New Testament, Mat. ix. 17; Re. xvi. 1; Ac. xxii. 20, “The blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed.” It conveys also the idea of communicating largely or freely, as water is poured freely from a fountain, Tit. iii. 5, 6, “The renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly.” Thus Job xxxvi. 27, “They (the clouds) pour down rain according to the vapour thereof;” Is. xliv. 3, “I will pour water on him that is thirsty;” xlvi. 8, “Let the skies pour down righteousness;” Mal. iii. 10, “I will pour you out a blessing.” It is also applied to fury and anger, when God intends to say that he will not spare, but will signally punish, Ps. lxix. 24; Je. x. 25. It is not unfrequently applied to the Spirit, Pr. i. 23; Is. xliv. 3; Zec. xii. 10. As thus used it means that he will bestow large measures of spiritual influences. As the Spirit renews and sanctifies men, so to pour out the Spirit is to grant freely his influences to renew and sanctify the soul. ¶ My Spirit. The Spirit here denotes the third person of the Trinity, promised by the Saviour, and sent to finish his work, and apply it to men. The Holy Spirit is regarded as the source or conveyer of all the blessings which Christians experience. Hence he renews the heart, Jn. iii. 5, 6. He is the source of all proper feelings and principles in Christians, or he produces the Christian graces, Ga. v. 22-25; Tit. iii. 5-7. The spread and success of the gospel is attributed to him, Is. xxxii. 15, 16. Miraculous gifts are traced to him, especially the various gifts with which the early Christians were endowed, 1 Co. xii. 4-10. The promise that he would pour out his Spirit means that he would, in the time of the Messiah, impart a large measure of those influences which it was his peculiar province to communicate to men. A part of them were communicated on the day of Pentecost, in the miraculous endowment of the power of speaking foreign languages, in the wisdom of the apostles, and in the conversion of the three thousand. ¶ Upon all flesh. The word flesh here means persons, or men. See Notes on Ro. i. 3. The word all here does not mean every individual, but every class or rank of men. It is to be limited to the cases specified immediately. The influences were not to be confined to any one class, but were to be communicated to all kinds of persons—old men, youth, servants, &c. Comp. 1 Ti. ii. 1-4. ¶ And your sons and your daughters. Your children.

It would seem that females shared in the remarkable influences of the Holy Spirit. Philip the Evangelist had four daughters which did prophesy, Ac. xxi. 9. It is probable also that the females of the church of Corinth partook of this gift, though they were forbidden to exercise it in public, 1 Co. xiv. 34. The office of prophesying, whatever was meant by that, was not confined to the men among the Jews: Ex. xv. 20, "Miriam, the prophetess, took a timbrel," &c.; Ju. iv. 4, "Deborah, a prophetess, judged Israel;" 2 Ki. xxii. 14. See also Lu. ii. 36, "There was one Anna, a prophetess," &c. ¶ Shall prophesy. The word prophesy is used in a great variety of senses. (1) It means to predict or foretell future events, Mat. xi. 18; xv. 7. (2) To divine, to conjecture, to declare as a prophet might, Mat. xxvi. 68, "Prophesy who smote thee." (3) To celebrate the praises of God, being under a divine influence, Lu. i. 67. This seems to have been a considerable part of the employment in the ancient schools of the prophets, 1 Sa. x. 5; xix. 20; xxx. 15. (4) To teach—as no small part of the office of the prophets was to teach the doctrines of religion, Mat. vii. 22, "Have we not prophesied in thy name?" (5) It denotes, then, in general, to speak under a divine influence, whether in foretelling future events, in celebrating the praises of God, in instructing others in the duties of religion, or in speaking foreign languages under that influence. In this last sense the word is used in the New Testament, to denote those who were miraculously endowed with the power of speaking foreign languages, Ac. xix. 6. The word is also used to denote teaching, or speaking in intelligible language, in opposition to speaking a foreign tongue, 1 Co. xiv. 1-5. In this place it means that they would speak under a divine influence, and is specially applied to the power of speaking in a foreign tongue. ¶ Your old men shall see visions. The will of God in former times was communicated to the prophets in various ways. One was by visions, and hence one of the most usual names of the prophets was seers. The name seer was first given to that class of men, and was superseded by the name prophet, 1 Sa. ix. 9, "He that is now called a prophet was beforetime called a seer;" ix. 11, 18, 19; 2 Sa. xxiv. 11; xxix. 29, &c. This name was given from the manner in which the divine will was communicated, which seems to have been by throwing the prophet into an ecstasy, and then by causing the vision, or the appearance of the objects or events to pass before the mind. The prophet looked upon the passing scene, the often splendid diorama as it actually occurred, and recorded it as it appeared to his mind. Hence he recorded rather the succession of images than the times in which they would occur. These visions occurred sometimes when they were asleep, and sometimes during a prophetic ecstasy, Da. ii. 28; vii. 1, 2, 15; viii. 2; Eze. xi. 24; Ge. xv. 1; Nu. xii. 6; Job iv. 13; vii. 14; Eze. i. 1; viii. 3. Often the prophet seemed to be transferred or translated to another place from where he was, and the scene in a distant land or age passed before the mind, Eze. viii. 3; xl. 2; xi. 24; Da. viii. 2. In this case the distant scene or time passed before the prophet, and he recorded it as it appeared to him. That this did not cease before the times of the gospel is evident: Ac. ix. 10, "To Ananias said the Lord in a vision," &c.; 12, "And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias," &c.; that is, Paul hath seen Ananias represented to him, though absent; he has had an image of him coming in to him; Ac. x. 3, Cornelius "saw in a vision evidently an angel of God coming to him," &c. This was one of the modes by which in former times God made known his will; and the language of the Jews came to express a revelation in this manner. Though there were strictly no visions on the day of Pentecost, yet that was one scene under the great economy of the Messiah under which God would make known his will in a manner as clear as he did to the ancient Jews. ¶ Your young men shall dream dreams. The will of God in former times was made known often in this manner; and there are several instances recorded in which it was done under the gospel. God informed Abimelech in a dream that Sarah was the wife of Abraham, Ge. xx. 3. He spoke to Jacob in a dream, Ge. xxxi. 11; to Laban, xxxi. 24; to Joseph, xxxvii. 5; to the butler and baker, xl. 5; to Pharaoh, xli. 1-7; to Solomon, 1 Ki. iii. 5; to Daniel, Da. ii. 3; vii. 1. It was prophesied by Moses that in this way God would make known his will, Nu. xii. 6. It occurred even in the times of the gospel. Joseph was warned in a dream, Mat. i. 20; ii. 12, 13, 19, 22. Pilate's wife was also 18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out, in those days, of my Spirit; "and they shall prophesy:

troubled in this manner about the conduct of the Jews to Christ, Mat. xxvii. 19. As this was one way in which the will of God was made known formerly to men, so the expression here denotes simply that his will would be made known; that it would be one characteristic of the times of the gospel that God would reveal himself to man. The ancients probably had some mode of determining whether their dreams were divine communications, or whether they were, as they are now, the mere erratic wanderings of the mind when unrestrained and unchecked by the will. At present no confidence is to be put in dreams. Comp. Introd. to Is. § 7, 12.

18. And on my servants. The Hebrew in Joel is "upon the servants." The Septuagint and the Latin Vulgate, however, render it "on my servants." In Joel, the prophet would seem to be enumerating the different conditions and ranks of society. The influences of the Spirit would be confined to no class; they would descend on old and young, and even on servants and handmaids. So the Chaldee Paraphrase understood it. But the Septuagint and Peter evidently understood it in the sense of servants of God, as the worshippers of God are often called servants in the Scriptures. See Ro. i. 1. It is possible, however, that Joel intended to refer to the servants of God. It is not "upon your servants," &c., as in the former expression, "your sons," &c.; but the form is changed, "upon servants and handmaids." The language, therefore, will admit the construction of the Septuagint and of Peter; and it was this variation in the original Hebrew which suggested, doubtless, the mention of "my servants," &c., instead of your servants. ¶ And handmaids. Female servants. The name is several times given to pious women, Ps. lxxxvi. 16; cxvi. 16; Lu. i. 38, 48. The meaning of this verse does not materially differ from the former. In the times of the gospel, those who were brought under its influence would be remarkably endowed with ability to declare the will of God.

19, 20. I will show wonders. Literally,

19 And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke:

"I will give signs"—δώσωτε σημεῖα. The word in the Hebrew, מופתים, mophethim, means properly prodigies; wonderful occurrences; miracles wrought by God or his messengers, Ex. iv. 21; vii. 3, 9; xi. 9; De. iv. 34, &c. It is the common word to denote a miracle in the Old Testament. Here it means, however, a portentous appearance, a prodigy, a remarkable occurrence. It is commonly joined in the New Testament with the word signs—"signs and wonders," Mat. xxiv. 24; Mar. xiii. 22; Jn. iv. 48. In these places it does not of necessity mean miracles, but unusual and remarkable appearances. Here it is used to mean great and striking changes in the sky, the sun, moon, &c. The Hebrew is, "I will give signs in the heaven and upon the earth." Peter has quoted it according to the sense, and not according to the letter. The Septuagint is here a literal translation of the Hebrew; and this is one of the instances where the New Testament writers did not quote from either.

Much of the difficulty of interpreting these verses consists in affixing the proper meaning to the expression "that great and notable day of the Lord." If it be limited to the day of Pentecost, it is certain that no such events occurred at that time. But there is, it is believed, no propriety in confining it to that time. The description here pertains to "the last days" (ver. 17); that is, to the whole of that period of duration, however long, which was known by the prophets as the last times. That period might be extended through many centuries; and during that period all these events would take place. The day of the Lord is the day when God will manifest himself in a peculiar manner; a day when he will so strikingly be seen in his wonders and his judgments that it may be called his day. Thus it is applied to the day of judgment as the day of the Son of man; the day in which he will be the great attractive object, and will be signalized glorified, Lu. xvii. 24; 1 Th. v. 2; Phi. i. 6; 2 Pe. iii. 12. If, as I suppose, "that notable day of the Lord" here refers to that future time when God will manifest himself in judgment, then we are not to suppose that Peter meant to say that these "wonders" would take place on the day of Pentecost, or had their fulfilment then, but would occur under that indefinite period called "the last days," the days of the Messiah, and BEFORE that period was closed by the great day of the Lord. The gift of tongues was a partial fulfilment of the general prophecy pertaining to those times. And as the prophecy was thus partially fulfilled, it was a pledge that it would be entirely; and thus there was laid a foundation for the necessity of repentance, and for calling on the Lord in order to be saved. ¶ Blood. Blood is commonly used as an emblem of slaughter or of battle. ¶ Fire. Fire is also an image of war, or the conflagration of towns and dwellings in time of war. ¶ Vapour of smoke. The word vapour, ἀτμός, means commonly an exhalation from the earth, &c., easily moved from one place to another. Here it means (Heb. Joel) rising columns or pillars of smoke, and is another image of the calamities of war—the smoke rising from burning towns. It has always been customary in war to burn the towns of an enemy, and to render him as helpless as possible. Hence the calamities denoted here are those represented by such scenes. To what particular scenes there is reference here it is impossible now to say. It may be remarked, however, that scenes of this kind occurred before the destruction of Jerusalem, and there is a striking resemblance between the description in Joel and that by which our Saviour foretells the destruction of Jerusalem. See Notes on Mat. xxiv. 21-24. Dr. Thomson (Land and the Book, vol. ii. p. 311) supposes that the reference in Joel may have been to the usual appearances of the sirocco, or that they may have suggested the image used here. He says: "We have two kinds of sirocco, one accompanied with vehement wind, which fills the air with dust and fine sand. I have often seen the whole heavens veiled in gloom with this sort of sand-cloud, through which the sun, shorn of his beams, looked like a globe of dull smouldering fire. It may have been this phenomenon which suggested that strong prophetic figure of Joel, quoted before that great and notable day of the Lord come:

21 And it shall come to pass, that by Peter on the day of Pentecost. Wonders in the heaven and in the earth; blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke; the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood. The pillars of smoke are probably those columns of sand and dust raised high in the air by local whirlwinds, which often accompany the sirocco. On the great desert of the Hauran I have seen a score of them marching with great rapidity over the plain, and they closely resemble "pillars of smoke."

20. The sun shall be turned into darkness. See Notes on Mat. xxiv. 29. The same images used here with reference to the sun and moon are used also there: They occur not unfrequently, Mar. xiii. 24; 2 Pe. iii. 7-10. The shining of the sun is an emblem of prosperity; the withdrawing, the eclipse, or the setting of the sun is an emblem of calamity, and is often thus used in the Scriptures, Is. ix. 20; Je. xv. 9; Eze. xxxii. 7; Am. viii. 9; Re. vi. 12; viii. 12; ix. 2; xvi. 8. To say that the sun is darkened, or turned into darkness, is an image of calamity, and especially of the calamities of war, when the smoke of burning cities rises to heaven and obscures his light. This is not, therefore, to be taken literally, nor does it afford any indication of what will be at the end of the world in regard to the sun. ¶ The moon into blood. The word blood here means that obscure, sanguinary colour which the moon has when the atmosphere is filled with smoke and vapour, and especially the lurid and alarming appearance which it assumes when smoke and flames are thrown up by earthquakes and fiery eruptions, Re. vi. 12, "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood," Re. viii. 8. In this place it denotes great calamities. The figures used are indicative of wars, and conflagrations, and earthquakes. As these things are (Mat. xxiv.) applied to the destruction of Jerusalem; as they actually occurred previous to that event (see Notes on Mat. xxiv.), it may be supposed that the prophecy in Joel had an immediate reference to that. The meaning of the quotation by Peter in this place therefore is, that what occurred on the day of Pentecost was the beginning of the series of wonders that was to take place during the times of the Messiah. It is not intimated that those scenes were to close or to be exhausted in that age. They may precede that great day of the Lord which is yet to come in view of the whole earth. ¶ That great and notable day of the Lord. This is called the great day of the Lord, because on that day he will be signally manifested, more impressively and strikingly than on other times. The word notable, ἵνατερν, means signal, illustrious, distinguished. In Joel the word is terrible or fearful; a word applicable to days of calamity, and trial, and judgment. The Greek word here rendered notable is also in the Septuagint frequently used to denote calamity or times of judgment, De. x. 21; 2 Sa. vii. 23. This will apply to any day in which God signally manifests himself, but particularly to a day when he shall come forth to punish men, as at the destruction of Jerusalem, or at the day of judgment. The meaning is, that those wonders would take place before that distinguished day should arrive when God would come forth in judgment.

21. Whosoever shall call. In the midst of these wonders and dangers, whosoever should call on the Lord should be delivered (Joel). The name of the Lord is the same as the Lord himself. It is a Hebraism, signifying to call on the Lord, Ps. lxxxix. 6; Zec. xiii. 9. ¶ Shall be saved. In Hebrew, shall be delivered, that is, from impending calamities. When they threaten, and God is coming forth to judge them, it shall be that those who are characterized as those who call on the Lord shall be delivered. This is equally true at all times. It is remarkable that no Christians perished in the siege of Jerusalem. Though more than a million of Jews perished, yet the followers of Christ who were there, having been warned by him, when they saw the signs of the Romans approaching, withdrew to Elia, and were preserved. So it shall be in the day of judgment. All whose character it has been that they called on God will then be saved. While the wicked will then call on the rocks and the mountains to shelter them from the Lord, those who have invoked his favour and mercy will find deliverance. The use which Peter makes of this passage is this: Calamities were about to come; the day of judgment was approaching; they were passing through the last days of the earth's history, and therefore it became them to call on the name of the Lord, and to obtain deliverance from the dangers which impended over the guilty. There can be little doubt that Peter intended to apply this to the Messiah, and that by the name of the Lord he meant the Lord Jesus. See 1 Co. i. 2. Paul makes the same use of the passage, expressly applying it to the Lord Jesus Christ, Ro. x. 13, 14. In Joel, the word translated Lord is JEHOVAH, the incommunicable and peculiar name of God; and the use of the passage before us in the New Testament shows how the apostles regarded the Lord Jesus Christ, and proves that they had no hesitation in applying to him names and attributes which could belong to no one but God.

This verse teaches us, 1. That in prospect of the judgments of God which are to come, we should make preparation. We shall be called to pass through the closing scenes of this earth; the time when the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, and when the great day of the Lord shall come. 2. It is easy to be saved. All that God requires of us is to call upon him, to pray to him, and he will answer and save. If men will not do so easy a thing as to call on God, and ask him for salvation, it is obviously proper that they should be cast off. The terms of salvation could not be made plainer or easier. The offer is wide, free, universal, and there is no obstacle but what exists in the heart of the sinner. And from this part of Peter's vindication of the scene on the day of Pentecost we may learn also, 1. That revivals of religion are to be expected as a part of the history of the Christian church. He speaks of God's pouring out his Spirit, &c., as what was to take place in the last days, that is, in the indefinite and large tract of time which was to come, under the administration of the Messiah. His remarks are by no means approved of God among you <sup>r</sup>by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did, by him, in the limited to the day of Pentecost. They are as applicable to future periods as to that time; and we are to expect it as a part of Christian history, that the Holy Spirit will be sent down to awaken and convert men. 2. This will also vindicate revivals from all the charges which have ever been brought against them. All the objections of irregularity, extravagance, wildfire, enthusiasm, disorder, &c., which have been alleged against revivals in modern times, might have been brought with equal propriety against the scene on the day of Pentecost. Yet an apostle showed that that was in accordance with the predictions of the Old Testament, and was an undoubted work of the Holy Spirit. If that work could be vindicated, then modern revivals may be. If that was really liable to no objections on these accounts, then modern works of grace should not be objected to for the same things. And if that excited deep interest in the apostles; if they felt deep concern to vindicate it from the charge brought against it, then Christians and Christian ministers now should feel similar solicitude to defend revivals, and not be found among their revilers, their calumniators, or their foes. There will be enemies enough of the work of the Holy Spirit without the aid of professed Christians, and that man possesses no enviable feelings or character who is found with the enemies of God and his Christ in opposing the mighty work of the Holy Spirit on the human heart.

22. Ye men of Israel. Descendants of Israel or Jacob, that is, Jews. Peter proceeds now to the third part of his argument, to show that Jesus Christ had been raised up; that the scene which had occurred was in accordance with his promise, was proof of his resurrection, and of his exaltation to be the Messiah; and that, therefore, they should repent for their great sin in having put their own Messiah to death. ¶ A man approved of God. A man who was shown or demonstrated to have the approbation of God, or to have been sent by him. ¶ By miracles, and wonders, and signs. The first of these words properly means the displays of power which Jesus made; the second, the unusual or remarkable events which attended him, as fitted to excite wonder or amazement; the third, the signs or proofs that he was from God. Together, they denote the array or series of remarkable works—raising the dead, healing the sick, &c., which showed that Jesus was sent from God. The proof which they furnished that he was from God was this, that He would not confer such power on an impostor, and that therefore Jesus was what he pretended to be. ¶ Which God did by him. The Lord Jesus himself often traced his power to do these things to his commission from the Father, but he did it in such a way as to show that he was closely united to him, Jn. v. 19, 30. Peter here says that God did these works by Jesus Christ, to show that Jesus was truly sent by him, and that therefore he had the seal and attestation of God. The same thing Jesus himself said, Jn. v. 36, “The work which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.” The great works which God has wrought in creation, as well as in redemption, he is represented as having done by his Son, He. i. 2, “By whom also he made the worlds,” Jn. i. 3; Col. i. 15-19. ¶ In the midst of you. In your own land. It is also probable that many of the persons present had been witnesses of his miracles. ¶ As ye yourselves also know. They knew it either by having witnessed them, or by the evidence which everywhere abounded of the truth that he had wrought them. The Jews, even in the time of Christ, did not dare to call his miracles in question, Jn. xv. 24. While they admitted the miracle, they attempted to trace it to the influence of Beelzebub, Mat. ix. 34; Mar. iii. 22. So decided and numerous were the miracles of Jesus, that Peter here appeals to them as having been known by the Jews themselves to have been performed, and with a confidence that even they could not deny it. On this he proceeds to rear his argument for the truth of his Messiahship.

23. *Him, being delivered—ἐξόδος.* This word, delivered, is used commonly of

those who are surrendered or delivered into the hands of enemies or adversaries. It means that Jesus was surrendered, or given up to his enemies by those who should have been his protectors. Thus he was delivered to the chief priests, Mar. x. 33. Pilate released Barabbas, and delivered Jesus to their will, Mar. xv. 15; Lu. xxiii. 25. He was delivered unto the Gentiles, Lu. xviii. 32; the chief priests delivered him to Pilate, Mat. xxvii. 2; and Pilate delivered him to be crucified, Mat. xxvii. 26; Jn. xix. 16. In this manner was the death of Jesus accomplished, by being surrendered from one tribunal to another, and one demand of his countrymen to another, until they succeeded in procuring his death. It may also be implied here that he was given or surrendered by God himself to the hands of men. Thus he is represented to have been given by God, Jn. iii. 16; 1 Jn. iv. 9, 10. The Syriac translates this, "Him, who was destined to this by the foreknowledge and will of God, you delivered into the hands of wicked men," &c. The Arabic, "Him, delivered to you by the hands of the wicked, you received, and after you had mocked him you slew him." ¶ By the determinate counsel. The word translated determinate — τῆς ὁρμήσεως — means, properly, that which is defined, marked out, or bounded; as, to mark out or define the boundary of a field, &c. See Ro. i. 1, 4. In Ac. x. 42, it is translated ordained of God; denoting his purpose that it should be so, that is, that Jesus should be the judge of quick and dead; Lu. xxii. 22, "The Son of man goeth as it is determined of him," that is, as God has purposed or determined beforehand that he should go; Ac. xi. 29, "The disciples . . . determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea," that is, they resolved or purposed beforehand to do it; Ac. xvii. 26, "God . . . hath determined the times before appointed and fixed," &c. In all these places there is the idea of a purpose, intention, or plan implying intention, and marking out or fixing the boundaries to some future action or event. The word implies that the death of Jesus was resolved on by God before it took place. And this

truth is established by all the predictions made in the Old Testament, and by the Saviour himself. God was not compelled to give up his Son. There was no claim on him for it. He had a right, therefore, to determine when and how it should be done. The fact, moreover, that this was predicted, shows that it was fixed or resolved on. No event can be foretold, evidently, unless it be certain that it will take place. The event, therefore, must in some way be fixed or resolved on beforehand. ¶ Counsel—σολῆγη. This word properly denotes purpose, decree, will. It expresses the act of the mind in willing, or the purpose or design which is formed. Here it means the purpose or will of God; it was his plan or decree that Jesus should be delivered: Ac. iv. 28, "For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel (ἢ βουλὴ σου) determined before to be done;" Ep. i. 11, "Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will;" He. vi. 17, "God willing . . . to show . . . the immutability of his counsel." See Ac. xx. 27; 1 Co. iv. 5; Lu. xxiii. 51. The word here, therefore, proves that Jesus was delivered by the deliberate purpose of God; that it was according to his previous intention and design. The reason why this was insisted on by Peter was that he might convince the Jews that Jesus was not delivered by weakness, or because he was unable to rescue himself. Such an opinion would have been inconsistent with the belief that he was the Messiah. It was important, then, to assert the dignity of Jesus, and to show that his death was in accordance with the fixed design of God, and therefore that it did not interfere in the least with his claims to be the Messiah. The same thing our Saviour has himself expressly affirmed, Jn. xix. 10, 11; x. 18; Mat. xxvi. 53. ¶ Foreknowledge. This word denotes the seeing beforehand of an event yet to take place. It implies, 1. Omniscience; and, 2. That the event is fixed and certain. To foresee a contingent event, that is, to foresee that an event will take place when it may or may not take place, is an absurdity. Foreknowledge, therefore, implies that for some reason the event will certainly take place. What that reason is the word itself does not determine.

As, however, God is represented in the Scriptures as purposing or determining future events; as they could not be foreseen by him unless he had so determined, so the word sometimes is used in the sense of determining beforehand, or as synonymous with decreeing, Ro. viii. 29; xi. 2. In this place the word is used to denote that the delivering up of Jesus was something more than a bare or naked decree. It implies that God did it according to his foresight of what would be the best time, place, and manner of its being done. It was not the result merely of will; it was will directed by a wise foreknowledge of what would be best. And this is the case with all the decrees of God. It follows from this that the conduct of the Jews was foreknown. God was not disappointed in anything respecting their treatment of his Son, nor will he be disappointed in any of the doings of men. Notwithstanding the wickedness of the world, his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure, Is. xlvi. 10. ¶ Ye have taken. See Mat. xxvi. 57. Ye Jews have taken. It is possible that some were present on this occasion who had been personally concerned in taking Jesus, and many who had joined in the cry, "Crucify him," Lu. xxiii. 18-21. It was, at any rate, the act of the Jewish people by which this had been done. This was a striking instance of the fidelity of that preaching which says, as Nathan did to David, "Thou art the man!" Peter, once so timid that he denied his Lord, now charged this atrocious crime on his countrymen, regardless of their anger and his own danger. He did not deal in general accusations, but brought the charges home, and declared that they were the men who had been concerned in this amazing crime. No preaching can be successful that does not charge on men their personal guilt, and that does not fearlessly proclaim their ruin and danger. ¶ With wicked hands. Greek, "through or by the hands of the lawless or wicked." This refers, doubtless, to Pilate and the Roman soldiers, through whose instrumentality this had been done. The reasons for supposing that this is the true interpretation of the passage are these: (1) The Jews had not the power of inflicting death themselves. (2) The term used here, wicked, ἀνόντας, is not applicable to the Jews, but to the Romans. It properly means lawless, or those who had not the law, and is often applied to the heathen,

Ro. ii. 12, 14; 1 Co. ix. 21. (3) The punishment which was inflicted was a Roman punishment. (4) It was a matter of fact that the Jews, though they had condemned him, yet had not put him to death themselves, but had demanded it of the Romans. But, though they had employed the Romans to do it, still they were the prime movers in the deed; they had plotted, and compassed, and demanded his death, and they were, therefore, not the less guilty. The maxim of the common law and of common sense is, "He who does a deed by the instrumentality of another is responsible for it." It was from no merit of the Jews that they had not put him to death themselves. It was simply because the power was taken away from them. ¶ Have crucified. Greek, "Having affixed him to the cross, ye have put him to death." Peter here charges the crime fully on them. Their guilt was not diminished because they had employed others to do it. From this we may remark, 1. That this was one of the most amazing and awful crimes that could be charged on any men. It was malice, and treason, and hatred, and murder combined. Nor was it any common murder. It was their own Messiah whom they had put to death; the hope of their fathers; he who had been long promised by God, and the prospect of whose coming had so long cheered and animated the nation. They had now imbrued their hands in his blood, and stood charged with the awful crime of having murdered the Prince of Peace. 2. It is no mitigation of guilt that we do it by the instrumentality of others. It is often, if not always, a deepening and extending of the crime. 3. We have here a striking and clear instance of the doctrine that the decrees of God do not interfere with the free agency of men. This event was certainly determined beforehand. Nothing is clearer than this. It is here expressly asserted; and it had been foretold with undeviating certainty by the prophets. God had, for wise and gracious purposes, purposed or decreed in his own mind that his Son should die at the time and in the manner in which he did; for all the circumstances of his death, as well as of his birth and his life, were foretold; and yet in this the Jews and the Romans never supposed or alleged that they were compelled or cramped in what they did. They did what they chose. If in this case the decrees of God were not

inconsistent with human freedom, neither can they be in any case. Between those decrees and the freedom of man there is no inconsistency, unless it could be shown—what never can be—that God compels men to act contrary to their own will. In such a case there could be no freedom. But that is not the case with regard to the decrees of God. An act is what it is in itself; it can be contemplated and measured by itself. That it was foreseen, foreknown, or purposed does not alter its nature, any more than it does that it be remembered after it is performed. The memory of what we have done does not destroy our freedom. Our own purposes in relation to our conduct do not destroy our freedom; nor can the purposes or designs of any other being violate one free moral action, unless he compels us to do a thing against our will. 4. We have here a proof that the decrees of God do not take away the moral character of an action. It does not prove that an action is innocent if it is shown that it is a part of the wise plan of God to permit it. Never was there a more atrocious crime than the crucifixion of the Son of God; and yet it was determined on in the divine counsels. So with all the deeds of human guilt. The purpose of God to permit them does not destroy their nature or make them innocent. They are what they are in themselves. The purpose of God does not change their character; and if it is right to punish them in fact, they will be punished. If it is right for God to punish them, it was right to resolve to do it. The sinner must answer for his sins, not for the plans of his Maker; nor can he take shelter in the day of wrath against what he deserves in the plea that God has determined future events. If any men could have done it, it would have been those whom Peter addressed; yet neither he nor they felt that their guilt was in the least diminished by the fact that Jesus was "delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." 5. If this event was predetermined; if that act of amazing wickedness, when the Son of God was put to death, was fixed by the determinate counsel of God, then all the events leading to it, and the circumstances attending it, were also a part of the decree. The one could not be determined without the other. 6. If that event was determined, then others may also be consistently with human freedom and responsibility. There can be no deed of wickedness that will surpass that of crucifying the Son of God, and if the acts of his murderers were a part of the wise counsel of God, then on the same principle are we to suppose that all events are under his direction, and ordered by a purpose infinitely wise and good. 7. If the Jews could not take shelter from the charge of wickedness under the plea that it was foreordained, then no sinners can do it. This was as clear a case as can ever occur; and yet the apostle did not intimate that an excuse or mitigation for their sin could be pled from this cause. This case, therefore, meets all the excuses of sinners from this plea, and proves that those excuses will not avail them or save them in the day of judgment.

24. Whom God hath raised up. This was the main point, in this part of his argument, which Peter wished to establish. He could not but admit that the Messiah had been in an ignominious manner put to death. But he now shows them that God had also raised him up; had thus given his attestation to his doctrine; and had sent down his Spirit according to the promise which the Lord Jesus made before his death. ¶ Having loosed the pains of death. The word loosed, λύσας, is opposed to bind, and is properly applied to a cord, or to anything which is bound. See Mat. xxi. 2; Mar. i. 7. Hence it means to free or to liberate, Lu. xiii. 16; 1 Co. vii. 27. It is used in this sense here; though the idea of uniting or loosing a band is retained, because the word translated pains often means a cord or band. ¶ The pains of death—ἀδίνας τοῦ θανάτου. The word translated pains denotes properly the extreme sufferings of parturition, and then any severe or excruciating pangs. Hence it is applied also to death, as being a state of extreme suffering. A very frequent meaning of the Hebrew word of which this is the translation is cord or band. This, perhaps, was the original idea of the word;

and the Hebrews expressed any extreme agony under the idea of bands or cords closely drawn, binding and constricting the limbs, and producing severe pain. Thus death was represented under this image of a bond that confined men, that pressed closely on them, that prevented escape, and produced severe suffering. For this use of the word בָּנֶן, see Ps. cxix. 61; Is. lxvi. 7; Je. xxii. 23; Ho. xiii. 13. It is applied to death, Ps. xviii. 5, "The snares of death prevented me;" answering to the word sorrows in the previous part of the verse; Ps. cxvi. 3, "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell (Hades or Sheol, the cords or pains that were binding me down to the grave) gat hold on me." We are not to infer from this that our Lord suffered anything after death. It means simply that he could not be held by the grave, but that God loosed the bonds which had held him there; that he now set him free who had been encompassed by these pains or bonds until they had brought him down to the grave. Pain, mighty pain, will encompass us all like the constrictions and bindings of a cord which we cannot loose, and will fasten our limbs and bodies in the grave. Those bands begin to be thrown around us in early life, and they are drawn closer and closer, until we lie panting under the stricture on a bed of pain, and then are still and immovable in the grave—subdued in a manner not a little resembling the mortal agonies of the tiger in the convulsions of the boa constrictor, or like Laocoön and his sons in the folds of the serpents from the island of Tenos. ¶ It was not possible. This does not refer to any natural impossibility, or to any inherent efficacy or power in the body of Jesus itself, but simply means that in the circumstances of the case such an event could not be. Why it could not be he proceeds at once to show. It could not be consistently with the promises of the Scriptures. Jesus was the Prince of life (Ac. iii. 15); he had life in himself (Jn. i. 4; v. 26); he had power to lay down his life and to take it again (Jn. x. 18); and it was indispensable that he should rise. He came, also, that through death he might on my right hand, that I should not be moved:

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad;

destroy him that had the power of death—that is, the devil (He. ii. 14); and as it was his purpose to gain this victory, he could not be defeated in it by being confined to the grave.

25-28. For Daniel speaketh, &c. This doctrine that the Messiah must rise from the dead Peter proceeds to prove by a quotation from the Old Testament. This passage is taken from Ps. xvi. 8-11. It is made from the Greek version of the Septuagint, with only one slight and unimportant change. Nor is there any material change, as will be seen, from the Hebrew. In what sense this Psalm can be applied to Christ will be seen after we have examined the expressions which Peter alleges. ¶ I foresaw the Lord. This is an unhappy translation. To foresee the Lord always before us conveys no idea, though it may be a literal translation of the passage. The word means to foresee, and then to see before us, that is, as present with us, to regard as being near. It thus implies to put confidence in one; to rely on him, or expect assistance from him. This is its meaning here. The Hebrew is, I expected, or waited for. It thus expresses the petition of one who is helpless and dependent, who waits for help from God. It is often thus used in the Old Testament. ¶ Always before my face. As being always present to help me, and to deliver me out of all my troubles. ¶ He is on my right hand. To be at hand is to be near to afford help. The right hand is mentioned because that was the place of dignity and honour. David did not design simply to say that he was near to help him, but that he had the place of honour, the highest place in his affections, Ps. cix. 31. In our dependence on God we should exalt him. We should not merely regard him as our help, but should at the same time give him the highest place in our affections. ¶ That I should not be moved. That is, that no great evil or calamity should happen to me; that I may stand firm. The phrase denotes to sink into calamities, or to fall into the power of enemies, Ps. lxii. 2, 6; xlvi. 6. This expresses the confidence of one who is in danger of great moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope:

27 Because thou wilt not leave calamities, and who puts his trust in the help of God alone.

26. Therefore. Peter ascribes these expressions to the Messiah. The reason why he would exult or rejoice was, that he would be preserved amidst the sorrows that were coming on him, and could look forward to the triumph that awaited him. Thus Paul says (He. xii. 2) that “Jesus . . . for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame,” &c. Throughout the New Testament, the shame and sorrow of his sufferings were regarded as connected with his glory and his triumph, Lu. xxiv. 26; Phi. ii. 6-9; Ep. i. 20, 21. In this our Saviour has left us an example that we should walk in his steps. The prospect of future glory and triumph should sustain us amidst all afflictions, and make us ready, like him, to lie down in even the corruptions of the grave. ¶ Did my heart rejoice. In the Hebrew this is in the present tense, “my heart rejoices.” The word heart here expresses the person, and is the same as saying I rejoice. The Hebrews used the different members to express the person. And thus we say, “every soul perished; the vessel had forty hands; wise heads do not think so; hearts of steel will not flinch,” &c. (Prof. Stuart on Ps. xvi). The meaning is, because God is near me in time of calamity, and will support and deliver me, I will not be agitated or fear, but will exult in the prospect of the future, in view of the “joy that is set before me.” ¶ My tongue was glad. Hebrew, My glory or my honour exults. The word is used to denote majesty, splendour, dignity, honour. It is also used to express the heart or soul, either because that is the chief source of man’s dignity, or because the word is also expressive of the liver, regarded by the Hebrews as the seat of the affections, Ge. xlix. 6, “Unto their assembly, mine honour,” that is, my soul, or myself, “be not thou united;” Ps. lvii. 8, “Awake up, my glory,” &c.; Ps. cviii. 1, “I will sing . . . even with my glory.” This word the Septuagint translated tongue. The Arabic and Latin Vulgate have also done the same. Why they thus use the word is not clear. It may be because the tongue, or the gift of speech, was that which chiefly contributes to the honour of man, or distinguishes him from the brutal creation. The word glory is used expressly for tongue in Ps. xxx. 12: “To the end that my glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent.” ¶ Moreover also. Truly; in addition to this. ¶ My flesh. My body. See ver. 31; 1 Co. v. 5. It means here properly the body separate from the soul; the dead body. ¶ Shall rest. Shall rest or repose in the grave, free from corruption. ¶ In hope. In confident expectation of a resurrection. The Hebrew word rather expresses confidence than hope. The passage means, “My body will I commit to the grave, with a confident expectation of the future, that is, with a firm belief that it will not see corruption, but will be raised up.” It thus expresses the feelings of the dying Messiah; the assured confidence which he had that his repose in the grave would not be long, and would certainly come to an end. The death of Christians is also in the New Testament represented as a sleep, and as repose (Ac. vii. 60; 1 Co. xv. 6, 18; 1 Th. iv. 13, 15; 2 Pe. iii. 4); and they may also, after the example of their Lord, commit their bodies to the dust, in hope. They will lie in the grave under the assurance of a happy resurrection; and though their bodies, unlike his, will moulder to their native dust, yet this corruptible will put on incorruption, and this mortal will put on immortality, 1 Co. xv. 53.

27. Thou will not leave my soul. The word soul, with us, means the thinking, the immortal part of man, and is applied to it whether existing in connection with the body or separate from it. The Hebrew word translated soul here, וּנְפֶשׁ, nephesh, however, may mean spirit, mind, life, and may denote here nothing more than me or myself. It means, properly, breath; then life, or the vital principle, a living being; then the soul, the spirit, the thinking part. Instances where it is put for the individual himself, meaning “me” or “myself,” may be seen in Ps. xi. 1; xxxv. 3, 7; Job ix. 21. There is no clear instance in which it is applied to the soul in its separate state, or disjoined from the body. In this place it must be explained in part by the meaning of the word hell. If that means grave, then this word probably means "me;" thou wilt not leave me in the grave. The meaning probably is, "Thou wilt not leave me in Sheol, neither," &c. The word leave here means, "Thou wilt not resign me to, or wilt not give me over to it, to be held under its power." ¶ In hell—ἰν ἡδων. The word hell, in English, now commonly denotes the place of the future eternal punishment of the wicked. This sense it has acquired by long usage. It is a Saxon word, derived from helan, to cover, and denotes literally a covered or deep place (Webster); then the dark and dismal abode of departed spirits; and then the place of torment. As the word is used now by us, it by no means expresses the force of the original; and if with this idea we read a passage like the one before us, it would convey an erroneous meaning altogether, although formerly the English word perhaps expressed no more than the original. The Greek word Hades means literally a place devoid of light; a dark, obscure abode; and in Greek writers was applied to the dark and obscure regions where disembodied spirits were supposed to dwell. It occurs but eleven times in the New Testament. In this place it is the translation of the Hebrew Sheol. In Re. xx. 13, 14, it is connected with death: "And death and hell (Hades) delivered up the dead which were in them;" "And death and hell (Hades) were cast into the lake of fire." See also Re. vi. 8; Re. i. 18, "I have the keys of hell and death." In 1 Co. xv. 55 it means the grave: "O grave (Hades), where is thy victory?" In Mat. xi. 23 it means a deep, profound place, opposed to an exalted one; a condition of calamity and degradation, opposed to former great prosperity: "Thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell" (Hades). In Lu. xvi. 23 it is applied to the place where the rich man was after death, in a state of punishment: "In hell (Hades) he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." In this place it is connected with the idea of suffering, and undoubtedly denotes a place of punishment. The Septuagint has used this word commonly to translate the word Sheol. Once it is used as a translation of the phrase "the stones of the pit" (Is. xiv. 19); twice to express silence, particularly the silence of the grave (Ps. xciv. 17; cxv. 17); once to express the Hebrew for "the shadow of death" (Job xxxviii. 17); and sixty times to translate the word Sheol. It is remarkable that it is never used in the Old Testament to denote the word kēber, עֶבֶר, which properly denotes a grave or sepulchre. The idea which was conveyed by the word Sheol, or Hades, was not properly a grave or sepulchre, but that dark, unknown state, including the grave, which constituted the dominions of the dead. What idea the Hebrews had of the future world it is now difficult to explain, and is not necessary in the case before us. The word originally denoting simply the state of the dead, the insatiable demands of the grave, came at last to be extended in its meaning, in proportion as they received new revelations or formed new opinions about the future world. Perhaps the following may be the process of thought by which the word came to have the peculiar meanings which it is found to have in the Old Testament. (1) The word death and the grave (kēber) would express the abode of a deceased body in the earth. (2) Man has a soul, a thinking principle, and the inquiry must arise, What will be its state? Will it die also? The Hebrews never appear to have believed that. Will it ascend to heaven at once? On that subject they had at first no knowledge. Will it go at once to a place of happiness or of torment? Of that, also, they had no information at first. Yet they supposed it would live; and the word Sheol expressed just this state—the dark, unknown regions of the dead; the abode of spirits, whether good or bad; the residence of departed men, whether fixed in a permanent habitation, or whether wandering about. As they were ignorant of the size and spherical structure of the earth, they seem to have supposed this region to be situated in the earth, far below us, and hence it is put in opposition to heaven, Ps. cxxxix. 8, "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell (Sheol), behold, thou art there;" Am. ix. 2. The most common use of the word is, therefore, to express those dark regions, the lower world, the region of ghosts, &c. Instances of this, almost without number, might be given. See a most striking and sublime instance of this in Is. xiv. 9: "Hell from beneath is moved to meet thee," &c.; where the assembled dead are represented as being agitated in all their vast regions at the death of

make me full of joy with thy countenance.

the King of Babylon. (3) The inquiry could not but arise whether all these beings were happy. This point revelation decided; and it was decided in the Old Testament. Yet this word would better express the state of the wicked dead than the righteous. It conveyed the idea of darkness, gloom, wandering; the idea of a sad and unfixed abode, unlike heaven. Hence the word sometimes expresses the idea of a place of punishment: Ps. ix. 17, "The wicked shall be turned into hell," &c.; Pr. xv. 11; xxiii. 14; xxvii. 20; Job xxvi. 6. While, therefore, the word does not mean properly a grave or a sepulchre, it does mean often the state of the dead, without designating whether in happiness or woe, but implying the continued existence of the soul. In this sense it is often used in the Old Testament, where the Hebrew word is Sheol, and the Greek Hades: Ge. xxxvii. 35, "I will go down into the grave, unto my son, mourning"—I will go down to the dead, to death, to my son, still there existing; xlii. 38; xliv. 29, "He shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave;" Nu. xvi. 30, 33; 1 Ki. ii. 6, 9; &c. &c. In the place before us, therefore, the meaning is simply, thou wilt not leave me AMONG THE DEAD. This conveys all the idea. It does not mean literally the grave or the sepulchre; that relates only to the body. This expression refers to the deceased Messiah. Thou wilt not leave him among the dead; thou wilt raise him up. It is from this passage, perhaps, aided by two others (Ro. x. 7, and 1 Pe. iii. 19), that the doctrine originated that Christ "descended," as it is expressed in the Creed, "into hell"; and many have invented strange opinions about his going among lost spirits. The doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church has been that he went to purgatory, to deliver the spirits confined there. But if the interpretation now given be correct, then it will follow, (1) That nothing is affirmed here about the destination of the human soul of Christ after his death. That he went to the region of the dead is implied, but nothing further. (2) It may be remarked that the Scriptures affirm nothing about the state of his soul in that time which intervened between his death and resurrection. The only intimation which occurs on the subject is such as to leave us to suppose that he was in a state of happiness. To the dying thief he said, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." When Jesus died, he said, "It is finished;" and he doubtless meant by that that his sufferings and toils for man's redemption were at an end. All suppositions of any toils or pains after his death are fables, and without the slightest warrant in the New Testament. ¶ Thine Holy One. The word in the Hebrew which is translated here Holy One properly denotes one who is tenderly and piously devoted to another, and answers to the expression used in the New Testament, "my beloved Son." It is also used, as it is here by the Septuagint and by Peter, to denote one that is holy, that is set apart to God. In this sense it is applied to Christ, either as being set apart to this office, or as so pure as to make it proper to designate him by way of eminence the Holy One, or the Holy One of God. It is several times used as the well-known designation of the Messiah: Mar. i. 24, "I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God;" Lu. iv. 34; Ac. iii. 14, "But ye denied the Holy One, and the just," &c. See also Lu. i. 35, "That holy thing that is born of thee shall be called the Son of God." ¶ To see corruption. To see corruption is to experience it, to be made partakers of it. The Hebrews often expressed the idea of experiencing anything by the use of words pertaining to the senses, as, to taste of death, to see death, &c. Corruption here means putrefaction in the grave. The word which is used in the Psalm, שָׁחַת, shahath, is thus used in Job xvii. 14, "I have said to corruption, thou art my father," &c. The Greek word here used properly denotes this. Thus it is used in Ac. xiii. 34-37. This meaning would be properly suggested by the Hebrew word, and thus the ancient versions understood it. The meaning implied in the expression is, that he of whom the Psalm was written should be restored to life again; and this meaning Peter proceeds to show that the words must have.

28. Thou hast made known, &c. The Hebrew is, "Thou wilt make known to me," &c. In relation to the Messiah, it means, Thou wilt restore me to life.

<sup>3</sup>or, I may.

¶ The way of life. This properly means the path to life; as we say, the road to preferment or honour; the path to happiness; the highway to ruin, &c. See Pr. vii. 26, 27. It means, thou wilt make known to me life itself, that is, thou wilt restore me to life. The expressions in the Psalm are capable of this interpretation without doing any violence to the text; and if the preceding verses refer to the death and burial of the Messiah, then the natural and proper meaning of this is, that he would be restored to life again. ¶ Thou hast made me full of joy. This expresses the feelings of the Messiah in view of the favour that would thus be shewed him; the resurrection from the dead, and the elevation to the right hand of God. It was this which is represented as sustaining him—the prospect of the joy that was before him, in heaven, He. xii. 2; Ep. i. 20-22. ¶ With thy countenance. Literally, “with thy face,” that is, in thy presence. The words countenance and presence mean the same thing, and denote favour, or the honour and happiness provided by being admitted to the presence of God. The prospect of the honour that would be bestowed on the Messiah was that which sustained him. And this proves that the person contemplated in the Psalm expected to be raised from the dead, and exalted to the presence of God. That expectation is now fulfilled, and the Messiah is now filled with joy in his exaltation to the throne of the universe. He has “ascended to his Father and our Father;” he is “seated at the right hand of God;” he has entered on that “joy which was set before him;” he is “crowned with glory and honour;” and “all things are put under his feet.” In view of this, we may remark, (1) That the Messiah had full and confident expectation that he would rise from the dead. This the Lord Jesus always evinced, and often declared it to his disciples. (2) If the Saviour rejoiced in view of the glories before him, we should also. We should anticipate with joy an everlasting dwelling in the presence of God, and the high honour of sitting “with him on his throne, as he overcame, and is set down with the Father on his throne.” (3) The prospect of arch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.

this should sustain us, as it did him, in the midst of persecution, calamity, and trials. Thy will soon be ended; and if we are his friends, we shall “overcome,” as he did, and be admitted to “the fulness of joy” above, and to the “right hand” of God, “where are pleasures for evermore.”

29. Men and brethren. This passage of the Psalms Peter now proves could not relate to David, but must have reference to the Messiah. He begins his argument in a respectful manner, addressing them as his brethren, though they had just charged him and the others with intoxication. Christians should use the usual respectful forms of salutation, whatever contempt and reproaches they may meet with from opposers. ¶ Let me freely speak. That is, “It is lawful or proper to speak with boldness, or openly, respecting David.” Though he was eminently a pious man, though venerated by us all as a king, yet it is proper to say of him that he is dead, and has returned to corruption. This was a delicate way of expressing high respect for the monarch whom they all honoured, and yet evinced boldness in examining a passage of Scripture which probably many supposed to have reference solely to him. ¶ Of the patriarch David. The word patriarch properly means the head or ruler of a family; and then the founder of a family, or an illustrious ancestor. It was commonly applied to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob by way of eminence, the illustrious founders of the Jewish nation, He. vii. 4; Ac. vii. 8, 9. It was also applied to the heads of the families, or the chief men of the tribes of Israel, 1 Ch. xxiv. 31; 2 Ch. xix. 8, &c. It was thus a title of honour, denoting high respect. Applied to David, it means that he was the illustrious head or founder of the royal family, and the word is expressive of Peter's intention not to say anything disrespectful of such a king, at the same time that he freely canvassed a passage of Scripture which had been supposed to refer to him. ¶ Dead and buried. The record of that fact they had in the Old Testament. There had been no pretence that he had risen, and therefore the Psalm could not apply to him. ¶ His sepulchre is with us. Is in the city of Jerusalem. Sepulchres were commonly situated without the walls of cities and the limits of villages. The custom of burying in towns was not commonly practised. This was true of other ancient nations as well as the Hebrews, and is still in Eastern countries, except in the case of kings and very distinguished men, whose ashes are permitted to rest within the walls of a city: 1 Sa. xxviii. 3, "Samuel was dead . . . and Israel . . . buried him in Ramah, in his own city," 2 Ki. xxi. 18, "Manasseh . . . was buried in the garden of his own house;" 2 Ch. xvi. 14, Asa was buried in the city of David; 2 Ki. xiv. 20. David was buried in the city of David (1 Ki. ii. 10), with his fathers; that is, on Mount Zion, where he built a city called after his name, 2 Sa. v. 7. Of what form the tombs of the kings were is not certainly known. It is almost certain, however, that they would be constructed in a magnificent manner. The tombs were commonly excavations from rocks, or natural caves; and sepulchres cut out of the solid rock, of vast extent, are known to have existed. The following account of the tomb called "the sepulchre of the kings" is abridged from Maundrell: "The approach is through an entrance cut out of a solid rock, which admits you into an open court about forty paces square, cut down into the rock. On the south side is a portico nine paces long and four broad, hewn likewise out of the solid rock. At the end of the portico is the descent to the sepulchres. The descent is into a room about 7 or 8 yards square, cut out of the natural rock. From this room there are passages into six more, all of the same fabric with the first. In every one of these rooms, except the first, were coffins placed in niches in the sides of the chamber," &c. (Maundrell's Travels). If the tombs of the kings were of this form, it is clear that they were works of great labour and expense. Probably, also, there were, as there are now, costly and splendid monuments erected to the memory of the mighty dead. The following extract from The Land and the Book, and cut on the next page (from Williams's Holy City), will illustrate the usual construction of tombs: "The entire system of rooms, niches, and passages may be comprehended at once by an inspection of the plan of the Tombs of the Judges near Jerusalem. The entrance faces the west, and has a vestibule

(A) 13 feet by 9. Chamber (B), nearly 20 feet square, and 8 high. The north side is seen in elevation in Fig. 2, and shows two tiers of niches, one over the other, not often met with in tombs. There are seven in the lower tier, each 7 feet long, 20 inches wide, and nearly 3 feet high. The upper tier has three arched recesses, and each recess has two niches. From this room (B) doors lead out into chambers (C and D), which have their own peculiar system of niches, or loculi, for the reception of the bodies, as appears on the plan. I have explored scores of sepulchres at Ladakiye closely resembling this at Jerusalem, and there are many in the plain and on the hillsides above us here at Sidon of the same general form—chambers within chambers, and each with niches for the dead, variously arranged according to taste or necessity." These tombs are about a mile north-west of Jerusalem. "The tombs which are commonly called the 'Tombs of the Kings' are in an olive-grove about half a mile north of the Damascus Gate, and a few rods east of the great road to Nablus. A court is sunk in the solid rock about 90 feet square and 20 deep. On the west side of this court is a sort of portico, 39 feet long, 17 deep, and 15 high. It was originally ornamented with grapes, garlands, and festoons, beautifully wrought on the cornice; and the columns in the centre, and the pilasters at the corners, appear to have resembled the Corinthian order. A very low door in the south end of the portico opens into the ante-chamber—19 feet square, and 7 or 8 high. From this three passages conduct into other rooms, two of them, to the south, having five or six crypts. A passage also leads from the west room down several steps into a large vault running north, where are crypts parallel to the sides. These rooms are all cut in rock intensely hard, and the entrances were originally closed with stone doors, wrought with panels and hung on stone hinges, which are now all broken. The whole series of tombs indicates the hand of royalty and the leisure of years, but by whom and for whom they were made is a mere matter of conjecture. I know no good reason for ascribing them to Helena of Adiabene. Most travellers and writers are inclined to make them the sepulchres of the Asmonean kings" (The Land and the Book, vol. ii. p. 487, 488). The site of the tomb of David is no longer known.

¶ Unto this day. That the sepulchre of David was well known and honoured is clear from Josephus (Antiq., b. vii. ch. xv. § 3): "He (David) was buried by his son Solomon in Jerusalem with great magnificence, and with all the other funeral pomps with which kings used to be buried. Moreover, he had immense wealth buried with him: for a thousand and three hundred years afterward Hyrcanus the high-priest, when he was besieged by Antiochus, and was desirous of giving him money to raise the siege, opened one room of David's sepulchre and took out three thousand talents. Herod, many years afterward, opened another room, and took away a great deal of money," &c. See also Antiq., b. xiii. ch. viii. § 4. The tomb of a monarch like David would be well known and had in reverence.

Peter might, then, confidently appeal to their own belief and knowledge that David had not been raised from the dead. No Jew believed or supposed it. All, by their care of his sepulchre, and by the honour with which they regarded his grave, believed that he had returned to corruption. The Psalm, therefore, could not apply to him.

30. Therefore. As David was dead and buried, it was clear that he could not have referred to himself in this remarkable declaration. It followed that flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne;

he must have had reference to some other one. ¶ Being a prophet. One who foretold future events. That David was inspired is clear, 2 Sa. xxiii. 2. Many of the prophecies relating to the Messiah are found in the Psalms of David: Ps. xxii. 1, comp. Mat. xxvii. 46; Lu. xxiv. 44.—Ps. xxii. 18, comp. Mat. xxvii. 35.—Ps. lxix. 21, comp. Mat. xxvii. 34, 48.—Ps. lxix. 25, comp. Ac. i. 20. ¶ And knowing. Knowing by what God had said to him respecting his posterity. ¶ Had sworn with an oath. The places which speak of God as having sworn to David are found in Ps. lxxxix. 3, 4, “I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish,” &c.; and Ps. cxxxii. 11, “The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon my throne;” Ps. lxxxix. 35, 36. The promise to which reference is made in all these places is in 2 Sa. vii. 11–16. ¶ Of the fruit of his loins. Of his descendants. See 2 Sa. vii. 12; Ge. xxxv. 11; xlvi. 26; 1 Ki. viii. 19, &c. ¶ According to the flesh. That is, so far as the human nature of the Messiah was concerned, he would be descended from David. Expressions like these are very remarkable. If the Messiah was only a man, they would be unmeaning. They are never used in relation to a mere man; and they imply that the speaker or writer supposed that there pertained to the Messiah a nature which was not according to the flesh. See Ro. i. 3, 4. ¶ He would raise up Christ. That is, the Messiah. To raise up seed, or descendants, is to give them to him. The promises made to David in all these places had immediate reference to Solomon and to his descendants. But it is clear that the New Testament writers understood them as referring also to the Messiah. And it is no less clear that the Jews understood that the Messiah was to be descended from David, Mat. xii. 23; xxi. 9; xxii. 42, 45; Mar. xi. 10; Jn. vii. 42, &c. In what way these promises that were made to David were understood as applying to the Messiah, it may not be easy to determine. The fact, however, is clear. The following remarks may throw some light on the subject: (a) The kingdom which was promised to David was to have no end; it was to be established for ever. Yet his descendants died, and all other kingdoms changed. (b) The promise likewise stood by itself; it was not made to any other of the Jewish kings; nor were similar declarations made of surrounding kingdoms and nations. It came, therefore, gradually to be applied to that future king and kingdom which was the hope of the nation; and their eyes were anxiously fixed on the long-expected Messiah. (c) At the time that he came it had become the settled doctrine of the Jews that he was to descend from David, and that his kingdom was to be perpetual. On this belief of the prophecy the apostles argued; and the opinions of the Jews furnished a strong point by which they could convince them that Jesus was the Messiah. Peter affirms that David was aware of this, and that he so understood the promise as referring not only to Solomon, but in a far more important sense to the Messiah. Happily we have a commentary of David himself as expressing his own views of that promise. That commentary is found particularly in Ps. ii., xxii., lxix., and xvi. In these Psalms there can be no doubt that David looked forward to the coming of the Messiah; and there can be as little that he regarded the promise made to him as extending to his coming and his reign.

It may be remarked that there are some important variations in the manuscripts in regard to this verse. The expression “according to the flesh” is omitted in many MSS., and is now left out by Griesbach in his New Testament. It is omitted also by the ancient Syriac and Ethiopic versions, and by the Latin Vulgate. ¶ To sit on his throne. To be his successor in his kingdom. Saul was the first of the kings of Israel. The kingdom was taken away from him and his posterity, and conferred on David and his descendants. It was determined that it should be continued in the family of David, and no more go out of his family, as it had from the family of Saul. The peculiar characteristic of David as king, or that which distinguished him from the other kings of the earth, was that he reigned over the people of God. Israel was his chosen people, and the kingdom was over that nation. Hence he that should reign over the people of God, though in a manner somewhat different from David, would be regarded as occupying his throne, and as being his successor. The form of the administration might be varied, but it would still retain its prime characteristic as being a reign over the people of God. In this sense the Messiah sits on the throne of David. He is his descendant and successor. He has an empire over all the friends of the Most High. And as that kingdom is destined to fill the earth, and to be eternal in the heavens, so it may be said that it is a kingdom which shall have no end. It is spiritual, but not the less real; defended not with carnal weapons, but not the less really defended; advanced not by the sword and the din of arms, but not the less really advanced against principalities, and powers, and spiritual wickedness in high places; not under a visible head and earthly monarch, but not less really under the Captain of salvation and the King of kings.

31. He, seeing this before, &c. By the spirit of prophecy. From this it appears that David had distinct views of the great doctrines pertaining to the Messiah. ¶ Spake, &c. See Ps. xvi. ¶ That his soul, &c. See Notes on ver. 27.

32. This Jesus. Peter, having shown that it was predicted that the Messiah would rise, now affirms that such a resurrection occurred in the case of Jesus. If it was a matter of prophecy, all objection to the truth of the doctrine was taken away, and the only question was whether there was evidence that this had been done. The proof of this Peter now alleges, and offers his own testimony, and that of his brethren, to the truth of this great and glorious fact. ¶ We are all witnesses. It seems probable that Peter refers here to the whole hundred and twenty who were present, and who were ready to attest it in any manner. The matter which was to be proved was that Jesus was seen alive after he had been put to death. The apostles were appointed to bear witness of this. We are told by Paul (1 Co. xv. 6) that he was seen by more than five hundred brethren, that is, Christians, at one time. The hundred and twenty assembled on this occasion were doubtless part of the number, and were ready to attest this. This was the proof that Peter alleged; and the strength of this proof was, and should have been, perfectly irresistible. (1) They had seen him themselves. They did not conjecture it or reason about it; but they had the evidence on which men act every day, and which must be regarded as satisfactory—the evidence of their own senses. (2) The number was such they could not be imposed on. If one hundred and twenty persons could not prove a plain matter of fact, nothing could be established by testimony; there could be no way of arriving at any facts. (3) The thing to be established was a plain matter. It was not that they saw him rise. That they never pretended. Impostors would have done this. But it was that they saw him, talked, walked, ate, drank with him, being alive, AFTER he had been crucified. The fact of his death was matter of Jewish record, and no one called it in question. The only fact for Christianity to make out was that he was seen alive afterward, and this was attested by many witnesses. (4) They had no interest in deceiving the world in this thing. There was no prospect of pleasure, wealth, or honour in doing it. (5) They offered themselves now as ready to endure any sufferings, or to die, in attestation of the truth of this event.

33. Therefore being by the right hand. The right hand among the Hebrews was often used to denote power; and the expression here means, not that he was exalted to the right hand of God, but by his power. He was raised from the dead by his power, and borne to heaven, triumphant over all his enemies. The use of the word right hand to denote power is common in the Scriptures: Job xl. 14, "Thine own right hand can save thee;" Ps. xvii. 7, "Thou savest by thy right hand them that trust in thee;"

34 For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith

Ps. xviii. 35; xx. 6; xxi. 8; xliv. 3; lx. 5, &c. ¶ Exalted. Constituted King and Messiah in heaven. Raised up from his condition of humiliation to the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, Jn. xvii. 5. ¶ And having received, &c. The Holy Ghost was promised to the disciples before his death, Jn. xiv. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 13-15. It was expressly declared, (1) That the Holy Ghost would not be given except the Lord Jesus should return to heaven (Jn. xvi. 7); and (2) That this gift was in the power of the Father, and that he would send him, Jn. xiv. 26; xv. 26. This promise was now fulfilled, and those who witnessed the extraordinary scene before them could not doubt that it was the effect of divine power. ¶ Hath shed forth this, &c. This power of speaking different languages and declaring the truth of the gospel. In this way Peter accounts for the remarkable events before them. What had occurred could not be produced by new wine, ver. 15. It was expressly foretold, ver. 16-21. It was predicted that Jesus would rise, ver. 22-31. The apostles were witnesses that he had risen, and that he had promised that the Holy Spirit would descend; and the fulfilment of this promise was a rational way of accounting for the scene before them. It was unanswerable; and the effect on those who witnessed it was such as might be expected.

34, 35. For David is not ascended into the heavens. That is, David has not risen from the dead and ascended to heaven. This further shows that Ps. xvi. could not refer to David, but must refer to the Messiah. Great as they esteemed David, and much as they were accustomed to apply these expressions of the Scripture to him, yet they could not be applicable to him. They must refer to some other being; and especially that passage which Peter now proceeds to quote. It was of great importance to show that these expressions could not apply to David, and also that David himself, ¶ The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand,

35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

36 Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God

bore testimony to the exalted character and dignity of the Messiah. Hence Peter here adduces David himself as affirming that the Messiah was to be exalted to a dignity far above his own. This does not affirm that David was not saved, or that his spirit had not ascended to heaven, but that he had not been exalted in the heavens in the sense in which Peter was speaking of the Messiah. ¶ But he saith himself. Ps. cx. 1. ¶ The LORD. The small capitals used in translating the word LORD in the Bible denote that the original word is Jehovah. The Hebrews regarded this as the peculiar name of God, a name incommunicable to any other being. It is not applied to any being but God in the Scriptures. The Jews had such a reverence for it that they never pronounced it; but when it occurred in the Scriptures they pronounced another name, Adoni. Here it means, Jehovah said, &c. ¶ My Lord. This is a different word in the Hebrew—it is Adoni, אָדֹנִי. It properly is applied by a servant to his master, or a subject to his sovereign, or is used as a title of respect by an inferior to a superior. It means here, “Jehovah said to him whom I, David, acknowledge to be my superior and sovereign.” Thus, though he regarded him as his descendant according to the flesh, yet he regarded him also as his superior and Lord. By reference to this passage our Saviour confounded the Pharisees, Mat. xxii. 42-46. That the passage in this Psalm refers to the Messiah is clear. Our Saviour, in Mat. xxii. 42, expressly applied it thus, and in such a manner as to show that this was the well-understood doctrine of the Jews. See Notes on Mat. xxii. 42, &c.

36. Therefore let all, &c. “Convinced by the prophecies, by our testimony, and by the remarkable scenes exhibited on the day of Pentecost, let all be convinced that the true Messiah has come and has been exalted to heaven.”

¶ House of Israel. The word house often means family: “let all the family hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both **Lord and Christ.*<sup>1</sup>

37 Now when they heard this,

of Israel, that is, all the nation of the Jews, know this." ¶ Know assuredly. Be assured, or know without any hesitation or possibility of mistake. This is the sum of his argument or his discourse. He had established the points which he purposed to prove, and he now applies it to his hearers. ¶ God hath made. God hath appointed or constituted. See ch. v. 31. ¶ That same Jesus. The very person who had suffered. He was raised with the same body, and had the same soul; he was the same being, as distinguished from all others. So Christians, in the resurrection, will be the same beings that they were before they died. ¶ Whom ye crucified. See ver. 23. There was nothing better fitted to show them the guilt of having done this than the argument which Peter used. He showed them that God had sent him as the Messiah, and that he had showed his love for him in raising him from the dead. The Son of God, and the hope of their nation, they had put to death. He was not an impostor, nor a man sowing sedition, nor a blasphemer, but the Messiah of God; and they had imbrued their hands in his blood. There is nothing better fitted to make sinners fear and tremble than to show them that, in rejecting Christ, they have rejected God; in refusing to serve him they have refused to serve God. The crime of sinners has a double malignity, as committed against a kind and lovely Saviour, and against the God who loved him, and appointed him to save men. Comp. ch. iii. 14, 15. ¶ Both Lord. The word lord properly denotes proprietor, master, or sovereign. Here it means clearly that God had exalted him to be the king so long expected; and that he had given him dominion in the heavens, or, as we should say, made him ruler of all things. The extent of this dominion may be seen in Jn. xvii. 2; Ep. i. 21, &c. In the exercise of this office, he now rules in heaven and on earth, and will yet come to judge the world. This truth was particularly fitted to excite their fear. They had murdered their sovereign, now shown to be raised from the dead, and in-they were "pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, "what shall we do?"

trusted with infinite power. They had reason, therefore, to fear that he would come forth in vengeance, and punish them for their crimes. Sinners, in opposing the Saviour, are at war with their living and mighty sovereign and Lord. He has all power, and it is not safe to contend against the judge of the living and the dead. ¶ And Christ. Messiah. They had thus crucified the hope of their nation; imbrued their hands in the blood of him to whom the prophets had looked; and put to death that Holy One, the prospect of whose coming had sustained the most holy men of the world in affliction, and cheered them when they looked on to future years. He who was the hope of their fathers had come, and they had put him to death; and it is no wonder that the consciousness of this—that a sense of guilt, and shame, and confusion should overwhelm their minds, and lead them to ask, in deep distress, what they should do.

37. Now when they heard this. When they heard this declaration of Peter, and this proof that Jesus was the Messiah. There was no fanaticism in his discourse; it was cool, close, pungent reasoning. He proved to them the truth of what he was saying, and thus prepared the way for this effect. ¶ They were pricked in their heart. The word translated were pricked, καρύβδνω, is not used elsewhere in the New Testament. It properly denotes to pierce or penetrate with a needle, lancet, or sharp instrument; and then to pierce with grief, or acute pain of any kind. It answers precisely to our word compunction. It implies also the idea of sudden as well as acute grief. In this case it means that they were suddenly and deeply affected with anguish and alarm at what Peter had said. The causes of their grief may have been these: (1) Their sorrow that the Messiah had been put to death by his own countrymen. (2) Their deep sense of guilt in having done this. There would be mingled here a remembrance of ingratitude, and a consciousness that they had been guilty of murder of the most aggravated and horrid kind, that of having killed their own Messiah. (3) The fear of his wrath. He was still alive; exalted to be their Lord; and intrusted with all power. They were afraid of his vengeance; they were conscious that they deserved it; and they supposed that they were exposed to it. (4) What they had done could not be undone. The guilt remained; they could not wash it out. They had imbruied their hands in the blood of innocence, and the guilt of that oppressed their souls. This expresses the usual feelings which sinners have when they are convicted of sin. ¶ Men and brethren. This was an expression denoting affectionate earnestness. Just before this they mocked the disciples, and charged them with being filled with new wine, ver. 13. They now treated them with respect and confidence. The views which sinners have of Christians and Christian ministers are greatly changed when they are under conviction for sin. Before that they may deride and oppose them; then, they are glad to be taught by the obscurest Christian, and even cling to a minister of the gospel as if he could save them by his own power. ¶ What shall we do? What shall we do to avoid the wrath of this crucified and exalted Messiah? They were apprehensive of his vengeance, and they wished to know how to avoid it. Never was a more important question asked than this. It is the question which all convicted sinners ask. It implies an apprehension of danger, a sense of guilt, and a readiness to yield the will to the claims of God. This was the same question asked by Paul (Ac. ix. 6), "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and by the jailer (Ac. xvi. 30), "He . . . came, trembling, . . . and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The state of mind in this case—the case of a convicted sinner—consists in, (1) A deep sense of the evil of the past life; remembrance of a thousand crimes perhaps before forgotten; a pervading and deepening conviction that the heart, and conversation, and life have been evil, and deserve condemnation. (2) Apprehension about the justice of God; alarm when the mind looks upward to him, or onward to the day of death and judgment. (3) An earnest wish, amounting sometimes to agony, to be delivered from this sense of condemnation and this apprehension of the future. (4) A readiness to sacrifice all to the will of God; to surrender the governing purpose of the mind, and to do what he requires. In this state the soul is prepared to receive the offers of eternal life; and when the sinner comes to this, the offers of mercy meet his case, and he yields himself to the Lord Jesus, and finds peace.

In regard to this discourse of Peter, and this remarkable result, we may observe, (1) That this is the first discourse which was preached after the ascension of Christ, and is a model which the ministers of religion should imitate. (2) It is a clear and close argument. There is no ranting, no declamation, nothing but truth presented in a clear and striking manner. It abounds with proof of his main point, and supposes that his hearers were rational beings, and capable of being influenced by truth. Ministers have no right to address men as incapable of reason and thought, nor to imagine, because they are speaking on religious subjects, that therefore they are at liberty to speak nonsense. (3) Though these were eminent sinners, and had added to the crime of murdering the Messiah that of deriding the Holy Ghost and the ministers of the gospel, yet Peter reasoned with them coolly, and endeavoured to convince them of their guilt. Men should be treated as endowed with reason, and as capable of seeing the force and beauty of the great truths of religion. (4) The arguments of Peter were adapted to produce this effect on their minds, and to impress them deeply with the sense of their guilt. He proved to them that they had been guilty of putting the Messiah to death; that God had raised him up, and that they were now in the midst of the scenes which established one strong proof of the truth of what he was saying. No class of truths could have been so well adapted to make an impression of their guilt as these. (5) Conviction for sin is a rational process on a sinner's mind. It is the proper state produced by a view of past sins. It is suffering truth to make an appropriate impression; suffering the mind to feel as it ought to feel. The man who is guilty ought to be willing to see and confess it. It is no disgrace to confess an error, or to feel deeply when we know we are guilty. Disgrace consists in a hypocritical desire to conceal crime; in the pride that is unwilling to avow it; in the falsehood which denies it. To feel

it and to acknowledge it is the mark of an open and ingenuous mind. (6) These same truths are adapted still to produce conviction for sin. The sinner's treatment of the Messiah should produce grief and alarm. He did not murder him, but he has rejected him; he did not crown him with thorns, but he has despised him; he did not insult him when hanging on the cross, but he has a thousand times insulted him since; he did not pierce his side with the spear, but he has pierced his heart by rejecting him and contemning his mercy. For these things he should weep. In the Saviour's resurrection he has also a deep interest. He rose as the pledge that we may rise; and when the sinner looks forward, he should remember that he must meet the ascended Son of God. The Saviour reigns; he lives, Lord of all. The sinner's deeds now are aimed at his throne, and his heart, and his crown. All his crimes are seen by his sovereign, and it is not safe to mock the Son of God on his throne, or to despise him who will soon come to judgment. When the sinner feels these truths he should tremble and cry out, What shall I do? (7) We see here how the Spirit operates in producing conviction of sin. It is not in an arbitrary manner; it is in accordance with truth, and by the truth. Nor have we a right to expect that he will convict and convert men except as the truth is presented to their minds. They who desire success in the gospel should present clear, striking, and impressive truth, for such only God is accustomed to bless. (8) We have in the conduct of Peter and the other apostles a striking instance of the power of the gospel. Just before, Peter, trembling and afraid, had denied his Master with an oath; now, in the presence of the murderers of the Son of God, he boldly charged them with their crime, and dared their fury. Just before, all the disciples forsook the Lord Jesus and fled; now, in the presence of his murderers, they lifted their voice and proclaimed their guilt and danger, even in the city where he had been just arraigned and put to death. What could have produced this change but the power of God? And is there not proof here that a religion which produces such changes came from heaven?

38. Then Peter said unto them. Peter had been the chief speaker, though others had also addressed them. He now, in the name of all, directed the multitude what to do. ¶ Repent. See Notes on Mat. iii. 2. Repentance implies sorrow for sin as committed against God, with a purpose to forsake it. It is not merely a fear of the consequences of sin, or of the wrath of God in hell. It is such a view of sin, as evil in itself, as to lead the mind to hate it and forsake it. Laying aside all view of the punishment of sin, the true penitent hates it. Even if sin were the means of procuring him happiness; if it would promote his gratification and be unattended with any future punishment, he would hate it and turn from it. The mere fact that it is evil, and that God hates it, is a sufficient reason why those who are truly penitent hate it and forsake it. False repentance dreads the consequences of sin; true repentance dreads sin itself. These persons whom Peter addressed had been merely alarmed; they were afraid of wrath, and especially of the wrath of the Messiah. They had no true sense of sin as an evil, but were simply afraid of punishment. This alarm Peter did not regard as by any means genuine repentance. Such conviction for sin would soon wear off, unless their repentance became thorough and complete. Hence he told them to repent, to turn from sin, to exercise sorrow for it as an evil and bitter thing, and to express their sorrow in the proper manner. We may learn here, (1) That there is no safety in mere conviction for sin: it may soon pass off, and leave the soul as thoughtless as before. (2) There is no goodness or holiness in mere alarm or conviction. The devils . . . tremble. A man may fear who yet has a firm purpose to do evil, if he can do it with impunity. (3) Many are greatly troubled and alarmed who never repent. There is no situation where souls are so easily deceived as here. Alarm is taken for repentance; trembling for godly sorrow; and the fear of wrath is taken to be the true fear of God. (4) True repentance is the only thing in such a state of mind that can give any relief. An ingenuous confession of sin, a solemn purpose to forsake it, and a true hatred of it, is the only thing that can give the mind composure. Such is the constitution of the mind that nothing else will furnish relief. But the moment we are willing to make an open confession of guilt, the mind is delivered of its burden, and the convicted soul finds peace. Till this is done, and the hold on sin is broken, there can be no peace. (5) We see here what direction is to be given to a convicted sinner. We are not to direct him to wait; nor to lead him to suppose that he is in a good way; nor to tell him to continue to seek; nor to call him a mourner; nor to take sides with him, as if God were wrong and harsh; nor to advise him to read, and search, and postpone the subject to a future time. We are to direct him to repent; to mourn over his sins, and to forsake them. Religion demands that he should at once surrender himself to God by genuine repentance; by confession that God is right and that he is wrong; and by a firm purpose to live a life of holiness. ¶ Be baptized. See Notes on Mat. iii. 6. The direction which Christ gave to his apostles was that they should baptize all who believed, Mat. xxviii. 19; Mar. xvi. 16. The Jews had not been baptized; and a baptism now would be a profession of the religion of Christ, or a declaration made before the world that they embraced Jesus as their Messiah. It was equivalent to saying that they should publicly and professedly embrace Jesus Christ as their Saviour. The gospel requires such a profession, and no one is at liberty to withhold it. A similar declaration is to be made to all who are inquiring the way to life. They are to exercise repentance; and then, without any unnecessary delay, to evince it by partaking of the ordinances of the gospel. If men are unwilling to profess religion they have none. If they will not, in the proper way, show that they are truly attached to Christ, it is proof that they have no such attachment. Baptism is the application of water, as expressive of the need of purification, and as emblematic of the influences from God that can alone cleanse the soul. It is also a form of dedication to the service of God. ¶ In the name of Jesus Christ. Not is, into, but is, upon. The usual form of baptism is into the name of the Father, &c.—is. Here it does not mean to be baptized by the authority of Jesus Christ, but it means to be baptized for him and his service; to be consecrated in this way, and by this public profession, to him and to his cause. The expression is literally upon the name of Jesus Christ: that is, as the foundation of the baptism, or as that on which its propriety rested or was based. In other words, it is with an acknowledgment of him in that act as being what his name imports—the Sinner's only Hope, his Redeemer, Lord, Justifier, King (Prof. Hackett, in loco). The name of Jesus Christ means the same as Jesus Christ himself. To be baptized to his name is to be devoted to him. The word name is often thus used. The profession which they were to make amounted to this: a confession of sins; a hearty purpose to turn from them; a reception of Jesus as the Messiah and as a Saviour; and a determination to become his followers and to be devoted to his service. Thus (1 Co. x. 2), to be baptized unto Moses means to take him as a leader and guide. It does not follow that, in administering the ordinance of baptism, they used only the name of Jesus Christ. It is much more probable that they used the form prescribed by the Saviour himself (Mat. xxviii. 19); though, as the peculiar mark of a Christian is that he receives and honours Jesus Christ, this name is used here as implying the whole. The same thing occurs in Ac. xix. 5. ¶ For the remission of sins. Not merely the sin of crucifying the Messiah, but of all sins. There is nothing in baptism itself that can wash away sin. That can be done only by the pardoning mercy of God through the atonement of Christ. But baptism is expressive of a willingness to be pardoned in that way, and is a solemn declaration of our conviction that there is no other way of remission. He who comes to be baptized, comes with a professed conviction that he is a sinner; that there is no other way of mercy but in the gospel, and with a professed willingness to comply with the terms of salvation, and to receive it as it is offered through Jesus Christ. ¶ And ye shall receive, &c. The gift of the Holy Ghost here does not mean his extraordinary gifts, or the power of working miracles, but it simply means, you shall partake of the influences of the Holy Ghost as far as they may be

adapted to your case—as far as may be needful for your comfort, peace, and sanctification. There is no evidence that they were all endowed with the power of working miracles, nor does the connection of the passage require us thus to understand it. Nor does it mean that they had not been awakened by his influences. All true conviction is from him, Jn. xvi. 8–10. But it is also the office of the Spirit to comfort, to enlighten, to give peace, and thus to give evidence that the soul is born again. To this, probably, Peter refers; and this all who are born again and profess faith in Christ possess. There is peace, calmness, joy; there is evidence of piety, and that evidence is the product of the influences of the Spirit. “The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace,” &c., Ga. v. 22, 24.

39. For the promise. That is, the promise respecting the particular thing of which he was speaking—the influences of the Holy Ghost. This promise he had adduced in the beginning of his discourse (ver. 17), and he now applies it to them. As the Spirit was promised to descend on Jews and their sons and daughters, it was applicable to them in the circumstances in which they then were. The only hope of lost sinners is in the promises of God, and the only thing that can give comfort to a soul that is convicted of sin is the hope that God will pardon and save. ¶ To you. To you Jews, even though you have crucified the Messiah. The promise had especial reference to the Jewish people. ¶ To your children. In Joel, to their sons and daughters, who would, nevertheless, be old enough to prophesy. Similar promises occur in Is. xliv. 3, “I will pour my Spirit on thy seed, and my blessing on thine offspring;” and in Is. lix. 21, “My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed’s seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever.” In these and similar places their descendants or posterity are denoted. It does not refer merely to children as children, and should not be adduced as applicable exclusively to infants. It is a promise to parents that the blessings of salvation shall not be confined to parents, but shall be extended also to their posterity. Under this promise parents may be encouraged to train up their children for God; they are authorized to devote them to him in the ordinance of Christian baptism, and they may trust in his gracious purpose thus to perpetuate the blessings of salvation from age to age. ¶ To all. To the whole race; not limited to Jews. ¶ Afar off. To those in other lands. It is probable that Peter here referred to the Jews who were scattered in other nations; for he does not seem yet to have understood that the gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles. See ch. x. Yet the promise was equally applicable to the Gentiles as the Jews, and the apostles were afterward brought so to understand it, Ac. x.; Ro. x. 12, 14–20; xi. The Gentiles are sometimes clearly indicated by the expression “afar off” (Ep. ii. 13, 17); and they are represented as having been brought nigh by the blood of Christ. The phrase is equally applicable to those who have been far off from God by their sins and their evil affections. To them also the promise is extended if they will return. ¶ Even as many, &c. The promise is not to those who do not hear the gospel, nor to those who do not obey it; but it is to those to whom God in his gracious providence shall send it. He has the power and right to pardon. The meaning of Peter is, that the promise is ample, full, free; that it is fitted to all, and may be applied to all; that there is no defect or want in the provisions or promises, but that God may extend it to whomsoever he pleases. We see here how ample and full are the offers of mercy. God is not limited in the provisions of his grace; but the plan is applicable to all mankind. It is also the purpose of God to send it to all men, and he has given a solemn charge to his church to do it. We cannot reflect but with deep pain on the fact that, although these provisions have been made—fully made; that they are adapted to all men; but that yet they have been extended by his people to so small a portion of the human family. If the promise of life is to all, it is the duty of the church to send to all the message of mercy.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying,

40. Many other words. This discourse, though one of the longest in the New Testament, is but an outline. It contains, however, the substance of the plan of salvation, and is admirably arranged to attain its object. ¶ Testify. Bear witness to. He bore witness to the promises of Christianity; to the truths pertaining to the danger of sinners; and to the truth respecting the character of that generation. ¶ Exhort. He entreated them by arguments and promises. ¶ Save yourselves. This expression here denotes, preserve yourselves from the influence, opinions, and fate of this generation. It implies that they were to use diligence and effort to deliver themselves. God deals with men as free agents. He calls upon them to put forth their own power and effort to be saved. Unless they put forth their own strength, they will never be saved. When they are saved, they will ascribe to God the praise for having inclined them to seek him, and for the grace whereby they are saved. ¶ This generation. This age or race of men; the Jews then living. They were not to apprehend danger from them from which they were to deliver themselves; but they were to apprehend danger from being with them, united in their plans, designs, and feelings. From the influence of their opinions, &c., they were to escape. That generation was signally corrupt and wicked. See Mat. xxiii.; xii. 39; xvi. 4; Mar. viii. 38. They had crucified the Messiah; and they were, for their sins, soon to be destroyed. ¶ Untoward. "Perverse, refractory, not easily guided or taught" (Webster). The same character our Saviour had given of that generation in Mat. xi. 16-19. This character they had shown uniformly. They were smooth, cunning, plausible; but they were corrupt in principle, and wicked in conduct. The Pharisees had a vast hold on the people. To break away from them was to set at defiance all their power and doctrines; to alienate themselves from their teachers and friends; to brave the authority of those in office, and those who had long claimed the right of teaching and guiding the nation. The chief danger of those who were now awakened was from that generation; that they would deride, or denounce, or persecute them, and induce them to abandon their seriousness, and turn back to their sins. And hence Peter exhorted them at once to break off from them, and give themselves to Christ. We may hence learn, (1) That if sinners will be saved they must make an effort. There is no promise to any unless they will exert themselves. (2) The principal danger which besets those who are awakened arises from their former companions. They are often wicked, cunning, rich, mighty. They may be their kindred, and will seek to drive off their serious impressions by derision, or argument, or persecution. They have a powerful hold on the affections, and they will seek to use it to prevent those who are awakened from becoming Christians. (3) Those who are awakened should resolve at once to break off from their evil companions, and unite themselves to Christ and his people. There may be no other way in which this can be done than by resolving to forsake altogether the society of those who are infidels, and scoffers, and profane. They should forsake the world, and give themselves up to God, and resolve to have only so much intercourse with the world, in any respect, as may be required by duty, and as may be consistent with a supreme purpose to live to the honour of God.

41. They that gladly received. The word rendered gladly means freely, cheerfully, joyfully. It implies that they did it without compulsion, and with joy. Religion is not compulsion. They who become Christians do it cheerfully; they do it rejoicing in the privilege of becoming reconciled to God through Jesus Christ. Though so many received his word and were baptized, yet it is implied that there were others who did not. It is probable that there were multitudes assembled who were alarmed, but who did not receive the word with joy. In all revivals there are many who become alarmed, and who are anxious about their souls, but who refuse to embrace the gospel, and again become thoughtless, and are ruined. ¶ His word. The message which Peter had spoken respecting the pardon of sin through Jesus Christ. ¶ Were baptized. That is, those who professed a readiness to embrace the offers of salvation. The narrative plainly implies that this was done the same day. Their conversion was instantaneous. The demand on them was to yield themselves at once to God. And their profession was made, and the ordinance which sealed their profession administered without delay. ¶ And the same day. The discourse of Peter commenced at nine o'clock in the morning, ver. 15. How long it continued it is not said; but the ceremony of admitting them to the church and of baptizing them was evidently performed on the same day. The mode in which this is done is not mentioned; but it is highly improbable that in the midst of the city of Jerusalem three thousand persons were wholly immersed in one day. The whole narrative supposes that it was all done in the city; and yet there is no probability that there were conveniences there for immersing so many persons in a single day. Besides, in the ordinary way of administering baptism by immersion, it is difficult to conceive that so many persons could have been immersed in so short a time. There is, indeed, here no positive proof that they were not immersed; but the narrative is one of those incidental circumstances often much more satisfactory than philological discussion, that show the extreme improbability that all this was done by wholly immersing them in water. It may be further remarked that here is an example of very quick admission to the church. It was the first great work of grace under the gospel. It was the model of all revivals of religion. And it was doubtless intended that this should be a specimen of the manner in which the ministers of religion should act in regard to admissions to the Christian church. Prudence is indeed required; but this example furnishes no warrant for advising those who profess their willingness to obey Jesus Christ, to delay uniting with the church. If persons give evidence of piety, of true hatred of sin, and of attachment to the Lord Jesus; they should unite themselves to his people without delay. ¶ There were added. To the company of disciples, or to the followers of Christ. ¶ Souls. Persons. Comp. 1 Pe. iii. 20; Ge. xii. 5. It is not affirmed that all this took place in one part of Jerusalem, or that it was all done at once; but it is probable that this was what was afterward ascertained to be the fruit of this day's labour, the result of this revival of religion. This was the first effusion of the Holy Spirit under the preaching of the gospel; and it shows that such scenes are to be expected in the church, and that the gospel is fitted to work a rapid and mighty change in the hearts of men.

42 And they continued steadfastly. They persevered in, or they adhered to. This is the inspired record of the result. That any of these apostatized is nowhere recorded, and is not to be presumed. Though they had been suddenly converted; though they were suddenly admitted to the church; though they were exposed to much persecution and contempt, and to many trials, yet the record is that they adhered to the doctrines and duties of the Christian religion. The word rendered continued steadfastly — περισταγετούσις — means attending one, remaining by his side, not leaving or forsaking him. ¶ The apostles' doctrine. This does not mean that they held or believed the doctrines of the apostles, though that was true; but it means that they adhered to, or attended on, their teaching or instruction. The word doctrine has now a technical sense, and means a collection and arrangement of abstract views supposed to be contained in the Bible. In the Scriptures the word means simply teaching; and the expression here denotes that they continued to attend on their instructions. One evidence of conversion is a desire to be instructed in the doctrines and duties of religion, and a willingness to attend on the preaching of the gospel. ¶ And fellowship. The word rendered fellowship, κοινωνία, is often render communion. It properly denotes having things in common, or participation, society, friendship. It may apply to anything which may be possessed in common, or in which all may partake. Thus all Christians have the same hope of heaven; the same joys; the same hatred of sin; the same enemies to contend with. Thus they have the same subjects of conversation, of feeling, and of prayer; or they have communion in these things. And thus the early Christians had their property in common. The word here may apply to either or to all of these things—to their conversation, their prayers, their dangers, or their property; and means that they were united to the apostles, and participated with them in whatever befell them. It may be added that the effect of a revival of religion is to unite Christians more and more, and to bring those who were before separated to union and love. Christians feel that they are a band of brethren, and that, however much they were separated before they became Christians, now they have great and important interests in common; they are united in feelings, in interests, in dangers, in conflicts, in opinions, and in the hopes of a blessed immortality. ¶ Breaking of bread. The Syriac renders this “the eucharist,” or the Lord’s supper. It cannot, however, be determined whether this refers to their partaking of their ordinary food together, or to feasts of charity, or to the Lord’s supper. The bread of the Hebrews was made commonly into cakes, thin, hard, and brittle, so that it was broke instead of being cut. Hence, to denote intimacy or friendship, the phrase to break bread together would be very expressive in the same way as the Greeks denoted it by drinking together, συρτίσσειν. From the expression used in ver. 44, comp. with ver. 46, that they had all things common, it would rather seem to be implied that this referred to the participation of their ordinary meals. The action of breaking bread was commonly performed by the master or head of a family immediately after asking a blessing (Lightfoot). ¶ In prayers. This was one effect of the influence of the Spirit, and an evidence of their change. A genuine revival will be always followed by a love of prayer.

43. And fear came. That is, there was great reverence or awe. The multitude had just before derided them (ver. 13); but so striking and manifest was the power of God on this occasion, that it silenced all clamours, and produced a general veneration and awe. The effect of a great work of God’s grace is commonly to produce an unusual seriousness and solemnity in a community, even among those who are not converted. It restrains, subdues, and silences opposition. ¶ Every soul. Every person or individual; that is, upon the people generally; not only on those who became Christians, but upon the multitudes who witnessed these things. All things were fitted to produce this fear: the recent crucifixion of Jesus of Nazareth; the wonders that attended that event; the events of the day of Pentecost; and the miracles performed by the apostles, were all fitted to diffuse solemnity, thought, anxiety through the community. ¶ Many wonders and signs. See Notes on ver. 22. This was promised by the Saviour, Mar. xvi. 17. Some of the miracles which they wrought are specified in the following chapters.

44. All that believed. That is, that believed that Jesus was the Messiah; for that was the distinguishing point by which they were known from others.

¶ Were together. Were united; were joined in the same thing. It does not mean that they lived in the same house, but they were united in the same community, or engaged in the same thing. They were doubtless often together in the same place for prayer and praise. One of the best means for strengthening the faith of young converts is for them often to meet together for prayer, conversation, and praise. ¶ Had all things common. That is, all their property or possessions. See ch. iv. 32-37; v. 1-10. The apostles, in the time of the Saviour, evidently had all their property in common stock, and Judas was made their treasurer. They regarded themselves as one family, having common wants, and there was no use or propriety in their possessing extensive property by themselves. Yet even then it is probable that some of them retained an interest in their property which was not supposed to be necessary to be devoted to the common use. It is evident that John thus possessed property which he retained, Jn. xix. 27. And it is clear that the Saviour did not command

them to give up their property into a common stock, nor did the apostles enjoin it: Ac. v. 4, "While it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold was it not in thine own power?" It was, therefore, perfectly voluntary, and was evidently adapted to the peculiar circumstances of the early converts. Many of them came from abroad. They were from Parthia, and Media, and Arabia, and Rome, and Africa, &c. It is probable, also, that they now remained longer in Jerusalem than they had at first proposed; and it is not at all improbable that they would be denied now the usual hospitalities of the Jews, and excluded from their customary kindness, because they had embraced Jesus of Nazareth, who had been just put to death. In these circumstances, it was natural and proper that they should share their property while they remained together.

45. And sold. That is, they sold as much as was necessary in order to procure the means of providing for the wants of each other. ¶ Possessions. Property, particularly real estate. This word, κτίσματα, refers properly to their fixed property, as lands, houses, vineyards, &c. The word rendered goods, ινάργεια, refers to their personal or movable property. ¶ And parted them to all. They distributed them to supply the wants of their poorer brethren, according to their necessities. ¶ As every man had need. This expression limits and fixes the meaning of what is said before. The passage does not mean that they sold all their possessions, or that they relinquished their title to all their property, but that they so far regarded all as common as to be willing to part with it IF it was needful to supply the wants of the others. Hence the property was laid at the disposal of the apostles, and they were desired to distribute it freely to meet the wants of the poor, ch. iv. 34, 35.

This was an important incident in the early propagation of religion, and it may suggest many useful reflections.

1. We see the effect of religion. The love of property is one of the strongest affections which men have. There is nothing that will overcome it but religion. That will; and one of the first effects of the gospel was to loosen the hold of Christians on property.

2. It is the duty of the church to provide for the wants of its poor and needy members. There can be no doubt that property should now be regarded as so far common as that the wants of the poor should be supplied by those who are rich. Comp. Mat. xxvi. 11.

3. If it be asked why the early disciples evinced this readiness to part with their property in this manner, it may be replied, (1) That the apostles had done it before them. The family of the Saviour had all things common. (2) It was the nature of religion to do it. (3) The circumstances of the persons assembled on this occasion were such as to require it. They were many of them from distant regions, and probably many of them of the poorer class of the people in Jerusalem. In this they evinced what should be done in behalf of the poor in the church at all times.

4. If it be asked whether this was done commonly among the early Christians, it may be replied that there is no evidence that it was. It is mentioned here, and in ch. iv. 32-37, and ch. v. 1-7. It does not appear that it was done even by all who were afterward converted in Judea; and there is no evidence that it was done in Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth, Philippi, Rome, &c. That the effect of religion was to make men liberal and willing to provide for the poor there can be no doubt. See 2 Co. viii. 19; ix. 2; 1 Co. xvi. 2; Ga. ii. 10. But there is no proof that it was common to part with their possessions and to lay them at the feet of the apostles. Religion does not contemplate, evidently, that men should break up all the arrangements in society, but it contemplates that those who have property should be ready and willing to part with it for the help of the poor and needy.

5. If it be asked, then, whether all the arrangements of property should be broken up now, and believers have all things in common, we are prepared to answer No. For, (1) This was an extraordinary case. (2) It was not even enjoined by the apostles on them. (3) It was practised nowhere else. (4) It would be impracticable. No community and breaking bread <sup>4</sup>from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart,

where all things were held in common has long prospered. It has been attempted often, by pagans, by infidels, and by fanatical sects of Christians. It ends soon in anarchy, licentiousness, idleness, and profligacy; or the more cunning secure the mass of the property, and control the whole. Till all men are made alike, there could be no hope of such a community; and if there could be, it would not be desirable. God evidently intended that men should be excited to industry by the hope of gain; and then he demands that their gains shall be devoted to his service. Still, this was a noble instance of Christian generosity, and evinced the power of religion in loosing the hold which men commonly have on the world. It rebukes also those professors of religion, of whom, alas! there are many, who give nothing to benefit either the souls or bodies of their fellow-men.

46. With one accord. Comp. ch. i. 14; ii. 1. ¶ In the temple. This was the public place of worship; and the disciples were not disposed to leave the place where their fathers had so long worshipped God. This does not mean that they were constantly in the temple, but only at the customary hours of prayer—at nine o'clock in the morning, and at three in the afternoon. ¶ And breaking bread. See Notes on ver. 42. ¶ From house to house. In the margin, "at home." So the Syriac and Arabic. The common interpretation, however, is, that they did it in their various houses, now in this and now in that, as might be convenient. If it refers to their ordinary meals, then it means that they partook in common of what they possessed, and the expression "did eat their meat" seems to imply that this refers to their common meals, and not to the Lord's supper. ¶ Did eat their meat. Did partake of their food. The word meat with us is applied to flesh. In the Bible, and in old English authors, it is applied to provisions of any kind. Here it means all kinds of sustenance; that which nourished them—τροφής—and the use of this word proves that it does not refer to the Lord's supper; for that ordinance is nowhere represented as designed for an ordinary meal, or to nourish the body. Comp. 1 Co. xi. 33, 34. ¶ With gladness. With rejoicing. This is one of the effects of religion. It is far from gloom; it diffuses happiness over the mind; it bestows additional joy in the participation of even our ordinary pleasures. ¶ Singleness of heart. This means with a sincere and pure heart. They were satisfied and thankful. They were not perplexed or anxious; nor were they solicitous for the luxurious living, or aspiring after the vain objects of the men of the world. Comp. Ro. xii. 8; 2 Co. i. 12; Col. iii. 22; Ep. vi. 5.

47. Praising God. See Lu. xxiv. 53. ¶ And having favour. See Lu. ii. 52. ¶ With all the people. That is, with the great mass of the people; with the people generally. It does not mean that all the people had become reconciled to Christianity; but their humble, serious, and devoted lives won the favour of the great mass of the community, and silenced opposition and cavil. This was a remarkable effect, but God has power to silence opposition; and there it nothing so well fitted to do this as the humble and consistent lives of his friends. ¶ And the Lord added. See ch. v. 14; xi. 24, &c. It was the Lord who did this. There was no power in man to do it; and the Christian loves to trace all increase of the church to the grace of God. ¶ Added. Caused, or inclined them to be joined to the church. ¶ The church. To the assembly of the followers of Christ—τὴν ἵκτλησίαν. The word rendered church properly means those who are called out, and is applied to Christians as being called out, or separated from the world. It is used but three times in the gospels, Mat. xvi. 18; xviii. 17, twice. It occurs frequently in other parts of the New Testament, and usually as applied to the followers of Christ. Comp. Ac. v. 11; vii. 38; viii. 1, 3; ix. 31; xi. 22, 26; xii. 1, 5, &c. It is used in classic writers to denote an assembly of any kind, and is twice thus used in the New Testament (Ac. xix. 39, 41), where it is translated "assembly." ¶ Such as should be saved. This whole phrase is a translation of a participle—τοὺς σωζόμενους. It does not express any purpose that they should be saved, but simply the fact that they were those who would be, or who were about to be saved. It is clear, however, from this expression, that those who became members of the church were those who continued to adorn their profession, or who gave proof that they were sincere Christians. It is implied here, also, that those who are to be saved will join themselves to the church of God. This is everywhere required; and it constitutes one evidence of piety when they are willing to face the world, and give themselves at once to the service of the Lord Jesus. Two remarks may be made on the last verse of this chapter; one is, that the effect of a consistent Christian life will be to command the respect of the world; and the other is, that the effect will be continually to increase the number of those who shall be saved. In this case they were daily added to it; the church was constantly increasing; and the same result may be expected in all cases where there is similar zeal, self-denial, consistency, and prayer.

We have now contemplated the foundation of the Christian church, and the first glorious revival of religion. This chapter deserves to be profoundly studied by all ministers of the gospel, and by all who pray for the prosperity of the kingdom of God. It should excite our fervent gratitude that God has left this record of the first great work of grace, and our earnest prayers that he would multiply and extend such scenes until the earth shall be filled with his glory.

CHAPTER III.

1. Peter and John went up, &c. In Lu. xxiv. 53, it is said that the apostles were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God. From Ac. ii. 46, it is clear that all the disciples were accustomed daily to resort to the temple for devotion. Whether they joined in the sacrifices of the temple-service is not said; but the thing is not improbable. This was the place and the manner in which they and their fathers had worshipped. They came slowly to the conclusion that they were to leave the temple, and they would naturally resort

2 And a certain man, lame from his mother's womb, was carried,

there with their countrymen to worship the God of their fathers. In the previous chapter (ii. 43) we are told in general that many wonders and signs were done by the hands of the apostles. From the many miracles which were performed, Luke selects one of which he gives a more full account, and especially as it gives him occasion to record another of the addresses of Peter to the Jews. An impostor would have been satisfied with the general statement that many miracles were performed. The sacred writers descend to particulars, and tell us where, and in relation to whom, they were performed. This is a proof that they were honest men, and did not intend to deceive. ¶ Into the temple. Not into the edifice properly called the temple, but into the court of the temple, where prayer was accustomed to be made. See Notes on Mat. xxi. 12. ¶ At the hour of prayer, &c. The Jewish day was divided into twelve equal parts; of course, the ninth hour would be about three o'clock P.M. This was the hour of evening prayer. Morning prayer was offered at nine o'clock. Comp. Ps. lv. 17; Da. vi. 10.

2. Lame from his mother's womb. The mention of this shows that there was no deception in the case. The man had been always lame; he was obliged to be carried; and he was well known to the Jews. ¶ Whom they laid daily. That is, his friends laid him there daily. He would therefore be well known to those who were in the habit of entering the temple. Among the ancients there were no hospitals for the sick, and no alms-houses for the poor. The poor were dependent, therefore, on the charity of those who were in better circumstances. It became an important matter for them to be placed where they would see many people. Hence it was customary to place them at the gates of rich men (Lu. xvi. 20); and they also sat by the highway to beg where many persons would pass, Mar. x. 46; Lu. xviii. 35; Jn. ix. 1-8. The entrance to the temple would be a favourable place for begging; for (1) great multitudes were accustomed to enter there; and (2) when going up for the purposes of religion, they would be whom they laid daily at <sup>b</sup>the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

3 Who, seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked an alms.

more inclined to give alms than at other times; and especially was this true of the Pharisees, who were particularly desirous of publicity in bestowing charity. It is recorded by Martial (i. 112) that the custom prevailed among the Romans of placing the poor by the gates of the temples; and the custom was also observed a long time in the Christian churches. ¶ At the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful. In regard to this gate there have been two opinions, one of which supposes that it was the gate commonly called Nicanor, which led from the court of the Gentiles to the court of the women (see Plan in Notes on Mat. xxi. 12), and the other that it was the gate at the eastern entrance of the temple, commonly called Susan. It is not easy to determine which is intended; though from the fact that what is here recorded occurred near Solomon's porch (ver. 11; comp. Plan of the Temple, Mat. xxi. 12), it seems probable that the latter was intended. This gate was large and splendid. It was made of Corinthian brass, a most valuable metal, and made a magnificent appearance (Josephus, Jewish Wars, b. v. ch. v. § 3). ¶ To ask alms. Charity.

3. Who, seeing Peter, &c. There is no evidence that he was acquainted with them or knew who they were. He asked of them as he was accustomed to do of the multitude that entered the temple.

4. Fastening his eyes. The word used here denotes to look intently, or with fixed attention. It is one of the peculiar words which Luke uses, Lu. iv. 20; xxii. 56; Ac. i. 10; iii. 12; vi. 15; vii. 55; x. 4; &c.—in all twelve times. It is used by no other writer in the New Testament, except by Paul twice, 2 Co. iii. 7, 13. ¶ Look on us. All this was done to fix the attention. He wished to call the attention of the man distinctly to himself, and to what he was about to do. It was also done that the upon him, with John, said, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them.

6 Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: <sup>c</sup>In the name

6. Silver and gold have I none. The man had asked for money; Peter assures him that he had not that to give; what he did was done, however, in such a way as to show his willingness to aid him if he had possessed money. ¶ Such as I have. Such as is in my power. It is not to be supposed that he meant to say that he originated this power himself, but only that it was intrusted to him. He immediately adds that it was derived solely from the Lord Jesus Christ. ¶ In the name. Comp. ch. iv. 10. In Mar. xvi. 17, 18, it is said, “These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.” The expression means by his authority, or in virtue of power derived from him. We are here struck with a remarkable difference between the manner in which the Lord Jesus wrought miracles and that in which it was done by his apostles. He did it in his own name and by virtue of his own power. The apostles never attempted to perform a miracle by their own power. It was only in the name of Jesus; and this circumstance alone shows that there was a radical difference between Christ and all other prophets and teachers. ¶ Of Nazareth. This was the name by which he was commonly known. By this name he had been designated among the Jews and on the cross. It is by no means improbable that the man had heard of him by this name, and it was important that he should understand that it was by the authority of him who had been crucified as an impostor. ¶ Rise and walk. To do this would be evidence of signal power. It is remarkable that in cases like this they were commanded to do the thing at once. See similar cases in Jn. v. 8; Mat. ix. 6; xii. 13. It would have been easy to allege that they had no power; that they were lame, or sick, of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ankle-bones received strength.

or palsied, and could do nothing until God should give them strength. But the command was to do the thing; nor did the Saviour or the apostles stop to convince them that they could do nothing. They did not doubt that if it were done they would ascribe the power to God. Precisely like this is the condition of the sinner. God commands him to do the thing; to repent, and believe, and lead a holy life. It is not merely to attempt to do it, to make use of means, or to wait on him, but it is actually to repent and believe the gospel. Where he may obtain power to do it is another question. It is easy for him to involve himself in difficulty, as it would have been in these cases. But the command of God is positive, and must be obeyed. If not obeyed, men must perish, just as this man would have been always lame if he had put forth no effort of his own. When done, a convicted sinner will do just as this man did, instinctively give all the praise to God, ver. 8.

7. And he took him. He took hold of his hand. To take hold of the hand in such a case was an offer of aid, an indication that Peter was sincere, and was an inducement to him to make an effort. This may be employed as a beautiful illustration of the manner of God when he commands men to repent and believe. He does not leave them alone; he extends help, and aids their efforts. If they tremble, and feel that they are weak, and needy, and helpless, his hand is stretched out and his power exerted to impart strength and grace.

¶ His feet and ankle-bones. The fact that strength was immediately imparted; that the feet, long lame, were now made strong, was a full and clear proof of miraculous power.

8. And he, leaping up. This was a natural expression of joy, and it was a striking fulfilment of the prophecy in Is. xxxv. 6: "Then shall the lame man leap as an hart." The account here given is one that is perfectly natural. The man would be filled with joy, and would express it in this manner.

8 And he, "leaping up, stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

9 And all the people saw him walking and praising God:

He had been lame from a child; he had never walked; and there was more in the miracle than merely giving strength. The art of walking is one that is acquired by long practice. Children learn slowly. Caspar Hauser, discovered in one of the cities of Germany, who had been confined in prison from a child, was unable to walk in an easy way when released, but stumbled in a very awkward manner (see his Life). When, therefore, this man was able at once to walk, it was clear proof of a miracle. ¶ Praising God. This was the natural and appropriate expression of his feelings on this occasion. His heart would be full; and he could have no doubt that this blessing had come from God alone. It is remarkable that he did not even express his gratitude to Peter and John. They had not pretended to restore him in their own name, and he would feel that man could not do it. It is remarkable that he praised God without being taught or entreated to do it. It was instinctive—the natural feeling of the heart. So a sinner. His first feelings, when he is converted, will be to ascribe the praise to God. While he may and will feel regard for the ministry by whose instrumentality he has received the blessing, yet his main expression of gratitude will be to God. And this he will do instinctively. He needs no prompter; he knows that no power of man is equal to the work of converting the soul, and will rejoice, and give all the praise to the God of grace.

9, 10. And all the people, &c. The people who had been accustomed to see him sit in a public place. ¶ And they knew, &c. In this they could not be deceived; they had seen him a long time, and now they saw the same man expressing his praise to God for complete recovery. The particulars in this miracle are the following, and they are as far as possible from any appearance of imposture: 1. The man had been afflicted from a child. This was known to all the people. At this time he was forty years of age, ch. iv. 22. 2. He was not an impostor. If he had pretended lameness, it is wonderful that he had not been detected before, and not have been suffered to occupy a place thus in the temple. 3. The apostles had no agency in placing him there. They had not seen him before. There was manifestly no collusion or agreement with him to attempt to impose on the people. 4. The man himself was convinced of the miracle, and did not doubt that the power by which he had been healed was of God. 5. The people were convinced of the same thing. They saw the effects; they had known him well; they had had every opportunity to know that he was diseased, and they were now satisfied that he was restored. There was no possibility of deception in the case. It was not merely the friends of Jesus that saw this; not those who had an interest in the miracle, but those who had been his enemies, and who had just before been engaged in putting him to death. Let this miracle be compared, in these particulars, with those pretended miracles which have been affirmed to have been wrought in defence of other systems of religion, and it will be seen at once that in these there is every appearance of sincerity, honesty, and truth; in them, every mark of deception, fraud, and imposition. (See Paley's Evidences of Christianity, proposition ii. ch. ii.)

10 And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And, as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John,

11. Held Peter and John. The word held means that he adhered to them; he joined himself to them; he was desirous of remaining with them and participating with them. "He clung to his benefactors, and would not be separated from them" (Prof. Hackett). ¶ All the people, &c. Excited by curiosity, they came together. The fact of the cure and the conduct of the man would soon draw together a crowd, and thus furnish a favourable opportunity for preaching to them the gospel. ¶ In the porch, &c. This porch was a covered way or passage on the east side of the temple. It was distinguished for its magnificence. See the plan and description of the temple, Notes on Mat. xxi. 12.

12. When Peter saw it. Saw the people assembling in such multitudes and wondering at the miracle. ¶ He answered. The word answer, with us, implies that a question had been asked, or that some subject had been proposed for consideration. But the word is used in a different sense in the Bible. It is often used when no question was asked, but when an occasion was offered for remarks, or when an opportunity was presented to make a statement. It is the same as replying to a thing, or making a statement in regard to some subject, Da. ii. 26; Ac. v. 8. ¶ Ye men of Israel. Jews. Comp. ch. ii. 14. ¶ Why marvel ye at this? The particular thing which he intended to reprove here was not that they wondered, for that was proper; but that they looked on himself and John as if they had been the authors of this healing. They ought to have understood it. The Jews were sufficiently acquainted with miracles to interpret them and to know whence they proceeded; and they ought not, therefore, to ascribe them to man, but to inquire why they had been wrought by God. ¶ Why look ye, &c. Why do ye fix the eyes with amazement on us, as though we could do this? Why not look at once to God? ¶ By our own power. By any art of healing or by any medicine we had done this. ¶ Or holiness. Piety. As if God had bestowed this on us on account of our personal and eminent piety. It may be remarked that here was ample opportunity for them to establish a reputation of their own. The people were disposed to pay them honour; they might at once have laid claim to vast authority over them; but they refused all such personal honour, and ascribed all to the Lord Jesus. Whatever success may attend the ministers of the gospel, or however much the world may be disposed to do them hon-as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?

our, they should disclaim all power in themselves, and ascribe it to the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not by the talents or personal holiness of ministers, valuable as these are, that men are saved; it is only by the power of God, designed to honour his Son. See 2 Co. iii. 5, 6.

13. The God of Abraham. He is called the God of Abraham because Abraham acknowledged him as his God, and because God showed himself to be his friend. Comp. Mat. xxii. 32; Ex. iii. 6, 15; Ge. xxviii. 13; xxvi. 24. It was important to show that it was the same God who had done this that had been acknowledged by their fathers, and that they were not about to introduce the worship of any other God. And it was especially important, because the promise had been made to Abraham that in his seed all the families of the earth would be blessed, Ge. xii. 3. Comp. Ga. iii. 16. ¶ Hath glorified. Has honoured. You denied, despised, and murdered him, but God has exalted and honoured him. This miracle was done in the name of Jesus, ver. 6. It was the power of God that had restored the man; and by putting forth this power, God had shown that he approved the work of his Son, and was disposed to honour him in the view of men. Comp. Jn. xvii. 1; Ep. i. 20-22; Phi. ii. 9-11; He. ii. 9; Re. i. 5-18. ¶ Ye delivered up. That is, you delivered him to the Romans to be put to death. See Notes on ch. ii. 23. ¶ And denied him in the presence of Pilate. Denied that he was the Messiah. Were unwilling to own him as your long-expected King, Jn. xix. 15. ¶ When he was determined, &c. Mat. xxvii. 17-25; Lu. xxiii. 16-23. Pilate was satisfied of his innocence; but he was weak, timid, and irresolute, and he yielded to their wishes. The fact that Pilate regarded him as innocent was a strong aggravation of their crime. They should have regarded him as innocent; but they urged on his condemnation against the deliberate judgment of him before whom they had arraigned him, and thus showed how obstinately they were resolved on his death.

14. The Holy One, &c. See Ps. xvi. 10. Comp. Notes on Ac. ii. 27. ¶ And the Just. The word just here denotes innocent, or one who was free from crime. It properly is used in reference to law, and denotes one who stands upright in the view of the law, or who is not chargeable with crime. In this sense the Lord Jesus was not only personally innocent, but even before his judges he stood unconvicted of any crime. The crime charged on him at first was blasphemy (Mat. xxvi. 65), and on this charge the Sanhedrim had condemned him without proof. But of this charge Pilate would not take cognizance, and hence before him they charged him with sedition, Lu. xxiii. 2. Neither of these charges were made out, and of course, in the eye of the law, he was innocent and just. It greatly aggravated their crime that they demanded his death still, even after it was ascertained that they could prove nothing against him, thus showing that it was mere hatred and malice that led them to seek his death. ¶ And desired a murderer, Mat. xxvii. 21.

15. And killed the Prince of life. The word rendered prince denotes properly a military leader or commander. Hence, in He. ii. 10, it is translated captain: "It became him . . . to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." As a captain or commander leads on to victory and is said to obtain it, so the word comes to denote one who is the cause, the author, the procurer, &c. In this sense it is used, Ac. v. 31, "Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel," &c. In He. xii. 2 it is properly rendered author, "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." The word author, or giver, would express the meaning of the word here. It also implies that he has dominion over life; an idea, indeed, which is essentially connected with that of his being the author of it. The word life here is used in a large sense, as denoting all manner of life. In this sense it is used in reference to Christ in Jn. i. 4, "In him was life." Comp. Jn. v. 26; 1 Jn. v. 11; 1 Co. xv. 45. Jesus is here called the Prince of life in contrast with him whom the Jews demanded in his place, Barabbas. He was a murderer (Lu. xxiii. 19; Mar. xv. 7), one who had destroyed life, and yet they demanded that he whose character it was to destroy life should be released, and the Author of life be put to death. ¶ Whom God hath raised, &c. Ch. ii. 24, 32.

16. And his name. The name of Jesus is here put for Jesus himself, and it is the same as saying "and he," &c. In this way the word name is often used by the Hebrews, especially when speaking of God, Ac. i. 15; iv. 12; Ep. i. 21; Re. iii. 4. It does not mean that there was any efficacy in the mere name of Jesus that would heal the man, but that it was done by his authority and power. ¶ Through faith in his name. By means of faith in him; that is, by the faith which Peter and John had in Jesus. It does not refer to any faith that the man had himself, for there is no evidence that he believed in him. But it was by means of the faith which the apostles exercised in him that the miracle was wrought, and was thus a fulfilment of the declaration in Mat. xvii. 20, "If ye have faith . . . ye shall say to this mountain, remove hence," &c. This truth Peter repeats two or three times in the verse to impress it more distinctly on the minds of his hearers. ¶ Whom ye see and know. There could, therefore, be no mistake. He was well known to them. There was no doubt about the truth of the miracle (ch. iv. 16), and the only inquiry was in what way it had been done. This Peter affirms to have been accomplished only by the power of the Lord Jesus. ¶ *Perfect soundness—ὅλη καλήσιαν.* This word is not used elsewhere in the New Testament. It denotes integrity of parts, freedom from any defect; and it here means strong, whom ye see and know; yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

17 And now, brethren, I wot

that the cure was perfect and entire, or that he was completely restored to the use of his limbs. ¶ In the presence of you all. You are all witnesses of it, and can judge for yourselves. This shows how confident the apostles were that a real miracle had been performed. They were willing that it should be examined; and this is conclusive proof that there was no attempt at imposition. A deceiver, or one who pretended to work miracles, would have been cautious of exposing the subject to the danger of detection.

17. And now, brethren. Though they had been guilty of a crime so enormous, yet Peter shows the tenderness of his heart in addressing them still as his brethren. He regarded them as of the same nation with himself; as having the same hopes, and as being entitled to the same privileges. The expression also shows that he was not disposed to exalt himself as being by nature more holy than they. This verse is a remarkable instance of tenderness in appealing to sinners. It would have been easy to have reproached them for their enormous crimes; but that was not the way to reach the heart. He had indeed stated and proved their wickedness. The object now was to bring them to repentance for it; and this was to be done by tenderness, kindness, and love. Men are melted to contrition, not by reproaches, but by love. ¶ I wot. I know; I am well apprised of it. I know you will affirm it, and I admit that it was so. Still the enormous deed has been done. It cannot be recalled, and it cannot be innocent. It remains, therefore, that you should repent of it, and seek for pardon. ¶ That through ignorance, &c. Peter does not mean to affirm that they were innocent in having put him to death, for he had just proved the contrary, and he immediately proceeds to exhort them to repentance. But he means to say that their offence was mitigated by the fact that they were ignorant that he was the Messiah. The same thing the Saviour himself affirmed when dying, Lu. xxiii. 34: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Comp. Ac. xiii. 27; 1 Co.

that through 'ignorance ye did it,

ii. 8. The same thing the apostle Paul affirmed in relation to himself, as one of the reasons why he obtained pardon from the enormous crime of persecution, 1 Ti. i. 13. In cases like these, though crime might be mitigated, yet it was not taken entirely away. They were guilty of demanding that a man should be put to death who was declared innocent; they were urged on with ungovernable fury; they did it from contempt and malice; and the crime of murder remained, though they were ignorant that he was the Messiah. It is plainly implied that if they had put him to death knowing that he was the Messiah, and as the Messiah, there would have been no forgiveness. Comp. He. x. 26-29. Ignorance, therefore, is a circumstance which must always be taken into view in an estimate of crime. It is at the same time true that they had opportunity to know that he was the Messiah, but the mere fact that they were ignorant of it was still a mitigating circumstance in the estimate of their crime. There can be no doubt that the mass of the people had no fixed belief that he was the Messiah. ¶ As did also your rulers. Comp. 1 Co. ii. 8, where the apostle says that none of the princes of this world knew the wisdom of the gospel, for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. It is certain that the leading scribes and Pharisees were urged on by the most ungovernable fury and rage to put Jesus to death, even when they had abundant opportunity to know his true character. This was particularly the case with the high-priest. But yet it was true that they did not believe that he was the Messiah. Their minds had been prejudiced. They had expected a prince and a conqueror. All their views of the Messiah were different from the character which Jesus manifested. And though they might have known that he was the Messiah; though he had given abundant proof of the fact, yet it is clear that they did not believe it. It is not credible that they would have put to death one whom they really believed to be the Christ. He was the hope, the only hope of their nation; and they would not have dared to imbue their hands in the blood of him whom

they really believed to be the illustrious personage so long promised and expected by their fathers. It was also probably true that no small part of the Sanhedrim was urged on by the zeal and fury of the chief priests. They had not courage to resist them; and yet they might not have entered heartily into this work of persecution and death. Comp. Jn. vii. 50-53. The speech of Peter, however, is not intended to free them entirely from blame; nor should it be pressed to show that they were innocent. It is a mitigating circumstance thrown in to show them that there was still hope of mercy.

18. But those things. To wit, those things that did actually occur, pertaining to the life and death of the Messiah.

¶ Had showed. Had announced, or foretold. ¶ By the mouth of all his prophets.

That is, by the prophets in general, without affirming that each individual prophet had uttered a distinct prediction respecting this. The word all is not unfrequently used in this somewhat limited sense, Mar. i. 37; Jn. iii. 26. In regard to the prophecies respecting Christ, see Notes on Lu. xxiv. 27. ¶ Hath so fulfilled. He has caused to be fulfilled in this manner; that is, by the rejection, the denial, and the wickedness of the rulers. It has turned out to be in strict accordance with the prophecy. This fact Peter uses in exhorting them to repentance; but it is not to be regarded as an excuse for their sins.

The mere fact that all this was foretold; that it was in accordance with the purposes and predictions of God, does not take away the guilt of it, or constitute an excuse for it. In regard to this, we may remark, (1) The prediction did not change the nature of the act. The mere fact that it was foretold, or foreknown, did not change its character. See Notes on ch. i. 23. (2) Peter still regarded them as guilty. He did not urge the fact that this was foreknown as an excuse for their sin, but to show them that since all this happened according to the prediction and the purpose of God, they might hope in his mercy.

The plan was that the Messiah should die to make a way for pardon, and, all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

19 Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, "that your sins

may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

therefore, they might hope in his mercy. (3) This was a signal instance of the power and mercy of God in overruling the wicked conduct of men to further his own purposes and plans. (4) All the other sins of men may thus be overruled, and thus the wrath of man may be made to praise him. But, (5) This will constitute no excuse for the sinner. It is no part of his intention to honour God, or to advance his purposes; and there is no direct tendency in his crimes to advance his glory. The direct tendency of his deeds is counteracted and overruled, and God brings good out of the evil. But this surely constitutes no excuse for the sinner.

If it be asked why Peter insisted on this if he did not mean that it should be regarded as an excuse for their sin, I reply, that it was his design to prove that Jesus was the Messiah, and having proved this, he could assure them that there was mercy. Not that they had not been guilty; not that they deserved favour; but that the fact that the Messiah had come was an argument which proved that any sinners might obtain mercy, as he immediately proceeds to show them.

19. Repent ye. See Notes on Mat. iii. 2. ¶ Therefore. Because of your sin in putting Jesus to death, and because he is the Messiah, and God through him is willing to show mercy to the chief of sinners. ¶ And be converted. This expression conveys an idea not at all to be found in the original. It conveys the idea of passivity, BE converted, as if they were to yield to some foreign influence that they were now resisting. But the idea of being passive in this is not conveyed by the original word. The word means properly to turn; to return to a path from which one has gone astray; and then to turn away from sins, or to forsake them. It is a word used in a general sense to denote the whole turning to God. That the form of the word here (ἰστρέψασθε) does not denote passivity may be clearly seen by referring to the following places where the same form of the word is used: Mat. xxiv. 18; Mar. xiii. 16; Lu. xvii. 31; 1 Th. i. 9. The expression, therefore, would have been more appropriately rendered "repent, and turn, that your sins," &c. To be converted cannot be a matter of obligation, but to turn to God is the duty of every sinner. The crimes of which he exhorted them to repent were those pertaining to the death of the Lord Jesus, as well as all the past sins of their lives. They were to turn from the course of wickedness in which they and the nation had been so long walking. That your sins, &c. In order that your sins may be forgiven. Sin cannot be pardoned before man repents of it. In the order of the work of grace, repentance must always precede pardon. Of course, no man can have evidence that his sin is pardoned until he repents. Comp. Is. i. 16-20; Joel ii. 13. ¶ May be blotted out. May be forgiven, or pardoned. The expression to blot out sins occurs also in Is. xlivi. 25; Ps. li. 1, 9; Je. xviii. 23; Ne. iv. 5; Is. xliv. 22. The expression to blot out a name is applied to expunging it from a roll, or catalogue, or list, as of an army, &c., Ex. xxxii. 32, 33; De. ix. 14; xxv. 19; xxix. 29, &c. The expression to blot out sins is taken from the practice of creditors charging their debtors, and when the debt is paid, cancelling it, or wholly removing the record. The word used here properly refers to the practice of writing on tables covered with wax, and then by inverting the stylus, or instrument of writing, smoothing the wax again, and thus removing every trace of the record. This more entirely expresses the idea of *pardon*ing than blotting does. It means wholly to remove the record, the charge, and every trace of the account against us. In this way God forgives sins.

¶ When the times, &c. The word ὥραι, rendered "when," is commonly rendered that, and denotes the final cause, or the reason why a thing is done, Mat. ii. 23; v. 16, 45, &c. By many it has been supposed to have this sense here, and to mean, "repent . . . in order that the times of refreshing may come," &c. Thus Kuinoel, Grotius, Lightfoot, the Syriac version, &c. If used in this sense, it means that their repentance and forgiveness would be the means of introducing peace and joy. Others have rendered it, in accordance with our translation, "when," meaning that they might find peace in the day when Christ should return to judgment, which return would be to them a day of rest, though of terror to the wicked. Thus Calvin, Beza, the Latin Vulgate, Schleusner, &c. The grammatical construction will admit of either, though the former is more in accordance with the usual use of the word. The objection to the former is, that it is not easy to see how their repenting, &c., would be the means of introducing the times of refreshing. And this, also, corresponds very little with the design of Peter in this discourse. That was to encourage them to repentance; to adduce arguments why they should repent, and why they might hope in his mercy. To do this, it was needful only to assure them that they were living under the times graciously promised by God—the times of refreshing, when pardon might be obtained. The main inquiry, therefore, is, What did Peter refer to by the times of refreshing, and by the restitution of all things? Did he refer to any particular manifestation to be made then, or to the influence of the gospel on the earth, or to the future state, when the Lord Jesus shall come to judgment? The idea which I suppose Peter intended to convey was this: "Repent, and be converted. You have been great sinners, and are in danger. Turn from your ways, that your sins may be forgiven." But then, what encouragement would there be for this? or why should it be done? Answer: "You are living under the times of the gospel, the reign of the Messiah, the times of refreshment. This happy, glorious period has been long anticipated, and is to continue to the close of the world. The period which will include the restitution of all things, and the return of Christ to judgment, has come, and is, therefore, the period when you may find mercy, and when you should seek it, to be prepared for his return." In this sense the passage refers to the fact that this time, this dispensation, this economy, including all this, had come, and they were living under it, and might and should seek for mercy. It expresses, therefore, the common belief of the Jews that such a time would come, and the comment of Peter about its nature and continuance. The belief of the Jews was that such times would come. Peter affirms that the belief of such a period was well founded—a time when mercy may be obtained. That time has come. The doctrine that it would come was well founded, and has been fulfilled. This was a reason why they should repent, and hope in the mercy of God. Peter goes on, then, to state further characteristics of that period. It would include the restitution of all things, the return of Christ to judgment, &c. And all this was an additional consideration why they should repent, and turn from their sins, and seek for forgiveness. The meaning of the passage may therefore be thus summed up: "Repent, since it is a true doctrine that such times would come: they are clearly predicted; they were to be expected; and you are now living under them. In these times; in this dispensation, also, God shall send his Son again to judge the world, and all things shall be closed and settled for ever. Since you live under this period, you may seek for mercy, and you should seek to avoid the vengeance due to the wicked, and to be admitted to heaven when the Lord Jesus shall return." ¶ Times of refreshment. The word rendered refreshing, ἀναψύξις, means properly breathing, or refreshment, after being heated with labour, running, &c. It hence denotes any kind of refreshment, as rest, or deliverance from evils of any kind. It is used nowhere else in the New Testament, except that the verb is used in 2 Ti. i. 16, "Onesiphorus . . . oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain." He administered comfort to me in my trials. It is used by the LXX. in the Old Testament nine times: Ex. viii. 15, "But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite," that is, cessation or rest from the plagues, Ho. xii. 8; Je. xl ix. 31; Ps. lix. 11, &c. In no place in the Old Testament is the word applied to the terms of the gospel. The idea, however, that the times of the Messiah would be times of rest, ease, and prosperity, was a favourite one among the Jews, and was countenanced in the Old Testament. See Is. xxviii. 12, "To whom he said, This is the rest where-with ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing," &c. They anticipated the times of the gospel as a period when they would have rest from their enemies, a respite from the evils of oppression and war, and great national prosperity and peace. Under the idea that the happy times of the Messiah had come, Peter now addresses them, and assures them that they might obtain pardon and peace. ¶ Shall come. This does not mean that this period was still future, for it had come; but that the expectation of the Jews that such a Messiah would come was well founded. A remarkably similar construction we have concerning Elijah (Mat. xvii. 11), "And Jesus answered and said, Elias truly shall first come, and restore," &c.; that is, the doctrine that Elijah would come was true, though he immediately adds that it had already taken place, ver. 12. See Notes on that place. ¶ From the presence of the Lord. Greek, "From the face of the Lord." The expression means that God was its author. From the face of the Lord means from the Lord himself: Mar. i. 2, "I send thy messenger before thy face," that is, before thee. Comp. Mal. iii. 1; Lu. i. 76; ii. 31.

20. And he shall send, &c. Ch. i. 11. Under this economy of things, he shall send Jesus Christ, that is, the Messiah, to teach men; to redeem them; to save them; to judge the world; to gather his people to himself; and to condemn the wicked. Under this economy they were then. This, therefore, was an argument why they should repent and turn to God, that they might escape in the day of judgment. ¶ Which before was preached, &c. Who has been proclaimed as the Messiah. The name Jesus Christ is equivalent here to the Messiah. The Messiah had been proclaimed to the Jews as about to come. In his time was to be the period of refreshing. He had come; and they were under the economy in which the blessings of the Messiah were to be enjoyed. This does not refer to his personal ministry, or to the preaching of the apostles, but to the fact that the Messiah had been a long time announced to them by the prophets as about to come. All the prophets had preached him as the hope of the nation. It may be remarked, however, that there is here a difference in the manuscripts. A large majority of them read προειχεν εμαυτον, who was designated or appointed, instead of who was preached. This reading is approved by Griesbach, Knapp, Bengel, &c. It was followed in the ancient Syriac, the Arabic, &c., and is undoubtedly the true reading.

21. Whom the heavens must receive. The common belief of the Jews was, that the Messiah would reign on the earth for ever, Jn. xii. 34. On this account they would object that Jesus could not be the Messiah, and hence it became so important for the apostles to establish the fact that he had ascended to heaven. The evidence which they adduced was the fact that they saw him ascend, Ac. i. 9. The meaning of the expression "whom the heavens MUST receive," is that it was fit or proper (δέῖ) that he should ascend. One reason of that fitness or propriety he himself stated in Jn. xvi. 7; comp. xvii. 2. It was also fit or expedient that he should do it, to direct the affairs of the universe for the welfare of the church (Ep. i. 20-22), and that he should exercise there his office as a priest in interceding for his people, 1 Jn. ii. 1, 2; He. vii. 25; ix. 24; Ro. viii. 34, &c. It is remarkable that Peter did not adduce any passage of Scripture on this subject; but it was one of the points on which there was no clear revelation. Obscure intimations of it might be found in Ps. cx., xvi., &c., but the fact that he would ascend to heaven was not made prominent in the Old Testament. The words "whom the heaven must receive" also convey the idea of exaltation and power; and Peter doubtless intended to say that he was clothed with power, and exalted to honour in the presence of God. See Ps. cxv. 3. Comp. 1 Pe. iii. 22, "Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels, and authorities, and powers being made subject unto him." See Notes on Ac. ii. 33. ¶ Until. This word implies that he would then return to the earth, but it does not imply that he would not again ascend to heaven. ¶ The times of the restitution of all things. The noun rendered restitution (ἀποκατάστασις) does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. The verb from which it is derived occurs eight times. It means properly to restore a thing to its former situation, as restoring a sprained or dislocated limb to its former soundness. Hence it is used to restore, or to heal, in the New Testament: Mat. xii. 13, "And it (the hand) was restored whole as the hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

22 For Moses truly said unto other;" Mar. iii. 5; Lu. vi. 10. And hence it is applied to the preparation or fitness for the coming of the Messiah which was to attend the preaching of John in the character of Elias, Mat. xvii. 11; Mar. ix. 12. Thus, in Josephus (Antiq., ii. 3, 8), the word is used to denote the return of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon, and their restoration to their former state and privileges. The word has also the idea of consummation, completion, or filling up. Thus it is used in Philo, Hesychius, Phavorinus, and by the Greek classics. (See Lightfoot and Kuinoel.) Thus it is used here by the Syriac: "Until the complement or filling up of the times;" that is, of all the events foretold by the prophets, &c. Thus the Arabic: "Until the times which shall establish the perfection or completion of all the predictions of the prophets," &c. In this sense the passage means that the heavens must receive the Lord Jesus until all things spoken by the prophets in relation to his work, his reign, the spread of the gospel, the triumph of religion, &c., shall have been fulfilled. It also conveys the idea of the predicted recovery of the world from sin, and the restoration of peace and order; the consummation of the work of the Messiah, now begun, but not yet complete; slow it may be in its advances, but triumphant and certain in its progress and its close. ¶ All things. All things which have been foretold by the prophets. The expression is limited by the connection to this; and of course it does not mean that all men will be saved, or that all the evils of sin can be repaired or remedied. This can never be, for the mischief is done and cannot be undone; but everything which the prophets have foretold shall receive their completion and fulfilment. ¶ Which God hath spoken. Which have been revealed, and are recorded in the Old Testament. ¶ Of all his holy prophets. This does not mean that each one of the prophets had spoken of these things, but that all which had been spoken would be fulfilled. ¶ Since the world began. This is an expression denoting the same as from the beginning, meaning to affirm with emphasis that all the prophecies the fathers, "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; would be fulfilled. The apostles were desirous to show that they, as well as the Jews, held entirely to the prophets, and taught no doctrine which they had not taught before them.

22. For Moses truly said. The authority of Moses among the Jews was absolute and final. It was of great importance, therefore, to show not only that they were not departing from his law, but that he had actually foretold these very things. The object of the passage is not to prove that the heavens must receive him, but that he was truly the Messiah. ¶ Unto the fathers. To their ancestors, or the founders of the nation. See De. xviii. 15-19. ¶ A Prophet. Literally, one who foretells future events. But it is also used to denote a religious teacher in general. See Ro. xii. 6. In the passage in Deuteronomy it is evidently used in a large sense, to denote one who would infallibly guide and direct the nation in its religious affairs; one who would be commissioned by God to do this, in opposition to the diviners (ver. 14) on which other nations relied. The meaning of this passage in Deuteronomy is apparent from the connection. Moses is stating to the Hebrews (ver. 1-8) the duty and office of the priests and Levites. He then cautions them against conforming to the surrounding nations, particularly on the subject of religious instruction and guidance. They, said he, consult, in times of perplexity, with enchanters, and charmers, and necromancers, and wizards, &c. (ver. 11-14), but it shall not be so with you. You shall not be left to this false and uncertain guidance in times of perplexity and danger, for the Lord will raise up, from time to time, a prophet, a man directly commissioned in an extraordinary manner from heaven, like me, who shall direct and counsel you. The promise, therefore, pertains to the series of prophets which God would raise up; or it is a promise that God would send his prophets, as occasion might demand, to instruct and counsel the nation. The design was to keep them from consulting with diviners, &c., and to preserve them from following the pretended and false religious teachers of surrounding idolatrous people. In this interpretation most commentators agree. See particularly Calvin on this place. Thus explained, the prophecy had no exclusive or even direct reference to the Messiah, and there is no evidence that the Jews understood it to have any such reference, except as one of the series of prophets that God would raise up and send to instruct the nation. If, then, it be asked on what principle Peter appealed to this, we may reply, (1) That the Messiah was to sustain the character of a prophet, and the prophecy had reference to him as one of the teachers that God would raise up to instruct the nation. (2) It would apply to him by way of eminence, as the greatest of the messengers that God would send to instruct the people. In this sense it is probable that the Jews would understand it. (3) This was one of those emergencies in the history of the nation when they might expect such an intervention. The prophecy implied that in times of perplexity and danger God would raise up such a prophet. Such a time then existed. The nation was corrupt, distracted, subjected to a foreign power, and needed such a teacher and guide. If it be asked why Peter appealed to this rather than to explicit prophecies of the Messiah, we may remark, (1) That his main object was to show their guilt in having rejected him and put him to death, ver. 14, 15. (2) That in order to do this, he sets before them clearly the obligation to obey him; and in doing this, appeals to the express command of Moses. He shows them that, according to Moses, who ever would not obey such a prophet should be cut off from among the people. In refusing, therefore, to hear this great prophet, and putting him to death, they had violated the express command of their own lawgiver. But it was possible still to obey him, for he still lived in heaven; and all the authority of Moses, therefore, made it a matter of obligation for them still to hear and obey him. The Jews were accustomed to apply the name prophet to the Messiah (Jn. i. 21; vi. 14; vii. 40; Mat. xxi. 11; Lu. iv. 24), and it has been shown from the writings of the Jewish Rabbins that they believed the Messiah would be the greatest of the prophets, even greater than Moses.

23 And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that

See Notes on Jn. i. 21. ¶ The Lord your God. In the Hebrew, "Jehovab, thy God." ¶ Raise up unto you. Appoint, or commission to come to you. ¶ Of your brethren. Among yourselves; of your own countrymen; so that you shall not be dependent on foreigners, or on teachers of other nations. All the prophets were native-born Jews. And it was particularly true of the Messiah that he was to be a Jew, descended from Abraham, and raised up from the midst of his brethren, He. ii. 11, 16, 17. On this account it was to be presumed that they would feel a deeper interest in him, and listen more attentively to his instructions. ¶ Like unto me. Not in all things, but only in the point which was under discussion. He was to resemble him in being able to make known to them the will of God, and thus preventing the necessity of looking to other teachers. The idea of resemblance between Moses and the prophet is not very strictly expressed in the Greek, except in the mere circumstance of being raised up. God shall raise up to you a prophet as he has raised up me — sis ipsi. The resemblance between Moses and the Messiah should not be pressed too far. The Scriptures have not traced it farther than to the fact that both were raised up by God to communicate his will to the Jewish people, and therefore one should be heard as well as the other. ¶ Him shall ye hear. That is, him shall you obey, or you shall receive his instructions as a communication from God. ¶ In all things whatsoever, &c. These words are not quoted literally from the Hebrew, but they express the sense of what is said in De. xviii. 15, 18.

23. And it shall come to pass. It shall be, or shall occur. This is not the usual word rendered "it shall come to pass." It is a word commonly expressing futurity, but here it conveys the notion of obligation. In this verse Peter has not quoted the passage in Deuteronomy literally, but he has given the sense. ¶ Every soul. Every person or individual. Soul is often put for the whole man by the Hebrews, Ac. vii. 14; Jos. x. 28. ¶ Hear that Prophet. That is, obey his instructions. He shall have authority to declare the will of God; and he that does not obey him refuses to obey God. Comp. Lu. x. 16; Jn. xiii. 20. ¶ Shall be destroyed. This quotation is made according to the sense, and not literally. In the Hebrew the expression is (De. xviii. 19), "I will require it of him," that is, I will hold him answerable or responsible for it; I will punish him. This expression the LXX. have rendered by "I will take vengeance on him." The idea of the passage is, therefore, that God would punish the man that would not hear the prophet, without specifying the particular way in which it should be done. The usual mode of punishing such offences was by cutting the offender off from among the people, Ex. xxx. 33; xl. 15; xix. 31; Nu. xv. 31; xix. 13; Le. vii. 20, 21, 25, 27, &c. The sense is, that he should be punished in the usual manner; that is, by excision, or by being destroyed from among the people. The word translated shall be destroyed means properly to exterminate, wholly to devote to ruin, as of a wicked people, a wicked man whose life is taken, &c. To be destroyed from among the people means, however, to be excommunicated, or to be deprived of the privileges of a people. Among the Jews this was probably the most severe punishment that could be inflicted. It involved the idea of being cut off from the privileges of sacrifice and worship in the temple and in the synagogue, &c., and of being regarded as a heathen and an outcast. The idea which Peter expressed here was, that the Jews had exposed themselves to the severest punishment in rejecting and crucifying the Lord Jesus, and that they should, therefore, repent of this great sin, and seek for mercy. The same remark is applicable still to men. The Scriptures abundantly declare the truth, that if sinners will not hear the Lord Jesus, they shall be destroyed. And it becomes each individual to inquire with honesty whether he listens to his instructions and obeys his law, or whether he is rejecting him and following the devices and desires of his own heart. It will be a solemn day when the sinner shall be called to render a reason why he has rejected the teachings and laws of the Son of God!

Prophet shall be destroyed from among the people.

24 Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow

24. All the prophets. That is, the prophets in general. It may be said of the prophets generally, or of all of them, that they have foretold these things. This expression is not to be pressed as if we were to look for distinct predictions of the Messiah in each one of the prophets. The use of language does not require so strict an interpretation. ¶ From Samuel. In the previous verse (22) Moses was mentioned as the first in order. The next in order was Samuel. The same mention of Moses and Samuel occurs in Ps. xcix. 6. The reason why Samuel is mentioned here is probably that he was the first prophet after Moses who recorded a prediction respecting the times of the Messiah. The Jews, in their divisions of the books of the Old Testament, reckoned the book of Joshua as the first of the prophets. But in Joshua and Judges there does not occur any distinct prediction of the Messiah. The prophecy in Samuel, to which Peter probably had reference, is in 2 Sa. vii. 16. From the time of Moses to Samuel, also, it is probable that no prophet arose. God was consulted by Urim and Thummim (Ex. xxviii. 30; Nu. xxvii. 21), and consequently no extraordinary messenger was sent to instruct the nation. ¶ As many as have spoken. Whosoever has declared the will of God. This is to be taken in a general sense. The meaning is, that the prophets had concurring in foretelling these days. They not merely concurred in foretelling a happy future period, but they foretold distinctly the very things which had actually occurred respecting Jesus of Nazareth; and the Jews, therefore, should listen to the voice of their own prophets.

25. Ye are the children of the prophets. Greek, "Ye are the sons of the prophets." The meaning is, not that they were literally the descendants of the prophets, but that they were their disciples, pupils, followers. They professed to follow the prophets as their teachers and guides. Teachers among the Jews were often spoken of under the appellation of fathers, and disciples as sons, Mat. xii. 27. See Notes on Mat. i. 1. As they were the professed disciples of the prophets, they should listen to them. As they lived among the people to whom the prophets were sent, and to whom the promises were made, they should avail themselves of the offer of mercy, and embrace the Messiah. ¶ And of the covenant. Ye are the sons of the covenant; that is, you are of the posterity of Abraham, with whom the covenant was made. The word "sons" was often thus used to denote those to whom any favour appertained, whether by inheritance or in any other way. Thus Mat. viii. 12, "The children (sons) of the kingdom;" Jn. xvii. 12, "the son of perdition." The word covenant denotes properly a compact or agreement between equals, or those who have a right to make such a compact, and to choose or refuse the terms. When applied to God and man, it denotes a firm promise on the part of God; a pledge to be regarded with all the sacredness of a compact, that he will do certain things on certain conditions. It is called a covenant only to designate its sacredness and the certainty of its fulfilment, not that man had any right to reject any of the terms or stipulations. As man has no such right, as he is bound to receive all that his Maker proposes, so, strictly and literally, there has been no compact or covenant between God and man. The promise to which Peter refers in the passage before us is in Ge. xxii. 18; xii. 3. ¶ In thy seed. Thy posterity. See Ro. iv. 13, 16. This promise the apostle Paul affirms had express reference to the Messiah, Ga. iii. 16. The word seed is used sometimes to denote an individual (Ge. iv. 25); and the apostle (Ga. iii. 16) affirms that there was special reference to Christ in the promise made to Abraham. ¶ All the kindreds. The word translated kindreds (κατηγοριαι) denotes those who have a common father or ancestor, and is applied to families. It is also referred to those larger communities which were descended from the same ancestor, and thus refers to nations, Ep. iii. 15. Here it evidently refers to all nations. ¶ Be blessed. Be made happy.

26. Unto you first. To you who are Jews. This was the direction, that the gospel should be first preached to the Jews, beginning at Jerusalem, Lu. xxiv. 47. Jesus himself also confined his ministry entirely to the Jews. ¶ Having raised up. This expression does not refer to his having raised him from the dead, but is used in the same sense as in ver. 22, where God promised that he would raise up a prophet, and send him to teach the people. Peter means that God had appointed his Son Jesus, or had commissioned him to go and preach to the people to turn them away from their sins. ¶ To bless you. To make you happy; to fulfil the promise made to Abraham. ¶ In turning away. That is, by his preaching, example, death, &c. The highest blessing that can be conferred on men is to be turned from sin. Sin is the source of all woes, and if men are turned from that, they will be happy. Christ blesses no one in sin, or while loving sin, but by turning them from sin. This was the object which he had in view in coming, Is. lix. 20; Mat. i. 21. The design of Peter in these remarks was to show them that the Messiah had come, and that now they might look for happiness, pardon, and mercy through him. As the Jews might, so may all; and as Jesus, while living, sought to turn away men from their sins, so he does still, and still designs to bless all nations by the gospel which he had himself preached, and to establish which he died. All may therefore come and be blessed; and all may rejoice in the prospect that these blessings will yet be bestowed on all the kindreds of the earth. May the happy day soon come!

CHAPTER IV.

1. The priests. It is probable that these priests were a part of the Sanhecaptain<sup>1</sup> of the temple, and "the Sadducees came upon them,

drim, or great council of the nation. It is evident that they claimed some authority for preventing the preaching of the apostles. ¶ The captain of the temple. See Notes on Mat. xxvi. 47; Lu. xxii. 4. This was the commander of the guard stationed chiefly in the tower Antonia, especially during the great feasts; and it was his duty to preserve order and prevent any tumult. He came at this time to prevent a tumult or suppress a riot, as it was supposed that the teaching of the apostles and the crowd collected by the healing of the lame man would lead to a tumult. ¶ And the Sadducees. See Notes on Mat. iii. 7. One of the doctrines which the Sadducees maintained was, that there was no resurrection of the dead. Hence they were particularly opposed to the apostles for preaching it, because they gave so clear proof that Jesus had risen, and were thus spreading the doctrine of the resurrection among the people. ¶ Came upon them. This expression implies that they came in a sudden and violent manner. See Lu. xx. 1.

2. Being grieved. The word thus translated occurs but in one other place in the New Testament: Ac. xvi. 18. It implies more than simple sorrow; it was a mingled emotion of indignation and anger. They did not grieve because they thought it a public calamity, but because it interfered with their authority and opposed their doctrine. It means that it was painful to them, or they could not bear it. It is often the case that bigots, and men in authority, have this kind of grief at the zeal of men in spreading the truth, and thus undermining their influence and authority. ¶ That they taught the people. The ground of their grief was as much the fact that they should presume to instruct the people as the matter which they taught them. They were offended that unlearned Galileans, in no way connected with the priestly office, and unauthorized by them, should presume to set themselves up as religious teachers. They claimed the right to watch over the interests of the people, and to declare who was authorized to instruct the nation. It has been no unusual thing for men in ecclesiastical stations to take exceptions to the ministry of those who have not been commissioned by themselves. Such men easily fancy that all power to instruct others is lodged in their hands, and they oppose others simply from the fact that they have not derived their authority from them. The true question in this case was whether these Galileans gave proof that they were sent by God. The working of the miracle in this case should have been satisfactory. We have here, also, a striking instance of the fact that men may turn away from evidence, and from most important points, and fix their attention on something that opposes their prejudices, and which may be a matter of very little moment. No inquiry was made whether the miracle had been really wrought; but the only inquiry was whether they had conformed to their views of doctrine and order. ¶ And preached through Jesus, &c. The Sadducees would be particularly opposed to this. They denied the doctrine of the resurrection, and they were troubled that the apostles adduced proof of it so strong as the resurrection of Jesus. It was perceived that this doctrine was becoming established among the people; multitudes believed that he had risen; and if he had been raised up, it followed also that others would rise. The Sadducees, therefore, felt that their cause was in danger, and they joined with the priests in endeavouring to arrest its spread among the people. This is the account of the first opposition that was made to the gospel as it was preached by the apostles. It is worthy of remark that it excited so much and so speedily the enmity of those in power, and that the apostles were so soon called to test the sincerity of their attachment to their Master. They who but a few days before had fled at the approach of danger, were now called to meet this opposition, and to show their attachment to a risen Redeemer; and they did it without shrinking. They showed now that they were indeed the true friends of the crucified Saviour, and this remarkable change in their conduct is one of the many proofs that they were influenced from above.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now even-tide.

4 Howbeit <sup>b</sup>many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand.

5 And it came to pass on the morrow that their rulers, and elders, and scribes,

3. Put them in hold. That is, they took them into custody, or into safe-keeping. Probably they committed them to the care of a guard. ¶ Even-tide. Evening. It was not convenient to assemble the council at night. This was, moreover, the time for the evening prayer or sacrifice, and it was not usual to assemble the Sanhedrim at that hour.

4. Howbeit. But; notwithstanding. ¶ Many of them, &c. This was one of the instances, which has since been so often repeated, in which persecution is seen to have a tendency to extend and establish the faith which it was de-signed to destroy. It finally came to be a proverb that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church;" and there is no lesson which men have been so slow to learn as that to oppose and persecute men is the very way to confirm them in their opinions and to spread their doctrines. It was supposed here that the disciples were few; that they were without power, wealth, and influence; and that it was easy to crush them at once. But God made their persecution the means of extending, in a signal manner, the truths of the gos-pel and the triumphs of his word. And so in all ages it has been, and so it ever will be. ¶ And the number, &c. It seems probable that in this number of five thousand there were included the one hundred and twenty who are mentioned in ch. i. 15, and the three thou-sand who were converted on the day of Pentecost, ch. ii. 41. It does not appear probable that five thousand would have been assembled and converted in Solo-mon's porch (ch. iii. 11) on occasion of the cure of the lame man. Luke doubt-less means to say that, up to this time, the number of persons who had joined themselves to the apostles was about five thousand. On this supposition, the work of religion must have made a very rapid advance. How long this was after the day of Pentecost is not mentioned, but it is clear that it was at no very distant period; and the accession of near two thousand to the number of be-lievers was a very striking proof of the power and presence of the Holy Spirit. ¶ Of the men. Of the persons. The word men is often used without refer-ence to sex, Lu. xi. 31; Ro. iv. 8; xi. 4.

5, 6. Their rulers. The rulers of the Jews; doubtless the members of the Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation. Comp. ver. 15. See Notes on Mat. ii. 4; v. 22. The expression their rulers looks as if this book was written for the Gen-tiles, or Luke would have said our rulers. ¶ Elders. Presbyters, or those who were chosen from among the people to sit in the Sanhedrim. It is probable that the rulers were those who held also some other office, but were also authorized to sit in the great council.

¶ Scribes. See Notes on Mat. ii. 4. ¶ And Annas, &c. See Notes on Jn. xviii. 13. It is by no means certain that Annas was at that time the high-priest, but he had been, and doubtless retained the title. He was father-in-law to Caiaphas, the high-priest; and from this fact, together with his former digni-ty, he is mentioned first. ¶ Caiaphas. Son-in-law of Annas, and now exercising the office of the high-priest, Jn. xviii. 13.

¶ John and Alexander, &c. Of these persons nothing more is known. It is clear that they were members of the great council, and the mention of their names shows that the men of chief authority and influence were assembled to silence the apostles. Annas and Caiaphas had been concerned in the condemnation of Jesus, and they would now feel a special interest in arresting the progress of the gospel among the people. All the success of the gospel reflected back light upon the wicked-ness of the act of condemning the Lord Jesus. And this fact may serve, in part, to account for their strong desire to silence the apostles. ¶ At Jerusalem—i.e. This was the usual place of assembling the Sanhedrim. But the Jewish writers (see Lightfoot on this place) say that forty years before the destruction of the city, on account of the great increase of crime, &c., the Sanhedrim was removed from place to place. The declaration of Luke that they were now assembled in Jerusalem, seems to imply that they sometimes met in other places. It is probable that the members of the Sanhedrim were not in the city at the time mentioned in ver. 3, and this was the reason why the trial was deferred to the next day.

7. In the midst. In the presence of the great council. ¶ By what power, &c. A similar question was put to Christ in the temple, Mat. xxi. 23. ¶ By what name. That is, by whose authority. It is very probable that they expected to intimidate the apostles by this question. They claimed the right of regulating the religious affairs of the nation. They had vast power with the people. They assumed that all power to instruct the people should originate with them; and they expected that the apostles would be confounded, as having violated the established usage of the nation. It did not seem to occur to them to enter into an investigation of the question whether this acknowledged miracle did not prove that they were sent by God, but they assumed that they were impostors, and attempted to silence them by authority. It has been usual with the enemies of religion to attempt to intimidate its friends, and when argument fails, to attempt to silence Christians by appealing to their fears.

8. Filled with the Holy Ghost. See Notes on ch. ii. 4. ¶ Ye rulers, &c. Peter addressed the Sanhedrim with perfect respect. He did not call in question their authority to propose this question. He seemed to regard this as a favourable opportunity to declare the truth and state the evidence of the Christian religion. In this he acted on the principle of the injunction which he himself afterward gave (1 Pe. iii. 15), "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." Innocence is willing to be questioned; and a believer in the truth will rejoice in any opportunity to state the evidence of what is believed. It is remarkable, also, that this was before the great council of the nation—the body that was clothed with the highest authority. Peter could not have forgotten that before this very council, and these very men, his Master had been arraigned and condemned; nor could he have forgotten that in the very room where this same council was convened to try his Lord, he had himself shrunk from an honest avowal of attachment to him, and shamefully and profanely denied him. That he was now able to stand boldly before this same tribunal evinced a remarkable change in his feelings, and was a most clear and impressive proof of the genuineness of his repentance when he went out and wept bitterly. Comp. Lu. xxii. 54–62. And we may remark here, that one of the most clear evidences of the sincerity of repentance is when it leads to a result like this. So deeply was the heart of Peter affected by his sin (Lu. xxii. 62), and so genuine was his sorrow, that he doubtless remembered his crime on this occasion, and the memory of it inspired him with boldness. It may be further remarked, that one evidence of the genuineness of repentance is a desire to repair the evil which is done by crime. Peter had done dishonour to his Master and his cause in the presence of the great council of the nation. Nothing, on such an occasion, would be more likely to do injury to the cause than for one of the disciples of the Saviour to deny him—one of his followers to be guilty of profaneness and falsehood. But here was an opportunity, in some degree, at least, to repair the evil. Before the same council, in the same city, and in the presence of the same people, it is not an unnatural supposition that Peter rejoiced that he might have opportunity to bear his testimony to the divine mission of the Saviour whom he had before denied. By using the customary language of respect applied to the great council, Peter also has shown us that it is proper to evince respect for office and for those in power.

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all,

Religion requires us to render this homage, and to treat men in office with deference, Mat. xxii. 21; Ro. xiii. 7; 1 Pe. ii. 13-17.

9. If we this day. If as is the fact; or since we are thus examined. ¶ Examined. Questioned; if the purpose is to institute an inquiry into this case, or since it is the purpose to institute such an inquiry. ¶ The good deed. The act of benevolence; the benefit conferred on an infirm man. He assumes that it was undeniable that the deed had been done. ¶ To the impotent man. To this man who was infirm or lame. The man was then present, ver. 10, 14. He may have been arrested with the apostles; or he may have been present as a spectator; or, as Neander supposes, he may have been summoned as a witness. ¶ By what means. This was the real point of the inquiry. The fact that he had been made whole was not denied. The only question was whether it had been done by the authority and power of Jesus of Nazareth, as Peter declared it to be, ch. iii. 6, 16.

10. Be it known, &c. Peter might have evaded the question, or he might have resorted to many excuses and subterfuges (Calvin), if he had been desirous of avoiding this inquiry. But it was a noble opportunity for vindicating the honour of his Lord and Master. It was a noble opportunity also for repairing the evil which he had done by his guilty denial of his Lord. Although, therefore, this frank and open avowal was attended with danger, and although it was in the presence of the great and the mighty, yet he chose to state fully and clearly his conviction of the truth. Never was there an instance of greater boldness, and never could there be a more striking illustration of the fitness of the name which the Lord Jesus gave him, that of a rock; Jn. i. 42; Mat. xvi. 17, 18. The timid, trembling, yielding, and vacillating Simon; he who just before was terrified by a servant-girl, and who on the lake was afraid of sinking, is now transformed into the manly, decided, and firm Cephas, fearless before the great council of the nation, and in and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead,

an unwavering tone asserting the authority of him whom he had just before denied, and whom they had just before put to death. It is not possible to account for this change except on the supposition that this religion is true. Peter had no worldly motive to actuate him. He had no prospect of wealth or fame by this. Even the hopes of honour and preferment which the apostles had cherished before the death of Jesus, and which might have been supposed to influence them then, were now abandoned by them. Their Master had died, and all their hopes of human honour and power had been buried in his grave. Nothing but the conviction of the truth could have wrought this change, and transformed this timid disciple to a bold and uncompromising apostle. ¶ By the name. By the authority or power, ch. iii. 6. ¶ Of Jesus Christ. The union of these two names would be particularly offensive to the Sanhedrim. They denied that Jesus was the Christ, or the Messiah; Peter, by the use of the word Christ, affirmed that he was. In the language then used, it would be, "By the name of Jesus, the Messiah." ¶ Of Nazareth. Lest there should be any mistake about his meaning, he specified that he referred to the despised Nazarene; to him who had just been put to death, as they supposed, covered with infamy. Christians little regard the epithets of opprobrium which may be affixed to themselves or to their religion. ¶ Whom ye crucified. There is emphasis in all the expressions that Peter uses. He had before charged the people with the crime of having put him to death, ch. ii. 23; iii. 14, 15. But he now had the opportunity, contrary to all expectation, of urging the charge with still greater force on the rulers themselves, on the very council which had condemned him and delivered him to Pilate. It was a remarkable providence that an opportunity was thus afforded of urging this charge in the presence of the Sanhedrim, and of proclaiming to them the necessity of repentance. Little did they imagine, when they condemned the Lord Jesus, that this charge would be so soon urged. This is one of the instances in which God takes the wise in their own craftiness, Job v. 13. They had arraigned the apostles; they demanded their authority for what they had done; and thus they had directly opened the way, and invited them to the serious and solemn charge which Peter here urges against them.

11. This is the stone. This passage is found in Ps. cxviii. 22. It is quoted, also, by our Saviour as applicable to himself. See Notes on Mat. xxi. 42. The ancient Jews applied this to David. In the Targum on Ps. cxviii. 22, this passage is rendered, “The child who was among the sons of Jesse, and was worthy to be constituted king, the builders rejected.” The New Testament writers, however, apply it without any doubt to the Messiah. Comp. Is. xxviii. 16; Ro. ix. 33; Ep. ii. 20. And from this passage we may learn that God will overrule the devices and plans of wicked men to accomplish his own purposes. What men despise and set at naught, he esteems of inestimable value in his kingdom. What the great and the mighty contemn, he regards as the very foundation and corner-stone of the edifice which he designs to rear. Nothing has been more remarkable than this in the history of man; and in nothing is more contempt thrown on the proud projects of men, than that what they have rejected God has made the very basis of his schemes.

12. Neither is there salvation. The word salvation properly denotes any preservation, or keeping anything in a safe state; a preserving from harm. It signifies, also, deliverance from any evil of body or mind; from pain, sickness, danger, &c., Ac. vii. 25. But it is in the New Testament applied particularly to the work which the Messiah came to do, “to seek and to save that which was lost,” Lu. xix. 10. This work refers primarily to a deliverance of the soul from sin, Mat. i. 21; Ac. v. 31; Lu. iv. 18; Ro. viii. 21; Ga. v. 1. It then denotes, as a consequence of freedom from sin, freedom from all the ills to which sin exposes man, and the attainment of that perfect peace and joy which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither is there salvation in any other: <sup>b</sup>for there is none which will be bestowed on the children of God in the heavens. The reasons why Peter introduces this subject here seem to be these: (1) He was discoursing on the deliverance of the man that was healed—his salvation from a long and painful calamity. This deliverance had been accomplished by the power of Jesus. The mention of this suggested that greater and more important salvation from sin and death which it was the object of the Lord Jesus to effect. As it was by his power that this man had been healed, so it was by his power only that men could be saved from death and hell. Deliverance from any temporal calamity should lead the thoughts to that higher redemption which the Lord Jesus contemplates in regard to the soul. (2) This was a favourable opportunity to introduce the doctrines of the gospel to the notice of the great council of the nation. The occasion invited to it; the mention of a part of the work of Jesus invited to a contemplation of his whole work. Peter would not have done justice to the character and work of Christ if he had not introduced that great design which he had in view to save men from death and hell. It is probable, also, that he advanced a sentiment in which he expected they would immediately concur, and which accorded with their well-known opinions, that salvation was to be obtained only by the Messiah. Thus Paul (Ac. xxvi. 22, 23) says that he taught nothing else than what was delivered by Moses and the prophets, &c. Comp. Ac. xxiii. 6; xxvi. 6. The apostles did not pretend to proclaim any doctrine which was not delivered by Moses and the prophets, and which did not, in fact, constitute a part of the creed of the Jewish nation. ¶ In any other. Any other person. He does not mean to say that God is not able to save, but that the salvation of the human family is intrusted to the hands of Jesus the Messiah. ¶ For there is none other name. This is an explanation of what he had said in the previous part of the verse. The word name here is used to denote the person himself—there is no other being or person. As other 'name under heaven given

among men whereby we must be saved.

we would say, there is no one who can save but Jesus Christ. The word name is often used in this sense. See Notes on iii. 6, 16. That there is no other Saviour, or mediator between God and man, is abundantly taught in the New Testament; and it is, indeed, the main design of revelation to prove this. See 1 Ti. ii. 5, 6; Ac. x. 43. ¶ Under heaven. This expression does not materially differ from the one immediately following, "among men." They are designed to express with emphasis the sentiment that salvation is to be obtained in Christ alone, and not in any patriarch, or prophet, or teacher, or king, or in any false Messiah. ¶ Given. In this word it is implied that salvation has its origin in God; that a Saviour for men must be given by him; and that salvation cannot be originated by any power among men. The Lord Jesus is thus uniformly represented as given or appointed by God for this great purpose (Jn. iii. 16; xvii. 4; 1 Co. iii. 5; Ga. i. 4; ii. 20; Ep. i. 22; v. 25; 1 Ti. ii. 6; Ro. v. 15-18, 23); and hence Christ is called the "unspeakable gift" of God, 2 Co. ix. 15. ¶ Whereby we must be saved. By which it is fit, or proper (δικαιος), that we should be saved. There is no other way of salvation that is adapted to the great object contemplated, and therefore, if saved, it must be in this way and by this plan. The schemes of men's own devices are not adapted to the purpose, and therefore cannot save. The doctrine that men can be saved only by Jesus Christ is abundantly taught in the Scriptures. To show the failure of all other schemes of religion was the great design of the first part of the epistle to the Romans. By a laboured argument Paul there shows (ch. i.) that the Gentiles had failed in their attempt to justify themselves; and in ch. ii. iii. that the same thing was true also of the Jews. If both these schemes failed, then there was need of some other plan, and that plan was that by Jesus Christ. If it be asked, then, whether this affirmation of Peter is to be understood as having respect to infants and the heathen, we may remark, (1) That his design was primarily to address the Jews, "Whereby we must be saved." But, (2) The same thing is doubtless true of others. If, as Christians generally believe, infants are saved, there is no absurdity in supposing that it is by the merits of the atonement. But for that there would have been no promise of salvation to any of the human race. No offer has been made except by the Mediator; and to him, doubtless, is to be ascribed all the glory of raising up even those in infancy to eternal life. If any of the heathen are to be saved, as most Christians suppose, and as seems in accordance with the mercy of God, it is no less certain that it will be in consequence of the intervention of Christ. Those who will be brought to heaven will sing one song (Re. v. 9), and will be prepared for eternal union in the service of God in the skies. Still, the Scriptures have not declared that great numbers of the heathen will be saved who have not the gospel. The contrary is more than implied in the New Testament, Ro. ii. 12. Neither has the Scripture affirmed that all the heathen will certainly be cut off. It has been discovered by missionaries among the heathen that individuals have, in a remarkable way, been convinced of the folly of idolatry, and were seeking a better religion; that their minds were in a serious, thoughtful, inquiring state; and that they at once embraced the gospel when it was offered to them as exactly adapted to their state of mind, and as meeting their inquiries. Such was extensively the case in the Sandwich Islands; and the following instance recently occurred in this country: "The Flathead Indians, living west of the Rocky Mountains, recently sent a deputation to the white settlements to inquire after the Bible. The circumstance that led to this singular movement is as follows: It appears that a white man (Mr. Catlin) had penetrated into their country, and happened to be a spectator at one of their religious ceremonies. He informed them that their mode of worshipping the Supreme Being was radically wrong, and that the people away towards the rising of the sun had been put in possession of the true mode of worshipping the Great Spirit. On receiving this information, they called a national council to take this subject into consideration. Some said, if this be true, it is certainly high time we were put in possession of this mode. They accordingly deputed four of the chiefs to proceed to St. Louis to see their great father, General Clark, to inquire of him the truth of this matter. They were cordially received by the general, who gave them a succinct history of revelation, and the necessary instruction relative to their important mission. Two of them sunk under the severe toils attending a journey of 3000 miles. The remaining two, after acquiring what knowledge they could of the Bible, its institutions and precepts, returned, to carry back those few rays of divine light to their benighted countrymen." In what way their minds were led to this state we cannot say, or how this preparation for the gospel was connected with the agency and merits of Christ we perhaps cannot understand; but we know that the affairs of this entire world are placed under the control of Christ (Jn. xvii. 2; Ep. i. 21, 22), and that the arrangements of events by which such men were brought to this state of mind are in his hands. Another remark may here be made. It is, that it often occurs that blessings come upon us from benefactors whom we do not see, and from sources which we cannot trace. On this principle we receive many of the mercies of life; and from anything that appears, in this way many blessings of salvation may be conferred on the world, and possibly many of the heathen be saved. Still, this view does not interfere with the command of Christ to preach the gospel, Mar. xvi. 15. The great mass of the heathen are not in this state; but the fact here adverted to, so far as it goes, is an encouragement to preach the gospel to the entire world. If Christ thus prepares the way; if he extensively fits the minds of the heathen for the reception of the gospel; if he shows them the evil and folly of their own system, and leads them to desire a better, then this should operate not to produce indolence, but activity, and zeal, and encouragement to enter into the field white for the harvest, and to toil that all who seek the truth, and are prepared to embrace the gospel, may be brought to the light of the Sun of righteousness.

It stands opposed to hesitancy, and to equivocation in declaring our sentiments. Here it means that, in spite of danger and opposition, they avowed their doctrines without any attempt to conceal or disguise them. ¶ Peter and John. It was they only who had been concerned in the healing of the lame man, ch. iii. 1. ¶ And perceived. When they knew that they were unlearned. This might have been ascertained either by report or by the manner of their speaking. ¶ Unlearned. This word properly denotes those who were not acquainted with letters, or who had not had the benefit of an education. ¶ Ignorant men—idōrtae. This word properly denotes those who live in private, in contradistinction from those who are engaged in public life or in office. As this class of persons is commonly also supposed to be less learned, talented, and refined than those in office, it comes to denote those who are rude and illiterate. The idea intended to be conveyed here is, that these men had not had opportunities of education (comp. Mat. iv. 18-21), and had not been accustomed to public speaking, and hence they were surprised at their boldness. This same character is uniformly attributed to the early preachers of Christianity. Comp. 1 Co. i. 27; Mat. xi. 25. The Galileans were regarded by the Jews as particularly rude and uncultivated, Mat. xxvi. 73; Mar. xiv. 17. ¶ They marvelled. They wondered that men who had not been educated in the schools of the Rabbins, and accustomed to speak in public, should declare their sentiments with so much boldness. ¶ And they took knowledge. This expression means simply that they knew, or that they obtained evidence that they had been with Jesus. It is not said in what way they obtained this evidence, but the connection leads us to suppose it was by the miracle which they had wrought, by their firm and bold declaration of the doctrines of Jesus, and perhaps by the irresistible conviction that none would be thus bold who had not been personally with him, and who had not the firmest conviction that he was the Messiah. They had not been trained in their schools, and their boldness could not be attributed to the arts marvelled; and they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

14 And beholding the man of rhetoric, but was the native, ingenuous, and manly exhibition of a deep conviction of the truth of what they spoke, and that conviction could have been obtained only by their having been with him, and having been satisfied that he was the Messiah. Such conviction is of far more value in preaching than all the mere teachings of the schools; and without such a conviction, all preaching will be frigid, hypocritical, and useless. ¶ Had been with Jesus. Had been his followers, and had attended personally on his ministry. They gave evidence that they had seen him, been with him, heard him, and were convinced that he was the Messiah. We may learn here, (1) That if men wish to be successful in preaching, it must be based on deep and thorough conviction of the truth of that which they deliver. (2) They who preach should give evidence that they are acquainted with the Lord Jesus Christ; that they have imbibed his spirit, pondered his instructions, studied the evidences of his divine mission, and are thoroughly convinced that he was from God. (3) Boldness and success in the ministry, as well as in everything else, will depend far more on honest, genuine, thorough conviction of the truth than on the endowments of talent and learning, and the arts and skill of eloquence. No man should attempt to preach without such a thorough conviction of truth; and no man who has it will preach in vain. (4) God often employs the ignorant and unlearned to confound the wise, 1 Co. i. 27, 28. But it is not by their ignorance. It was not the ignorance of Peter and John that convinced the Sanhedrim. It was done in spite of their ignorance. It was their boldness and their honest conviction of truth. Besides, though not learned in the schools of the Jews, they had been under a far more important training, under the personal direction of Christ himself, for three years; and now they were directly endowed by the Holy Ghost with the power of speaking with tongues. Though not taught in the schools, yet there was an important sense in which they were not unlearned and ignorant men. Their example should not, therefore, be pled which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

in favour of an unlearned ministry. Christ himself expressed his opposition to an unlearned ministry by teaching them himself, and then by bestowing on them miraculous endowments which no learning at present can furnish. It may be remarked, further, that in the single selection which he made of an apostle after his ascension to heaven, when he came to choose one who had not been under his personal teaching, he chose a learned man, the apostle Paul, and thus evinced his purpose that there should be training or education in those who are invested with the sacred office. (5) Yet in the case before us there is a striking proof of the truth and power of religion. These men had not acquired their boldness in the schools; they were not trained for argument among the Jews; they did not meet them by cunning sophistry; but they came with the honest conviction that what they were saying was true. Were they deceived? Were they not competent to bear witness? Had they any motive to attempt to palm a falsehood on men? Infidelity must answer many such questions as these before the apostles can be convicted of imposture.

14. They could say nothing, &c. The presence of the man that was healed was an unanswerable fact in proof of the truth of what the apostles alleged. The miracle was so public, clear, and decisive; the man that was healed was so well known, that there was no evasion or subterfuge by which they could escape the conclusion to which the apostles were conducting them. It evinced no little gratitude in the man that was healed that he was present on this occasion, and showed that he was deeply interested in what befell his benefactors. The miracles of Jesus and his apostles were such that they could not be denied, and hence the Jews did not attempt to deny that they wrought them. Comp. Mat. xii. 24; Jn. xi. 45, 46; Ac. xix. 36.

15-18. What shall we do to these men? The object which they had in view was evidently to prevent their preaching. The miracle was wrought, and it was believed by the people to have been manded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, "What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell at Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it."

wrought. This they could not expect to be able successfully to deny. Their only object, therefore, was to prevent the apostles from making the use which they saw they would to convince the people that Jesus was the Messiah. The question was, in what way they should prevent this; whether by putting them to death, by imprisoning them, or by scourging them; or whether by simply exerting their authority and forbidding them. From the former they were deterred, doubtless, by fear of the multitude; and they therefore adopted the latter, and seemed to suppose that the mere exertion of their authority would be sufficient to deter them from this in future. ¶ The council. Greek, The Sanhedrim. This body was composed of seventy-one or seventy-two persons, and was intrusted with the principal affairs of the nation. It was a body of vast influence and power, and hence they supposed that their command might be sufficient to restrain ignorant Galileans from speaking. Before this same body, and probably the same men, our Saviour was arraigned, and by them condemned before he was delivered to the Roman governor, Mat. xxvi. 59, &c. And before this same body, and in the presence of the same men, Peter had just before denied his Lord, Mat. xxvi. 70, &c. The fact that the disciples had fled on a former occasion, and that Peter had denied his Saviour, may have operated to induce them to believe that they would be terrified by their threats, and deterred from preaching publicly in the name of Jesus. ¶ A notable miracle. A known, undeniable miracle. ¶ That it spread. That the knowledge of it may not spread among them any farther. ¶ Let us straitly threaten them. Greek, Let us threaten them with a threat. This is a Hebraism expressing intensity, certainty, &c. The threat was a command (ver. 18) among the people, let us straitly threaten them, "that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

not to teach, implying their displeasure if they did do it. This threat, however, was not effectual. On the next occasion, which occurred soon after (ch. v. 40), they added beating to their threats in order to deter them from preaching in the name of Jesus.

19. Whether it be right, &c. The apostles abated nothing of their boldness when threatened. They openly appealed to their judges whether their command could be right. And in doing this, they expressed their full conviction of the truth of what they had said, and their deliberate purpose not to regard their command, but still to proclaim to the people the truth that Jesus was the Messiah. ¶ In the sight of God. That is, whether God will judge this to be right. The grand question was how God would regard it. If he disapproved it, it was wrong. It was not merely a question pertaining to their reputation, safety, or life; it was a question of conscience before God. We have here a striking instance of the principle on which Christians act. It is, to lay their safety, reputation, and life out of view, and bring everything to the test WHETHER IT WILL PLEASE GOD. If it will, it is right; if it will not, it is wrong. ¶ To hearken. To hear and to hearken are often used to denote to obey, Jn. v. 24; viii. 47, &c. ¶ Judge ye. This was an appeal to them directly as judges and as men. And it may be presumed that it was an appeal which they could not resist. The Sanhedrim acknowledged itself to have been appointed by God, and to have no authority which was not derived from his appointment. Of course, God could modify, supersede, or repeal their authority; and the abstract principle that it was better to obey God than man they could not call in question. The only inquiry was whether they had evidence that God had issued any command in the case. Of

that the apostles were satisfied, and that the rulers could not deny. It may be remarked that this is one of the first and most bold appeals on record in favour of the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience. That liberty was supposed in all the Jewish religion. It was admitted that the authority of God in all matters was superior to that of man. And the same spirit manifested itself thus early in the Christian church against all dominion over the conscience, and in favour of the right to follow the dictates of the conscience and the will of God. As a mere historical fact, therefore, it is interesting to contemplate this, and still more interesting in its important bearings on human liberty and human happiness. The doctrine is still more explicitly stated in ch. v. 29, "We ought to obey God rather than man."

20. For, &c. This is given as a reason why they should obey God rather than man. They had had so clear evidence that God had sent the Messiah, and they had received a direct and solemn command (Mar. xvi. 15) to preach the gospel, that they could not be restrained. There was a necessity laid on them to preach. See 1 Co. ix. 16. Comp. Je. xx. 9; Ac. xviii. 5; Job xxxii. 18, 19; Ps. xxxix. 1-3.

It has already been remarked that these two verses contain an important principle in favour of religious liberty—the liberty of conscience and of private judgment. They contain the great principle of Christianity and of the Protestant religion, that the responsibility of men for their religious opinions is direct to God, and that other men have no power of control. The opposite of this is tyranny and oppression. It may be proper, in addition, to present some further remarks, involved in the principle here stated. (1) Religion, from the beginning, has been favourable to liberty. There was no principle more sacred among the Jews than that they were to be independent of other nations. Perhaps no people have ever been so restive under a foreign yoke, so prone to rebel, and so difficult to be broken down by oppression and by arms, as were the Jews. So true was this, that it appeared to other nations to be mere obstinacy. They were often subdued,

but they rose against their oppressors and threw off the yoke. No people have been found who were so difficult to be reduced to slavery. It is well known that the Romans were accustomed to subject the captives taken in war to perpetual servitude; and commonly the spirit of the captive was broken, and he remained quietly in bondage. But not so the Jew. Nothing ever tamed his spirit. No bribes, or threats, or chains could induce him to violate the laws of his religion. Even in captivity, we are told that the Jewish slaves at Rome would observe the Sabbath; would keep the feasts of their nation, and would never conform to the customs of an idolatrous people. To the Romans this appeared to be mere obstinacy. But it was the genius of their religion. The right of liberty of thought was one which they would not surrender. The spirit of the patriarchs was favourable to liberty, and implied responsibility only to God. Familiarity with the sacred books had taught them these lessons, and neither time nor distance could obliterate them. In the time of Christ, the great mass of the nation were evidently opposed to the tax paid to the Roman nation, and sighed under this burden, until they rose and attempted to assert their rights; and their city, and temple, and land were sacrificed rather than yield this great principle. (2) This same principle was evinced by the apostles and by the early Christians. With this doctrine fresh upon their hearts, they went forth to other lands. They maintained it at the expense of their blood, and thousands fell as martyrs in the cause of liberty and of private judgment in religion. No men ever more firmly defended liberty than the early martyrs; and each one that died, died in defence of a principle which is now the acknowledged right of all men. (3) The designs of tyranny and superstition have been to destroy this principle. This was the aim of the Sanhedrim; and yet, when Peter and John appealed to their consciences, they did not dare to avow their purpose. This has been the aim of all tyrants, and this the effect of all superstition. Hence the Church of Rome has taken away the Scriptures from the people, and has thus furnished incontestable evidence that in its view the Bible

the things which we have seen and heard.

is favourable to liberty. For centuries tyranny reigned in one black night over Europe; nor was the darkness dispelled until the Bible, that taught men the principles of freedom, was restored to them. (4) The effect of the principle avowed by the apostles had been uniform. Luther began the Reformation by finding in a monastery a copy of the Bible, a book which till that time—when more than twenty years of age—he had never seen. The effect on the liberties of Europe was immediately seen. Hume admitted that whatever liberty England possessed was to be traced to the Puritans. Our own land (America) is a striking instance of the effect of this great principle, and of its influence on the rights of man. And just in proportion as the New Testament is spread abroad will men seek for freedom and break the chains of oppression. The best way to promote universal liberty is to spread the Bible to the ends of the earth. There is not a precept in it that is not favourable to freedom. It tends to enlarge and liberalize the mind; to teach men their rights; to put an end to ignorance, the universal stronghold of superstition and tyranny; and to diffuse the love of justice, truth, and order. It shows man that he is responsible to God, and that no one has a right to ordain anything which contravenes the liberty of his fellow.

If it be asked here what the principle is, I answer, (1) That men have a right to their private judgment in matters of religion, subject only to God. The only restraint which, it is now settled, can be imposed on this, is, that no man has a right, under pretence of conscience, to injure or molest his fellow-men, or to disturb the peace and harmony of society. (2) No magistrate, church, council, or parent, has a right to impose a creed on others, and to demand subscription to it by mere authority. (3) No magistrate, church, or parent, has a right to control the free exercise of private judgment in this case. The power of a parent is to teach, advise, and entreat. The duty of a child is to listen with respect; to examine with candour; to pray over the subject, and to be deliberate and calm, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

not rash, hasty, impetuous, and self-willed. But when the child is thus convinced that his duty to God requires a particular course, then here is a higher obligation than any earthly law, and he must obey God rather than man, even a father or a mother, Mat. x. 37, 38. (4) Every man is responsible to God for his opinions and his conduct. Man may not control him, but God may and will. The great question before every man is, What is right in the sight of God? It is not, What is expedient, or safe, or pleasurable, or honourable among men? but, What is right in the sight of God? Neither in their opinions nor their conduct are men free from responsibility. From this whole subject we see the duty of spreading the Bible. If we love liberty; if we hate tyranny and superstition; if we wish to extend the knowledge of the rights of man, and break every arm of oppression, let us spread far and wide the Book of God, and place in every palace and every cottage on the globe a copy of the sacred Scriptures.

21. Finding nothing, &c. That is, not being able to devise any way of punishing them without exciting a tumult among the people, and endangering their own authority. The Sanhedrim was frequently influenced by this fear; and it shows that their own authority was much dependent on the caprice of the multitude. Comp. Mat. xxi. 26.

¶ All men. That is, the great mass or body of the people. ¶ Glorified God. Praised God for the miracle. This implies, (1) That they believed that the miracle was genuine. (2) That they were grateful to God for so signal a mercy in conferring health and comfort on a man who had been long afflicted. We may add further, that here is the highest evidence of the reality of the miracle. Even the Sanhedrim, with all their prejudice and opposition, did not call it in question; and the common people, who had doubtless been acquainted with this man for years, were convinced that it was real. It would have been impossible to impose on keen-sighted and jealous adversaries in this manner if this had been an imposture.

22. For the man, &c. The age of the man is mentioned to show the certainty and greatness of the miracle. If it had been a man who had been lame but a few years, or if it had been a child or a very young man, the case would not have been so remarkable. But after a continuance of forty years, all hope of healing him by any ordinary means must have been abandoned, and all pretence that this was jugglery or deception must have been absurd.

23. Their own company. They joined the other apostles and Christians, ch. ii. 44, 45. ¶ And reported, &c. It doubtless became a subject of interesting inquiry what they should do in this case. They had been threatened by the highest authority of the nation, and commanded not to preach again in the name of Jesus. Whether they should obey them and be silent, or whether they should leave Jerusalem and preach elsewhere, could not but be an interesting subject of inquiry, and they very properly sought the counsel of their brethren, and looked to God for direction, an example which all should follow who are exposed to persecution, or who are in any perplexity about the path of duty.

24. They lifted up their voice. To lift up the voice, among the Hebrews, was a phrase denoting either an address to the people (Ju. ix. 7), or a phrase expressive of weeping (Ge. xxix. 11; Ju. ii. 4; Ru. i. 9; 1 Sa. xxiv. 16), or of prayer. To lift up the voice to God means simply they prayed to him. ¶ With one accord. Unitedly. Properly, with one mind or purpose. See Notes on ch. i. 14. The union of the early Christians is often noticed in the Acts of the Apostles. Thus far there was no jar or dissension in their society, and everything has the appearance of the most entire affection and confidence. ¶ Lord. Greek, Διοκτήτης — Despota. From this word is derived the word despot. This is not the usual word employed by which to address God. The word commonly translated Lord

24 And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, 'Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is;

is Kυρίος—Kurios. The word here used denotes one who rules over others, and was applied to the highest magistrate or officer. It denotes authority; power; absoluteness in ruling. It is a word denoting more authority in ruling than the other. That more commonly denotes a property in a thing; this denotes absolute rule. It is applied to God in Lu. ii. 29; Re. vi. 10; Jude 4; to Jesus Christ, 2 Pe. ii. 1; to masters, 1 Ti. vi. 1; Tit. ii. 9; 1 Pe. ii. 18; to husbands, 1 Pe. iii. 6; and to a possessor or owner, 2 Ti. ii. 21. ¶ Thou art God. This ascription of praise seems to have been designed to denote their sense of his power to deliver them, and of his right to dispose of them. They were employed in his service; they were encompassed with dangers; and they acknowledged him as their God, who had made all things, and who had an entire right to direct, and to dispose of them for his own glory. In times of danger and perplexity we should remember that God has a right to do with us as he pleases; and we should go cheerfully, and commit ourselves into his hands. ¶ Which hast made, &c., Ge. i. This passage is taken directly from Ps. cxvi. 6. Comp. Re. xiv. 7.

25. Who by the mouth, &c., Ps. ii. 1, 2. This is a strong, solemn testimony to the inspiration of David. It is a declaration of the apostles, made in solemn prayer, that God himself spake by the mouth of David. This is the second part of their prayer. In the first, they acknowledge the right of God to rule; in this, they appeal to a prophecy; they plead that this was a thing foretold; and as God had foreseen it and foretold it, they appealed to him to protect them. The times of tumult and opposition which had been foreseen, as about to attend the introduction of the gospel, had now come. They inferred, therefore, that Jesus was the Messiah; and as God had designed to establish his kingdom, they appealed to him to aid and protect them in this great work.

servant David hast said, "Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?"

This passage is taken from Ps. ii. 1, 2, and is an exact quotation from the Septuagint. This proves that the Psalm had reference to the Messiah. Thus it was manifestly understood by the Jews; and the authority of the apostles settles the question. The Psalm was composed by David, but on what occasion is not known; nor is it material to our present purpose. It has been a matter of inquiry whether it referred to the Messiah primarily, or only in a secondary sense. Grotius supposes that it was composed by David when exposed to the hostility of the Assyrians, the Moabites, Philistines, Amalekites, &c.; and that, in the midst of his dangers, he sought consolation in the purpose of God to establish him and his kingdom. But the more probable opinion is, that it referred directly and solely to the Messiah. ¶ Why did the heathen. The nations which were not Jews. This refers, doubtless, to the opposition which would be made to the spread of Christianity, and not merely to the opposition made to the Messiah himself, and to the act of putting him to death. ¶ Rage. This word refers to the excitement and tumult of a multitude; not a settled plan, but rather the heated and disorderly conduct of a mob. It means that the progress of the gospel would encounter tumultuous opposition, and that the excited nations would rush violently to put it down and destroy it. ¶ And the people. The expression "the people" does not refer to a class of men different essentially from the heathen. The "heathen," Heb. and Greek, "the nations," refer to men as organized into communities; the expression the people is used to denote the same persons without respect to their being so organized. The Hebrews were in the habit, in their poetry, of expressing the same idea essentially in parallel members of a sentence; that is, the last member of a sentence or verse expressed the same idea, with some slight variation, as the former. (See Lowth on the sacred poetry of the Hebrews.) ¶ Imagine. The word imagine does not quite express the force of the original. The Hebrew and the Greek both convey the idea of meditating, thinking, purposing.

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together, against the Lord, and against his Christ.

It means that they employed thought, plan, purpose, in opposing the Messiah. ¶ Vain things. The word here used (κίνδυνος) is a literal translation of the Hebrew p̄n, and means usually empty, as a vessel which is not filled; then useless, or that which amounts to nothing, &c. Here it means that they devised a plan which turned out to be vain or ineffective. They attempted an opposition to the Messiah which could not succeed. God would establish his kingdom in spite of their plans to oppose it. Their efforts were vain because they were not strong enough to oppose God; because he had purposed to establish the kingdom of his Son; and because he could overrule even their opposition to advance his cause.

26. The kings of the earth. The Psalmist specifies more particularly that kings and rulers would be opposed to the Messiah. This had occurred already by the opposition made to the Messiah by the rulers of the Jewish people, and it would be still more evinced by the opposition of princes and kings as the gospel spread among the nations.

¶ Stood up. The word here used (ταξιδιωμα) commonly means to present one's self, or to stand forth, for the purpose of aiding, counselling, &c. But here it means that they rose, or presented themselves, to evince their opposition. They stood opposed to the Messiah, and offered resistance to him.

¶ The rulers. This is another instance of the Hebrew parallelism. The word does not denote another class of men from kings, but expresses the same idea in another form, or in a more general manner, meaning that all classes of persons in authority would be opposed to the gospel. ¶ Were gathered together. Hebrew, consulted together; were united in a consultation. The Greek implies that they were assembled for the purpose of consultation.

¶ Against the Lord. In the Hebrew, "against Jehovah." This is the peculiar name which is given in the Scriptures to God. They rose against his plan of appointing a Messiah, and against the Messiah whom he had chosen. ¶ Against his Christ. Hebrew, against his Messiah, or his Anointed. See Notes on Mat. i. 1. This is one of the places where the word Messiah is used in the Old Testament. The word occurs in about forty places, and is commonly translated his anointed, and is applied to kings. The direct reference of the word to the Messiah in the Old Testament is not frequent. This passage implies that opposition to the Messiah is opposition to Jehovah. And this is uniformly supposed in the sacred Scriptures. He that is opposed to Christ is opposed to God. He that neglects him neglects God. He that despises him despises God, Mat. x. 40; xviii. 5; Jn. xii. 44, 45; Lu. x. 16, "He that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me." The reasons of this are: (1) That the Messiah is "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person," He. i. 3. (2) He is equal with the Father, possessing the same attributes and the same power, Jn. i. 1; Phi. ii. 6. (3) He is appointed by God to this great work of saving men. To despise him, or to oppose him, is to despise and oppose him who appointed him to this work, to contemn his counsels, and to set him at naught. (4) His work is dear to God. It has engaged his thoughts. It has been approved by him. His mission has been confirmed by the miraculous power of the Father, and by every possible manifestation of his approbation and love. To oppose the Messiah is, therefore, to oppose that which is dear to the heart of God, and which has long been the object of his tender solicitude. It follows from this, that they who neglect the Christian religion are exposing themselves to the displeasure of God, and endangering their everlasting interests. No man is safe who opposes God; and no man can have evidence that God will approve him who does not embrace the Messiah, whom He has appointed to redeem the world.

27. For of a truth. Truly; in reality. <sup>w</sup> Thy holy child Jesus. The word child is commonly applied to infants, or to sons and daughters in very early life. The word which is used here (ταῖς) is different from that which is commonly applied to the Lord Jesus (νιός). The latter expresses sonship without respect to age. The word which is here used also sometimes expresses sonship without any regard to age, and the word son would have been a more happy translation. Thus the same word is translated in Ac. iii. 13, 26. In Ac. xx. 12, it is translated "young man." <sup>w</sup> Both Herod, &c. Lu. xxiii. 1-12. <sup>w</sup> With the Gentiles. The Romans, to whom he was delivered to be crucified. <sup>w</sup> The people of Israel. The Jews, who were excited to this by the rulers, Mat. xxvii. 20.

28. For to do, &c. See Notes on ch. ii. 23; iii. 18. The facts which are brought to view in these verses are among the most remarkable on record. They are briefly these: (1) That the Jewish rulers were opposed to the Messiah, and slew him. (2) That the very people to whom he came, and for whose benefit he laboured, joined in the opposition, so that it became the act of a united people. (3) That the Romans, who were there as a sort of representation of all pagan nations, were easily prevailed on to join in the persecution, and to become the executioners. (4) That thus opposite factions, and dissimilar and prejudiced people, became united in opposing the Messiah. (5) That the rulers of the Roman people, the emperors, the statesmen, the philosophers, and the rulers of other nations, united to oppose the gospel, and brought all the power of persecution to stay its progress. (6) That the people of the empire, the mass of men, were easily prevailed upon to join in the persecution, and to endeavour to arrest its progress. It may be added, (7) That the gospel has encountered similar difficulties and opposition wherever it has been faithfully presented to the attention of men. It has become a very serious question why this has been; on what pretence this opposition has been vindicated, or how it can be accounted for—a question which it is of as much importance for the infidel as for the Christian to settle. We know that accusations of the corrupt lives of the early Christians were freely circulated, and that most gross accounts of their scandalous conduct were propagated by those who chose to persecute them. (See Lardner's Credibility.) But such accounts are not now believed, and it is not certain that they were ever seriously believed by the rulers of the pagan people. It is certain that it was not on this account that the first opposition arose to Christ and his religion.

It is not proper here to enter into an examination of the causes of this opposition. We may state the outlines, however, in few words. (1) The Jewish rulers were mortified, humbled, and moved with envy, that one so poor and despised should claim to be the Messiah. They had expected a Messiah of a different rank and character; and all their prejudices rose at once against his claims to this high office, Mat. xxvii. 18; Mar. xv. 10. (2) The common people, disposed extensively to acknowledge his claims, were urged on by the enraged and vindictive priests to demand his death, Mat. xxvii. 20. (3) Pilate was pressed on against his will by the impetuous and enraged multitude to deliver one whom he regarded as innocent. (4) The Christian religion, in its advances, struck at once at the whole fabric of superstition in the Roman empire and throughout the world. It did not, like other religions, ask a place amidst the religions already existing. It was exclusive in its claims. It denounced all other systems as idolatry or superstition, and sought to overthrow them. Those religions were interwoven with all the habits of the people; they were connected with all the departments of the state; they gave occupation to a vast number of priests and other officers who obtained their livelihood by the existing superstitions, and who brought, of course, all the supposed sacredness of their character to support them. A religion which attempted to overthrow the whole fabric, therefore, at once excited all their malice. The monarchs whose thrones were based on the existing state of things, and the people who venerated the religion of their ancestors, would be opposed to the new system. (5) Christianity was despised. It was regarded as one form of the superstition of the Jews, and there were no people who were regarded with so much contempt by other nations as the Jews. The writings of the Romans on this point are full proof. (6) The new religion was opposed to all the crimes of the world. It began its career in a time of eminent wickedness. It plunged at once into the midst of that wickedness; sought the great cities where crimes and pollutions were concentrated, and boldly reproved every form of prevailing impiety. At Athens, at Corinth, at Ephesus, at Rome itself, it denounced the judgment of God against every form of guilt. Whatever may be charged on the apostles, it will not be alleged that they were timid in denouncing the sins of the world. From all these causes it is not wonderful that the early Christians were persecuted. If it be asked (7) Why the same religion meets with opposition now in lands that are nominally Christian, it may be remarked, (a) that the human heart is the same that it always was, opposed to truth and righteousness; (b) that religion encounters still a host of sins that are opposed to it—pride, envy, malice, passion, and the love of the world; (c) that there has always been a peculiar opposition in the human heart to receiving salvation as the gift of God through a crucified Redeemer; and (d) that all the forms of vice, and lust, and profaneness that exist in the world, are opposed, and even will be, to a religion of purity, self-denial, and love.

On the whole, we may remark here, (1) That the fact that Christianity has been thus opposed, and has triumphed, is no small proof of its divine origin. It has been fairly tried, and still survives. It was well to put it to the test, and to bring to bear on it everything which had a tendency to crush it, and thus to furnish the highest proof that it is from God. (2) This religion cannot be destroyed; it will triumph; opposition to it is vain; it will make its way throughout the world; and the path of safety is not to oppose that which God is intending to establish in the earth. Sinners who stand opposed to the gospel should tremble and be afraid, for sooner or later they must fall before its triumphant advances. It is not SAFE to oppose that which has already been opposed by kings and rulers in every form, and yet has triumphed. It is not WISE to risk one's eternal welfare on the question of suc-servants, that "with all boldness they may speak thy word, the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and "they spake the word of God with boldness.

cessful opposition to that which God has, in so many ages and ways, pledged himself to protect; and when God has solemnly declared that the Son, the Messiah, whom he would set on his holy hill of Zion, should "break" his enemies "with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel," Ps. ii. 9.

29. Behold their threatenings. So look upon them as to grant us deliverance. They did not purpose to abandon their undertaking; they resolved to persevere; and they expected that this purpose would involve them in danger. With this purpose they implored the protection of God; they asked that he would not suffer them to be deterred from speaking boldly; and they sought that constant additional proof might be granted of the presence and power of God to confirm the truth of their message. ¶ And grant, &c. This is an instance of heroic boldness, and a determination to persevere in doing their duty to God. When we are assailed by those in power; when we are persecuted and in danger, we should commit our way unto God, and seek his aid, that we may not be deterred from the path of duty.

30. By stretching forth thine hand, &c. The apostles not only desired boldness to speak, but they asked that God would continue to work miracles, and thus furnish to them, and to the people, evidence of the truth of what they delivered. They did not even ask that he would preserve their lives, or keep them from danger. They were intent on their work, and they confidently committed their way to God, making it their great object to promote the knowledge of the truth, and seeking that God would glorify himself by establishing his kingdom among men. ¶ Signs and wonders. Miracles. See Notes on ch. ii. 43.

31. And when they had prayed. The event which followed was regarded by them as an evidence that God heard their prayer. ¶ The place was shaken. The word which is translated "was shaken" commonly denotes violent agitation, as the raging of the sea, the convulsion of an earthquake, or trees shaken by the wind, Mat. xi. 7; Ac. xvi. 26; He. xii. 26. The language here is fitted to express the idea of an earthquake. Whether the motion was confined to the house where they were is not said. They probably regarded this as an answer to their prayer, or as an evidence that God would be with them, (1) Because it was sudden and violent, and was not produced by any natural causes; (2) Because it occurred immediately, while they were seeking divine direction; (3) Because it was an exhibition of great power, and was an evidence that God could protect them; and (4) Because a convulsion so great, sudden, and mighty was fitted at that time to awe them with a proof of the presence and power of God. A similar instance of an answer to prayer by an earthquake is recorded in Ac. xvi. 25, 26. Comp. ch. ii. 1, 2. It may be added, that among the Jews an earthquake was very properly regarded as a striking and impressive proof of the presence of Jehovah, Is. xxix. 6; Ps. lxxviii. 8, "The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God; even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Israel." See also the sublime description in Hab. iii., particularly ver. 6-11. Comp. Mat. xxvii. 54. Among the heathen, an earthquake was regarded as proof of the presence and favour of the Deity. (See Virgil, Aeneid, iii. 89.) ¶ They were all filled, &c. See Notes on ch. ii. 4. Their being filled with the Holy Ghost here rather denotes their being inspired with confidence or boldness than being endowed with new powers, as in Ac. ii. 4.

32. And the multitude. The number of believers at this time had become large. In ch. iv. 4, it is said that it and of one soul: neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but "they had all things common."

was five thousand, and the number was constantly increasing. ¶ One heart. This expression denotes tender union. They felt alike, or were attached to the same things, and this preserved them from jars and dissensions. ¶ One soul. This phrase also denotes close and tender union. No expression could denote it more strikingly than to say of friends they have one soul. Plutarch cites an ancient verse in his life of Cato of Utica with this very expression—"Two friends, one soul" (Grotius). Thus Diogenes Laertius also (5, i. 11) says respecting Aristotle, that "being asked what was a friend, answered that it was one soul dwelling in two bodies" (Kuinioel). The Hebrews spoke of two friends as being "one man." There can be no more striking demonstration of union and love than to say of more than five thousand suddenly drawn together that they had one soul! And this union they evinced in every way possible—in their conduct, in their prayers, and in their property. How different would have been the aspect of the church if the union had continued to the present time! ¶ Neither said, &c. That is, they did not regard it as their own, but to be used for the benefit of the whole society. See Notes on ch. ii. 44.

33. And with great power. See ch. i. 8. The word power here denotes efficacy, and means that they had ability given them to bear witness of the resurrection of the Saviour. It refers, therefore, rather to their preaching than to their miracles. ¶ Gave the apostles witness. The apostles bore testimony to. ¶ The resurrection of the Lord Jesus. This was the main point to be established. If it proved that the Lord Jesus came to life again after having been put to death, it established all that he taught, and was a demonstration that he was sent from God. They exerted, therefore, all their powers to prove this, and their success was such as might have been expected. Multitudes were converted to the Christian faith. ¶ And great grace, &c. The word grace means favour. See Notes on Jn. i. 16. The expression here may mean either that the favour of God was remarkably shown to them, or that they had great favour in the sight of the people. It does not refer, as the expression now does commonly, to the internal blessings of religion on a man's own soul, to their personal advancement in the Christian graces, but to the favour or success that attended their preaching. The meaning probably is, that the favour of the people toward them was great, or that great success attended their ministry among them. Thus the same word grace (Greek) is used in ch. ii. 47. If this is its meaning, then here is an instance of the power of the testimony of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus to impress the minds of men. But this is not all, nor probably is it the main idea. It is that their union, their benevolence, their liberality in supplying the wants of the needy, was a means of opening the hearts of the people, and of winning them to the Saviour. If we wish to incline others to our opinions, nothing is better adapted to it than to show them kindness, and even to minister to their temporal wants. Benevolence toward them softens the heart, and inclines them to listen to us. It disarms their prejudices, and disposes them to the exercise of the mild and amiable feelings of religion. Hence our Saviour was engaged in healing the diseases and supplying the wants of the people. He drew around him the poor, the needy, and the diseased, and supplied their necessities, and thus prepared them to receive his message of truth. Thus God is love, and is constantly doing good, that his goodness may lead men to repentance, Ro. ii. 4. And hence no persons have better opportunities to spread the true sentiments of religion, or are clothed with higher responsibilities, than those who have it in their power to do good, or than those who are habitually engaged in bestowing favours. Thus physicians have access to the hearts of men which other persons have not. Thus parents have an easy access to the minds of children, for they are constantly doing them good. And thus Sunday-school teachers, whose whole work is a work of benevolence, have direct and most

34. That lacked. That was in want, or whose wants were not supplied by the others. ¶ As many as, &c. The word used here is employed in a large, indefinite sense; but it would be improper to press it so as to suppose that every individual that became a Christian sold at once all his property. The sense doubtless is, that this was done when it was necessary: they parted with whatever property was needful to supply the wants of their poor brethren. That it was by no means considered a matter of obligation, or enjoined by the apostles, is apparent from the case of Ananias, ch. v. 4. The fact that Joses is particularly mentioned (ver. 36) shows that it was by no means a universal practice thus to part with all their possessions. He was one instance in which it was done. Perhaps there were many other similar instances; but all that the passage requires us to believe is, that they parted with whatever was needful to supply the wants of the poor. This was an eminent and instructive instance of Christian liberality, and of the power of the gospel in overcoming one of the strongest passions that ever exist in the human bosom—the love of money. Many of the early Christians were poor. They were collected from the lower orders of the people. But all were not so. Some of them, it seems, were men of affluence; but the effect of religion was to bring them all, in regard to feeling, at least, on a level. They felt that they were members of one family, and they therefore imparted their property cheerfully to their brethren. Besides this, they were about to go to other lands to preach the gospel, and they cheerfully parted with their property that they might go and proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ. See Notes on ch. ii. 44.

35. And laid them down, &c. That is, they committed the money received for their property to the disposal of the apostles, to distribute it as was necessary among the poor. This soon became a burdensome and inconvenient office, and they therefore appointed men who had especial charge of it, ch. vi. 1, 2, &c.

36. And Joses. Many manuscripts, instead of Joses, here read Joseph. The reasons why this individual is selected and specified particularly were, doubtless, because he was a foreigner; because it was a remarkable instance of liberality; and because he subsequently distinguished himself in the work of the ministry. He gave himself, his property, his all, to the service of the Lord Jesus, and went forth to the self-denying labours of the gospel. He is elsewhere mentioned with honour in the New Testament (Ac. xi. 24, 30), and usually as the companion of the apostle Paul. The occasion on which he became connected with Paul in the ministry was when he himself was sent forth by the church at Jerusalem to Antioch. There, it seems, he heard of the fame of Paul and went to Tarsus to seek him, and brought him with him to Antioch, Ac. xi. 22–26. Before this he had been acquainted with him, and had introduced him to the other apostles at a time when they were afraid of Paul, and unwilling to acknowledge him as an apostle, Ac. ix. 26, 27. At Antioch, Barnabas was led into dissimulation by Peter in regard to the Gentiles, and was reproved by his friend and companion, Paul, Ga. ii. 13. He and Paul continued to travel in fellowship until a dispute arose at Antioch about Mark, and they separated, Paul going with Silas through Syria and Cilicia, and Barnabas, with Mark, sailing for his native place, Cyprus, Ac. xv. 35–41. See the following places for particulars of his history: Ac. xi. 22, 25, 30; xii. 25; xiii. 1, 2, 50; xiv. 12; xv. 12; 1 Co. ix. 6; Ga. ii. 1, 9. ¶ Who by the apostles was surnamed, &c. The practice of giving surnames, as expressive of character, was not uncommon. Thus Simon was called Peter, or Cephas, Jn. i. 44; and thus James and John were surnamed Boanerges, Mar. iii. 17. ¶ Barnabas, which is, &c. This word properly denotes the son of prophecy. It is compounded of two Syriac words, the one meaning son, and the other prophecy. The Greek word which is used to interpret this (παρεκλησίας), translated consolation, means properly exhortation, entreaty, petition, or advocacy. It also means consolation or solace; and from this meaning the interpretation has been given to the word Barnabas, but with evident impropriety. It does not appear that the name was bestowed on account of this, though it is probable that he possessed the qualification for administering comfort or consolation in an eminent degree, but on account of his talent for speaking, or exhorting the people to holiness, and his success in preaching. Comp. Ac. xi. 23. ¶ A Levite. One of the descendants of Levi employed in the lower services of the temple. The whole tribe of Levi was set apart to the service of religion. It was divided into priests and Levites. The three sons of Levi were Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. Of the family of Kohath Aaron was descended, who was the first high-priest. His eldest son succeeded him, and the remainder of his sons were priests. All the others of the tribe of Levi were called Levites, and were employed in the work of the temple, in assisting the priests in performing sacred music, &c., Nu. iii.; De. xii. 18, 19; xviii. 6-8; 1 Ch. xxiii. 24. ¶ Of the country of Cyprus. Cyprus is the largest island in the Mediterranean; an island extremely fertile, abounding in wine, honey, oil, wool, &c. It is mentioned in Ac. xiii. 4; xv. 39. The island is near to Cilicia, and is not far from the Jewish coast. It is said by Dion Cassius (lib. 68, 69) that the Jews were very numerous in that island.—Clark.

Barnabas afterward became, with Paul, a distinguished preacher to the Gentiles. It is worthy of remark, that both were born in heathen countries, though by descent Jews; and as they were trained in heathen lands, they were better fitted for their peculiar work. The case of Barnabas is that of a man who had property when he entered the ministry, and who gave up all for the Lord Jesus. The great mass of ministers, like very many who have been distinguished in other professions, have been taken from among the poor, and from humble ranks in life. But all have not been. Many have been wealthy, and have devoted all to Christ; and in regard to others, it is to be remarked, that a very considerable proportion of them could have gained more wealth in some other profession than they do in the ministry. The ministry is a work of self-denial, and none should enter it who are not prepared to devote all to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER V.

1. But a certain man. In the previous chapter the historian had given an account of the eminent liberality and sincerity of the mass of early Christians, in being willing to give up their property to provide for the poor, and had mentioned the case of Barnabas as worthy of special attention. In this chapter he proceeds to mention a case, quite as striking, of insincerity, and hypocrisy, and of the just judgment of God on those who were guilty of it. The case is a remarkable instance of the nature of hypocrisy, and goes to illustrate the art and cunning of the enemy of souls in attempting to corrupt the church, and to pervert the religion of the gospel. Hypocrisy consists in an attempt to imitate the people of God, or to assume the appearance of religion, in whatever form it may be manifested. In this case religion had been manifested by great self-denial and benevolence. The hypocrisy of Ananias consisted in attempting to imitate this in appearance, and to impose in this way on the early Christians and on God. ¶ With Sapphira his wife. With her concurrence or consent. It was a matter of agreement between them, ver. 2, 9. ¶ Sold a possession. The word here used (πωγμα) does not indicate whether this was land or some other property. In ver. 3, however, we learn that it was land that was sold; and the word here translated pos*session* is translated in the Syriac, Arabic, and the Latin Vulgate, land. The pretence for which this was sold was doubtless to have the appearance of religion. That it was sold could be easily known by the Christian society, but it might not be so easily known for how much it was sold. Hence the attempt to impose on the apostles. It is clear that they were not under obligation to sell their property. But, having sold it for the purposes of religion, it became their duty, if they professed to devote the avails of it to God, to do it entirely, and without any reservation.

2. And kept back. The word here used means properly to separate, to part; and then it means to separate surreptitiously or clandestinely for our own use a part of public property, as taxes, &c. It is used but three times in the New Testament, ver. 3, and in Tit. ii. 10, where it is rendered purloring. Here it means that they secretly kept back a part, while professedly devoting all to God. ¶ His wife being privy to it. His wife knowing it, and evidently concurring in it. ¶ And laid it at the apostles' feet. This was evidently an act professedly of devoting all to God. Comp. ch. iv. 37; also ver. 8, 9. That this was his profession, or pretence, is further implied in the fact that Peter charges him with having lied unto God, ver. 3, 4.

3. But Peter said, &c. Peter could have known this only by revelation. It was the manifest design of Ananias to deceive; nor was there any way of detecting him but by its being revealed to him by the Spirit of God. As it was an instance of enormous wickedness, and as it was very important to detect and punish the crime, it was made known to Peter directly by God. ¶ Why hath Satan. Great deeds of wickedness in the Scripture are traced to the influence of Satan. Comp. Lu. xxiii. 3; Jn. xiii. 27. Especially is Satan called the father of lies, Jn. viii. 44, 45. Comp. Ge. iii. 1-5. As this was an act of falsehood, or an attempt to deceive, it is with great propriety traced to the influence of Satan. The sin of Ananias consisted in his yielding to the temptation. Nowhere in the Bible are men supposed to be free from guilt from the mere fact that they have been tempted to commit it. God requires them to resist temptation; and if they yield to it, they must be punished. ¶ Filled thine heart. A man's heart or mind is full of a thing when he is intent on it; when he is strongly impelled to it; or when he is fully occupied with it. The expression here means that he was strongly impelled or excited by Satan to this crime. ¶ To lie to. To attempt to deceive. The deception which he meant to practise was to keep back a part of the price, while he pretended to bring the whole of it; thus tempting God, and supposing that he could not detect the fraud. ¶ The Holy Ghost—τὸν ἅγιον τὸ ἄγνοιαν. The main inquiry here is, whether the apostle Peter intended to designate in this place the third person of the Trinity; or whether he meant to speak of God as God, without any reference to the distinction of persons; or whether he referred to the divine influence which inspired the apostles, without reference to the peculiar offices which are commonly ascribed to the Holy Spirit. Or, in other words, is there a distinction here recognized between the Father and the Holy Ghost? That there is, will be apparent from the following considerations: (1) If no such distinction is intended, it is remarkable that Peter did not use the usual and customary name of God. It does not appear why he guarded it so carefully as to denote that this offence was committed against the Holy Ghost, and the Spirit of the Lord, ver. 9. (2) The name here used is the one employed in the Scriptures to designate the third person of the Trinity, as implying a distinction from the Father. See Mat. iii. 16; i. 18, 20; iii. 11; xii. 32; xxviii. 19; Mar. i. 8; iii. 29; xii. 36; Lu. xii. 10; Jn. xiv. 26; vii. 39; xx. 22; Ac. iv. 8; v. 32, &c. (3) Peter intended, doubtless, to designate an offence as committed particularly against the person, or influence, by which he and the other apostles were inspired. Ananias supposed that he could escape detection, and the offence was one, therefore, against the Inspirer of the apostles. Yet that was the Holy Ghost as distinct keep back part of the price of the land?

4 While it remained, was it not from the Father. See Jn. xiv. 16, 17, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7-11; xx. 22. Comp. Ac. v. 32. The offence, therefore, being against him who was sent by the Father, and who was appointed to a particular work, clearly supposes that the Holy Spirit is distinct from the Father. (4) A further incidental proof of this may be found in the fact that the sin here committed was one of peculiar magnitude—so great as to be deemed worthy of the immediate and signal vengeance of God. Yet the sin against the Holy Ghost is uniformly represented to be of this description. Comp. Mat. xii. 31, 32; Mar. iii. 28, 29. As these sins evidently coincide in enormity, it is clear that the same class of sins is referred to, in both places; or, in other words, the sin of Ananias was against the third person of the Trinity. Two remarks may be made here: (1) The Holy Ghost is a distinct person from the Father and the Son; or, in other words, there is a distinction of some kind in the divine nature that may be designated by the word person. This is clear from the fact that sin is said to have been committed against him—a sin which it was supposed could not be detected. Sin cannot be committed against an attribute of God, or an influence from God. We cannot lie unto an attribute, or against wisdom, or power, or goodness; nor can we lie unto an influence, merely, of the Most High. Sin is committed against a Being, not against an attribute; and as a sin is here charged on Ananias against the Holy Ghost, it follows that the Holy Ghost has a personal existence, or that there is such a distinction in the divine essence that it may be proper to specify a sin as committed peculiarly against him. In the same way sin may be represented as committed peculiarly against the Father when his name is blasphemed; when his dominion is denied; when his mercy in sending his Son is called in question. Sin may be represented as committed against the Son when his atonement is denied; his divinity assailed; his character derided, or his invitations slighted. And thus sin may be represented as committed against the Holy Ghost when his office of renewing the heart, or sanctifying the soul, is called in question, or when his work is ascribed to some malign or other influence. See Mar. iii. 22-30. And as sin against the Son proves that he is in some sense distinct from the Father, so does sin against the Holy Ghost prove that in some sense he is distinct from the Father and the Son. (2) The Holy Ghost is divine. This is proved, because he is represented here as being able to search the heart, and to detect insincerity and hypocrisy. Comp. Je. xvii. 10; 1 Ch. xxviii. 9; 1 Co. ii. 10, “The Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God;” Re. ii. 23. And he is expressly called God. See Notes on ver. 4.

4. While it remained. As long as it remained unsold. This place proves that there was no obligation imposed on the disciples to sell their property. They who did it, did it voluntarily; and it does not appear that it was done by all, or expected to be done by all. ¶ And after it was sold, &c. Even after the property was sold, and Ananias had the money, still there was no obligation on him to devote it in this way. He had the disposal of it still. The apostle mentions this to show him that his offence was peculiarly aggravated. He was not compelled to sell his property—he had not even the poor pretence that he was obliged to dispose of it, and was tempted to withhold it for his own use. It was all his, and might have been retained if he had chosen. ¶ Thou hast not lied unto men. Unto men only, or, it is not your main and chief offence that you have attempted to deceive men. It is true that Ananias had attempted to deceive the apostles, and it is true, also, that this was a crime; but still, the principal magnitude of the offence was that he had attempted to deceive God. So small was his crime as committed against men that it was lost sight of by the apostles, and the great, crowning sin of attempting to deceive God was brought fully into view. Thus David also saw his sin as committed against God to be so enormous that he lost sight of it as an offence to man, and said, “Against thee, thee ONLY, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight,” Ps. li. 4. ¶ But unto God. It has been particularly and eminently against God. This is true, in thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.

because, (1) He had professedly devoted it to God. The act, therefore, had express and direct reference to him. (2) It was an attempt to deceive him. It implied the belief of Ananias that God would not detect the crime, or see the motives of the heart. (3) It is the prerogative of God to judge of sincerity and hypocrisy; and this was a case, therefore, which came under his special notice. Comp. Ps. cxxxix. 1-4. The word God here is evidently used in its plain and obvious sense as denoting the supreme divinity, and the use of the word here shows that the Holy Ghost is divine. The whole passage demonstrates, therefore, one of the important doctrines of the Christian religion, that the Holy Ghost is distinct from the Father and the Son, and yet is divine.

5. And Ananias, hearing these words, &c. Seeing that his guilt was known, and being charged with the enormous crime of attempting to deceive God. He had not expected to be thus exposed; and it is clear that the exposure and the charge came upon him unexpectedly and terribly, like a bolt of thunder. ¶ Fell down. Greek, Having fallen down. ¶ Gave up the ghost. This is an unhappy translation. The original means simply he expired, or he died. Comp. Notes on Mat. xxvii. 50. This remarkable fact may be accounted for in this way: (1) It is evidently to be regarded as a judgment of God for the sin of Ananias and his wife. It was not the act of Peter, but of God, and was clearly designed to show his abhorrence of this sin. See remarks on ver. 11. (2) Though it was the act of God, yet it does not follow that it was not in connection with the usual laws by which he governs men, or that he did not make use of natural means to do it. The sin was one of great aggravation. It was suddenly and unexpectedly detected. The fact that it was known, and the solemn charge that he had lied unto God, struck him with horror. His conscience would reprove him for the enormity of his crime, and overwhelm him at the memory of his wickedness. These circumstances may be sufficient to account for this remarkable event. It has occurred in other cases that the words, fell down, and gave up the ghost: and great fear came on all them that heard these things.

6 And the young men arose,

consciousness of crime, or the fact of being suddenly detected, has given such a shock to the frame that it has never recovered from it. The effect commonly is that the memory of guilt preys secretly and silently upon the frame, until, worn out with the want of rest and peace, it sinks exhausted into the grave. But there have not been wanting instances where the shock has been so great as to destroy the vital powers at once, and plunge the wretched man, like Ananias, into eternity. It is not at all improbable that the shock in the case of Ananias was so great as at once to take his life. ¶ Great fear came, &c. Such a striking and awful judgment on insincerity and hypocrisy was fitted to excite awful emotions among the people. Sudden death always does it; but sudden death in immediate connection with crime is fitted much more deeply to affect the mind.

6. And the young men. The youth of the congregation; very probably young men who were in attendance as servants, or those whose business it was to attend on the congregation, and perform various offices when Christians celebrated their worship (Mosheim). The word used here sometimes denotes a servant. It is used also, ver. 10, to denote soldiers, as they were commonly enlisted of the vigorous and young. The fact that they took up Ananias voluntarily implies that they were accustomed to perform offices of servitude to the congregation. ¶ Wound him up. It was the usual custom with the Jews to wind the body in many folds of linen before it was buried; commonly also with spices, to preserve it from putrefaction. See Notes on Jn. xi. 44. It may be asked why he was so soon buried; and especially why he was hurried away without giving information to his wife. In reply to this, it may be remarked, 1. That it does not appear from the narrative that it was known that Sapphira was privy to the transaction, or was near at hand, or even that he had a wife. Ananias came himself and offered the money, and the judgment fell at once on him. 2. It was customary among the ancient Persians to bury the body almost im-

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

mediately after death (Jahn); and it seems probable that the Jews, when the body was not embalmed, imitated the custom. It would also appear that this was an ancient custom among the Jews. See Ge. xxiii. 19; xxv. 9; xxxv. 29; xlvi. 7; 1 Ki. xiii. 30. Different nations differ in their customs in burying the dead; and there is no impropriety in committing a body soon after death to the tomb. 3. There might have been some danger of an excitement and tumult in regard to this scene if the corpse had not soon been removed; and as no valuable purpose could be answered by delaying the burial, the body was decently committed to the dust.

7. And it was about the space, &c. As Sapphira had been no less guilty than her husband, so it was ordered in the providence of God that the same judgment should come upon both.

8. For so much. That is, for the sum which Ananias had presented. This was true, that this sum had been received for it; but it was also true that a larger sum had been received. It is as really a falsehood to deceive in this manner, as it would have been to have affirmed that they received much more than they actually did for the land. Falsehood consists in making an erroneous representation of a thing in any way for the purpose of deceiving. And this species is much more common than an open and bold lie, affirming what is in no sense true.

9. Agreed together. Conspired, or laid a plan. From this it seems that Sapphira was as guilty as her husband. ¶ To tempt. To try; to endeavour to impose on, or to deceive; that is, to act as if the Spirit of the Lord could not detect the crime. They did this by trying to see whether the Spirit of God could detect hypocrisy. ¶ At the door. Are near at hand. They had not yet returned. The dead were buried without the walls of cities; and the space of three hours, it seems, had elapsed before they returned from the burial. ¶ Shall carry thee out. This passage

Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?

shows that it was by divine interposition or judgment that their lives were taken. The judgment was in immediate connection with the crime, and was designed as an expression of the divine displeasure.

If it be asked here why Ananias and Sapphira were punished in this severe and awful manner, an answer may be found in the following considerations: (1) This was an atrocious crime—a deep and dreadful act of iniquity. It was committed knowingly, and without excuse, ver. 4. It was important that sudden and exemplary punishment should follow it, because the society of Christians was just then organized, and it was designed that it should be a pure society, and should be regarded as a body of holy men. Much depended on making an impression on the people that sin could not be allowed in this new community, but would be detected and punished. (2) God has often, in a most solemn manner, shown his abhorrence of hypocrisy and insincerity. By awful declarations and fearful judgments he has declared his displeasure at it. In a particular manner, no small part of the preaching of the Saviour was employed in detecting the hypocrisy of the scribes and Pharisees, and denouncing heavy judgments on them. See Mat. xxiii. throughout for the most sublime and awful denunciation of hypocrisy anywhere to be found. Comp. Mar. xii. 15; Lu. xii. 1; 1 Ti. iv. 2; Job viii. 13; xiii. 16; xv. 34; xx. 5; xxxvi. 13; Mat. vii. 5; Lu. xi. 44. In the very beginning of the Christian church it was important, by a decided and awful act, to impress upon the church and the world the danger and guilt of hypocrisy. Well did the Saviour know that it would be one of the most insidious and deadly foes to the purity of the church; and at its very threshold, therefore, he set up this solemn warning to guard it, and laid the bodies of Ananias and Sapphira in the path of every hypocrite that would enter the church. If they enter and are destroyed, they cannot plead that they were not fully warned. If they practise iniquity in the church, they cannot plead ignorance of the fact that God intends to detect and punish them. (3) The apostles were just then establishing their authority. They claimed to be under the influence of inspiration. To establish that, it was necessary to show that they could know the views and motives of those who became connected with the church. If easily imposed on, it would go far to destroy their authority and their claim to infallibility. If they showed that they could detect hypocrisy, even where most artfully concealed, it would establish the divine authority of their message. At the commencement of their work, therefore, they gave this decisive and most awful proof that they were under the guidance of an infallible Teacher. (4) This case does not stand alone in the New Testament. It is clear from other instances that the apostles had the power of punishing sinners, and that a violation of the commands of Christ was attended by sudden and fearful judgments. See 1 Co. xi. 30, and the case of Elymas the sorcerer in Ac. xiii. 8-11. (5) Neither does this event stand alone in the history of the world. Acts of judgment sometimes occur as sudden and decided, in the providence of God, as in this case. The profane man, the drunkard, the profligate offender is sometimes suddenly stricken down, as in this instance. Cases have not been uncommon where the blasphemer has been smitten in death with the curse on his lips; and God often thus comes forth in judgment to slay the wicked, and to show that there is a God that reigns in the earth. This narrative cannot be objected to as improbable until all such cases are disposed of, nor can this infliction be regarded as unjust until all the instances where men die by remorse of conscience, or by the direct judgment of heaven, are proved to be unjust also.

In view of this narrative, we may remark, (1) That God searches the heart, and knows the purposes of the soul. Comp. Ps. cxxxix. (2) God judges the motives of men. It is not so much the external act, as it is the views and feelings by which it is prompted, that determines the character of the act. (3) God will bring forth sin which man may not be able to detect, or which may elude human justice. The day is coming when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, and God will reward every man according as his works shall be. (4) Fraud and hypocrisy will be detected. They are often detected in this life. The providence of God often lays them open to human view, and overwhelms the soul in shame at the guilt which was long concealed. But if not in this life, yet the day is coming when they will be disclosed, and the sinner shall stand revealed to an assembled universe. (5) We have here an illustration of the power of conscience. If such was its overwhelming effect here, what will it be when all the crimes of the life shall be disclosed in the day of judgment, and when the soul shall sink to the woes of hell? Through eternity the conscience will do its office; and these terrible inflictions will go on from age to age, for ever and ever, in the dark world of hell. (6) We see here the guilt of attempting to impose on God in regard to property. There is no subject in which men are more liable to hypocrisy; none in which they are more apt to keep back a part. Christians professedly devote ALL that they have to God. They profess to believe that he has a right to the silver and the gold, and the cattle on a thousand hills, Ps. l. 10. Their property, as well as their bodies and their spirits, they have devoted to him, and they profess to desire to employ it as he shall direct and please. And yet, is it not clear that the sin of Ananias has not ceased in the church? How many professing Christians there are who give nothing really to God; who contribute nothing for the poor and needy; who devote nothing, or next to nothing, to any purposes of benevolence; who 12 And by the hands of the apostles were "many signs and wonders wrought among the people; would employ "millions" for their own gratification, and their families, "but not a cent for tribute" to God. The case of Ananias is, to all such, a case of most fearful warning. And on no point should Christians more faithfully examine themselves than in regard to the professed devotion of their property to God. If God punished this sin in the beginning of the Christian church, he will do it still in its progress; and in nothing have professed Christians more to fear his wrath than on this very subject. (7) Sinners should fear and tremble before God. He holds their breath in his hands. He can cut them down in an instant. The bold blasphemer, the unjust man, the liar, the scoffer, he can destroy in a moment, and sink them in all the woes of hell. Nor have they any security that he will not do it. The profane man has no evidence that he will live to finish the curse which he has begun; nor the drunkard that he will again become sober; nor the seducer that God will not arrest him in his act of wickedness and send him down to hell! The sinner walks over the grave, and over hell! In an instant he may die, and be summoned to the judgment-seat of God! How awful it is to sin in a world like this; and how fearful the doom which must soon overtake the ungodly!

12. And by the hands, &c. By the apostles. This verse should be read in connection with the 15th, to which it belongs. ¶ Signs and wonders. Miracles. See Notes on Ac. ii. 43. ¶ With one accord. With one mind, or intention. See Notes on ch. i. 14. ¶ In Solomon's porch. See Notes on Mat. xxi. 12; Jn. x. 23. They were doubtless there for the purpose of worship. It does not mean that they were there constantly, but at the regular periods of worship. Probably they had two designs in this; one was, to join in the public worship of God in the usual manner with the people, for they did not design to leave the temple service; the other, that they might have opportunity to preach to the people assembled there. In the presence of the great multitudes who came up to worship, they had an opportunity of making known the doctrines of Jesus, and of confirming them by miracles, the reality of which could not be denied, and which could not be resisted, as proofs that Jesus was the Messiah.

13. And of the rest. Different interpretations have been given of this expression. Lightfoot supposes that by the rest are meant the remainder of the one hundred and twenty disciples of whom Ananias had been one; and that they feared to put themselves on an equality with the apostles. But this interpretation seems to be far-fetched. Kuinoel supposes that by the rest are meant those who had not already joined with the apostles, whether Christians or Jews, and that they were deterred by the fate of Ananias. Pricæus, Morus, Rosenmueller, Schleusner, and others, suppose that by the rest are meant the rich men, or the men of authority and influence among the Jews, of whom Ananias was one, and that they were deterred from it by the fate of Ananias. This is by far the most probable opinion, because, (1) There is an evident contrast between them and the people; the rest, that is, the others of the rich and great, feared to join with them; but the people, the common people, magnified them. (2) The fate of Ananias was fitted to have this effect on the rich and great. (3) Similar instances had occurred before, that the great, though they believed on Jesus, were afraid to come forth publicly and profess him before men. See Jn. xii. 42, 43; v. 44. (4) The phrase the rest denotes sometimes that which is more excellent, or which is superior in value or importance to something else. See Lu. xii. 26. ¶ Join himself. Become united to, or associated with. The rich and the great then, as now, stood aloof from them, and were deterred by fear or shame from professing attachment to the Lord Jesus. ¶ But the people. The mass of the people; the body of the nation. ¶ Magnified them. Honoured them; regarded them with reverence and fear.

14. And believers. This is the name by which Christians were designated, because one of the main things that distinguished them was that they believed that Jesus was the Christ. It is also an man join himself to them, <sup>o</sup>but the people magnified them.

15 Insomuch that they brought forth the sick <sup>2</sup>into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of incidental proof that none should join themselves to the church who are not believers; that is, who do not profess to be Christians in heart and in life. ¶ Were the more added. The effect of all these things was to increase the number of converts. Their persecutions, their preaching, and the judgment of God, all tended to impress the minds of the people, and to lead them to the Lord Jesus Christ. Comp. ch. iv. 4. Though the judgment of God had the effect of deterring hypocrites from entering the church—though it produced awe and caution, yet still the number of true converts was increased. An effort to keep the church pure by wholesome discipline, and by cutting off unworthy members, however rich or honoured, so far from weakening its true strength, has a tendency greatly to increase its numbers as well as its purity. Men will not seek to enter a corrupt church, or regard it as worth any effort to be connected with a society that does not endeavour to be pure. ¶ Multitudes. Comp. ch. iv. 4.

15. Insomuch. So that. This should be connected with ver. 12. Many miracles were wrought by the apostles, insomuch, &c. ¶ They brought forth. The people, or the friends of the sick, brought them forth. ¶ Beds—κλινῶντας. This word denotes usually the soft and valuable beds on which the rich commonly lay. And it means that the rich, as well as the poor, were laid in the path of Peter and the other apostles. ¶ Couches—κεισθέντας. The coarse and hard couches on which the poor used to lie, Mar. ii. 4, 9, 11, 12; vi. 55; Jn. v. 8-12; Ac. ix. 33. ¶ The shadow of Peter. That is, they were laid in the path so that the shadow of Peter, as he walked, might pass over them. Perhaps the sun was near setting, and the lengthened shadow of Peter might be thrown afar across the way. They were not able to approach him on account of

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing <sup>7</sup>sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and <sup>7</sup>they were healed every one.

the crowd, and they imagined that if they could anyhow come under his influence they might be healed. The sacred writer does not say, however, that any were healed in this way, nor that they were commanded to do this. He simply states the impression which was on the minds of the people that it might be. Whether they were healed by this, it is left for us merely to conjecture. An instance somewhat similar is recorded in Ac. xix. 12, where it is expressly said, however, that the sick were healed by contact with handkerchiefs and aprons that were brought from the body of Paul. Comp. also Mat. ix. 21, 22, where the woman said respecting Jesus, “If I may but touch his garment I shall be whole.” ¶ Might overshadow. That his shadow might pass over them. Though there is no certain evidence that any were healed in this way, yet it shows the full belief of the people that Peter had the power of working miracles. Peter was supposed by them to be eminently endowed with this power, because it was by him that the lame man in the temple had been healed (ch. iii. 4-6), and because he had been most prominent in his addresses to the people. The persons who are specified in this verse were those who dwelt at Jerusalem.

16. There came also, &c. Attracted by the fame of Peter's miracles, as the people formerly had been by the miracles of the Lord Jesus. ¶ Vexed. Troubled, afflicted, or tormented. ¶ Unclean spirits. Possessed with devils; called unclean because they prompted to sin and impurity of life. See Notes on Mat. iv. 23, 24. ¶ And they were healed. Of these persons it is expressly affirmed that they were healed. Of those who were so laid as that the shadow of Peter might pass over them, there is no such direct affirmation.

17. Then the high-priest. Probably Caiaphas. Comp. Jn. xi. 49. It seems from this place that he belonged to the

sect of the Sadducees. It is certain that he had signalized himself by opposition to the Lord Jesus and to his cause constantly. ¶ Rose up. This expression is sometimes redundant, and at others it means simply to begin to do a thing, or to resolve to do it. Comp. Lu. xv. 18. ¶ And all they that were with him. That is, all they that coincided with him in doctrine or opinion; or, in other words, that portion of the Sanhedrim that was composed of Sadducees. There was a strong party of Sadducees in the Sanhedrim; and perhaps at this time it was so strong a majority as to be able to control its decisions. Comp. Ac. xxiii. 6. ¶ Which is the sect. The word translated sect here is that from which we have derived our word heresy. It means simply sect or party, and is not used in a bad sense as implying reproach, or even error. The idea which we attach to it of error, and of denying fundamental doctrines in religion, is one that does not occur in the New Testament. ¶ Sadducees. See Notes on Mat. iii. 7. The main doctrine of this sect was the denial of the resurrection of the dead. The reason why they were particularly opposed to the apostles rather than the Pharisees was that the apostles dwelt much on the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, which, if true, completely overthrew their doctrine. All the converts, therefore, that were made to Christianity, tended to diminish their numbers and influence, and also to establish the belief of the Pharisees in the doctrine of the resurrection. So long, therefore, as the effect of the labours of the apostles was to establish one of the main doctrines of the Pharisees, and to confute the Sadducees, so long we may suppose that the Pharisees would either favour them or be silent; and so long the Sadducees would be opposed to them, and enraged against them. One sect will often see with composure the progress of another that it really hates, if it will humble a rival. Even opposition to the gospel will sometimes be silent provided the spread of religion will tend to humble and mortify those against whom we may be opposed.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, t ch.12 5-7; 16.28-27.

¶ Were filled with indignation. Greek, zeal. The word denotes any kind of fervour or warmth, and may be applied to any warm or violent affection of the mind, either envy, wrath, zeal, or love, Ac. xiii. 45; Jn. ii. 17; Ro. x. 2; 2 Co. vii. 7; xi. 2. Here it probably includes envy and wrath. They were envious at the success of the apostles—at the number of converts that were made to a doctrine that they hated, and they were envious that the Pharisees were deriving such an accession of strength to their doctrine of the resurrection; and they were indignant that the apostles regarded so little their authority, and disobeyed the solemn injunction of the Sanhedrim. Comp. ch. iv. 18-21.

18. The common prison. The public prison; or the prison for the keeping of common and notorious offenders.

19. But the angel of the Lord. This does not denote any particular angel, but simply an angel. The article is not used in the original. The word angel denotes properly a messenger, and particularly it is applied to the pure spirits that are sent to this world on errands of mercy. See Notes on Mat. i. 20. The case here was evidently a miracle. An angel was employed for this special purpose, and the design might have been, (1) To reprove the Jewish rulers, and to convince them of their guilt in resisting the gospel of God; (2) To convince the apostles more firmly of the protection and approbation of God; (3) To encourage them more and more in their work, and in the faithful discharge of their high duty; and (4) To give the people a new and impressive proof of the truth of the message which they bore. That they were imprisoned would be known to the people. That they were made as secure as possible was also known. When, therefore, the next morning, before they could have been tried or acquitted, they were found again in the temple, delivering the same message still, it was a new and striking proof that they were sent by God.

20. In the temple. In a public and conspicuous place. In this way there 20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people "all the words" of this life.

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. "But the high-priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned and told,

23 Saying, The prison truly found

would be a most striking exhibition of their boldness; a proof that God had delivered them, and a manifestation of their purpose to obey God rather than man. ¶ All the words. All the doctrines. Comp. Jn. vi. 68, "Thou hast the words of eternal life." ¶ Of this life. Pertaining to life, to the eternal life which they taught through the resurrection of Jesus. The word life is used sometimes to express the whole of religion, as opposed to the spiritual death of sin. See Jn. i. 4; iii. 36. Their deliverance from prison was not that they might be idle, and escape to a place of safety. Again they were to engage in the toils and perils which they had just before encountered. God delivers us from dangers sometimes that we may plunge into new dangers; he preserves us from one form of calamity that we may be tried in some new furnace of affliction; he calls us to encounter trials simply because he demands it, and as an expression of gratitude to him for his gracious interposition.

21. Early in the morning. Greek, at the break of day. Comp. Lu. xxiv. 1; Jn. viii. 2. ¶ Called the council together. The Sanhedrim, or the great council of the nation. This was clearly for the purpose of trying the apostles for disregarding their commandments. ¶ And all the senate. Greek, eldership. Probably these were not a part of the Sanhedrim, but were men of age and experience, who in ch. iv. 8, xxv. 15, are called elders of the Jews, and who were present for the sake of counsel and advice in a case of emergency.

23. Found we shut. It had not been broken open; and there was therefore we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors; but when we had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now when the high-priest, and "the captain of the temple, and the chief priests heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

clear proof that they had been delivered by the interposition of God. Nor could they have been released by the guard, for they were keeping watch, as if unconscious that anything had happened, and the officers had the only means of entering the prison.

24. The captain of the temple. See Notes on ch. iv. 1. ¶ Doubted of them. They were in perplexity about these things. The word rendered doubted denotes that state of anxiety which arises when a man has lost his way, or when he does not know what to do to escape from a difficulty. See Lu. ix. 7. ¶ Whereunto this would grow. What this would be; or, what would be the result or end of these events. For, (1) Their authority was disregarded. (2) God had opposed them by a miracle. (3) The doctrines of the apostles were gaining ground. (4) Their efforts to resist them had been in vain. They need not have doubted; but sinners are not disposed to be convinced of the truth of religion.

26. Without violence. Not by force; not by binding them. Comp. Mat. xxvii. 2. The command of the Sanhedrim was sufficient to secure their presence, as they did not intend to refuse to answer for any alleged violation of the laws. Besides, their going before the council would give them another noble opportunity to bear witness to the truth of the gospel. Christians, when charged with a violation of the laws of the land, should not refuse to answer, Ac. xxv. 11, "If I be an offender, or have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die." It is a part of our religion to yield out violence; for <sup>v</sup>they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned.

27 And when they had brought them, they set them before the council; and the high-priest asked them,

28 Saying, Did not we <sup>w</sup>straitly command you that ye should not

obedience to all the just laws of the land, and to evince respect for all that are in authority, Ro. xiii. 1-7. ¶ For they feared the people. The people were favourable to the apostles. If violence had been attempted, or they had been taken in a cruel and forcible manner, the consequence would have been tumults and bloodshed. In this way, also, the apostles showed that they were not disposed to excite tumult. Opposition by them would have excited commotion; and though they would have been rescued, yet they resolved to show that they were not obstinate, contumacious, or rebellious, but were disposed, as far as it could be done with a clear conscience, to yield obedience to the laws of the land.

28. Straitly command you. Did we not command you with a threat? ch. iv. 17, 18, 21. ¶ In this name. In the name of Jesus. ¶ Ye have filled Jerusalem. This, though not so designed, was an honourable tribute to the zeal and fidelity of the apostles. When Christians are arraigned or persecuted, it is well if the only charge which their enemies can bring against them is that they have been distinguished for zeal and success in propagating their religion. See 1 Pe. iv. 16, “If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf;” also ver. 18-15. ¶ Intend to bring this man's blood upon us. To bring one's blood upon another is a phrase signifying to hold or to prove him guilty of murdering the innocent. The expression here charges them with designing to prove that they had put Jesus to death when he was innocent; to convince the people of this, and thus to enrage them against the Sanhedrim; and also to prove that they were guilty, and were exposed to the divine vengeance for having put the Messiah to death. Comp. ch. ii. 23, 36; iii. 15; vii. 52. That the apostles did intend teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's <sup>a</sup>blood upon us.

29 Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, <sup>b</sup>We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The God of our fathers raised

to charge them with being guilty of murder is clear; but it is observable that on this occasion they had said nothing of this, and it is further observable that they did not charge it on them except in their presence. See the places just referred to. They took no pains to spread this among the people, except as the people were accessory to the crime of the rulers, ch. ii. 23, 36. Their consciences were not at ease, and the remembrance of the death of Jesus would occur to them at once at the sight of the apostles.

29. We ought to obey, &c. See Notes on ch. iv. 19.

30. Raised up Jesus. This refers to his resurrection. ¶ Hanged on a tree. That is, on the cross, Ga. iii. 13; 1 Pe. ii. 24; Ac. x. 39; xiii. 29. This is the amount of Peter's defence. He begins with the great principle (ver. 29), which they could not gainsay, that God ought to be obeyed rather than man. He then proceeds to state that they were convinced that God had raised up Jesus from the dead, and as they had such decisive evidence of that, and were commanded by the authority of the Lord Jesus to be witnesses of that, they were not at liberty to be silent. They were bound to obey God rather than the Sanhedrim, and to make known everywhere the fact that the Lord Jesus was risen. The remark that God had raised up Jesus whom they had slain, does not seem to have been made to irritate or to reproach them, but merely to identify him as the person that had been raised. It was also a confirmation of the truth and reality of the miracle. Of his death they had no doubt, for they had been at pains to certify it, Jn. xix. 31-34. It is certain, however, that Peter did not shrink from charging on them their guilt; nor was he at any pains to soften or mitigate the severe charge that they had murdered their own Messiah.

31. Him hath God exalted. See Notes on ch. ii. 33. ¶ To be a Prince—ἀρχητὸς. See Notes on Ac. iii. 15. In that place he is called the Prince of life. Here it means that he is actually in the exercise of the office of a prince or a king, at the right hand of his Father. The title Prince, or King, was one which was well known as applied to the Messiah. It denotes that he has dominion and power, especially the power which is needful to give repentance and the pardon of sins. ¶ A Saviour. See Notes on Mat. i. 21. ¶ To give repentance. The word repentance here is equivalent to reformation and a change of life. The sentiment does not differ from what is said in ch. iii. 26. ¶ To Israel. This word properly denotes the Jews; but his office was not to be confined to the Jews. Other passages show that it would be also extended to the Gentiles. The reasons why the Jews are particularly specified here are, probably, (1) Because the Messiah was long promised to the Jewish people, and his first work was there; and (2) Because Peter was addressing Jews, and was particularly desirous of leading them to repentance. ¶ Forgiveness of sins. Pardon of sin; the act which can be performed by God only, Mar. ii. 7.

If it be asked in what sense the Lord Jesus gives repentance, or how his exaltation is connected with it, we may answer, (1) His exaltation is evidence that his work was accepted, and that thus a foundation is laid by which repentance is available, and may be connected with pardon. Unless there was some way of forgiveness, sorrow for sin would be of no value, even if exercised. The relentings of a culprit condemned for murder will be of no avail unless the executive can consistently pardon him; nor would relentings in hell be of avail, for there is no promise of forgiveness. But Jesus Christ by his death has laid a foundation by which repentance may be accepted. (2) He is intrusted with all power in heaven and earth with reference to this, to apply his work to men; or, in other words, to bring them to repentance. See Jn. xvii. 2; Mat. xxviii. 18. (3) His exaltation is immediately connected with the bestowment of the Holy Spirit, by whose influence men are brought to repentance, Jn. xvi. 7–11. The Spirit is represented as being sent by him as well as by the Father, Jn. xv. 26; xvi. 7. (4) Jesus has power in this state of exaltation over all things that can affect the mind. He sends his ministers; he directs the events of sickness or disappointment, of health or prosperity, that will influence the heart. There is no doubt that he can so recall the sins of the past life, and refresh the memory, as to overwhelm the soul in the consciousness of guilt. Thus also he can appeal to man by his goodness, and by a sense of his mercies; and especially he can so present a view of his own life and death as to affect the heart, and show the evil of the past life of the sinner. Knowing the heart, he knows all the avenues by which it can be approached, and in an instant he can overwhelm the soul with the remembrance of crime.

It was proper that the power of pardon should be lodged with the same being that has the power of producing repentance, because, 1. The one appropriately follows the other. 2. They are parts of the same great work—the work which the Saviour came to do; to remove sin, with all its effects, from the human soul. This power of pardon Jesus exercised when he was on the earth, and this he can now dispense in the heavens, Mar. ii. 9–11.

And from this we may learn, (1) That Christ is divine. It is a dictate of natural religion that none can forgive sins against God but God himself. None can pardon but the Being who has been offended. And this is also the dictate of the Bible. The power of pardoning sin is one that God claims as his prerogative, and it is clear that it can appertain to no other. See Is. xlivi. 25; Da. ix. 9; Ps. cxxx. 4. Yet Jesus Christ exercised this power when on earth; gave evidence that the exercise of that power was one that was acceptable to God by working a miracle, and removing the consequences of sin with which God had visited the sinner (Mat. ix. 6); and exercises it still in heaven. He must, therefore, be divine. (2) The sinner is dependent on him for the exercise of repentance, and for forgiveness. (3) The proud sinner must be humbled at his feet. He must be willing to come and receive eternal life at his hands. No step is more humiliating than this for proud and hardened men; and there is none which they are more reluctant to do. We always shrink from coming into the presence of one whom we have offended; we are extremely reluctant to confess a fault; but it must be done, or the soul must be lost for ever. (4) Christ has power to pardon the greatest offender. He is exalted for this purpose; and he is fitted to his work. Even his murderers he could pardon; and no sinner need fear that he who is a Prince and a Saviour at the right hand of God is unable to pardon his sins. To him we may come with confidence; and when pressed with the consciousness of the blackest crimes, and when we feel that we deserve eternal death, we may confidently roll all on his arm.

32 And<sup>s</sup> we are his witnesses of these things; and <sup>h</sup>so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 When they heard that,<sup>i</sup> they

32. And we are witnesses. For this purpose they had been appointed, ch. i. 8, 21, 22; ii. 32; iii. 15; Lu. xxiv. 48. ¶ Of these things. Particularly of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and of the events which had followed it. Perhaps, however, he meant to include everything pertaining to the life, teachings, and death of the Lord Jesus. ¶ And so is also, &c. The descent of the Holy Ghost to endow them with remarkable gifts (ch. ii. 1-4), to awaken and convert such a multitude (ch. ii. 41; iv. 4; v. 14), was an unanswerable attestation of the truth of these doctrines and of the Christian religion. So manifest and decided was the presence of God attending them, that they could have no doubt that what they said was true; and so open and public was this attestation, that it was an evidence to all the people of the truth of their doctrine.

33. When they heard that. That which the apostle Peter had said, to wit, that they were guilty of murder; that Jesus was raised up; and that he still lived as the Messiah. ¶ They were cut to the heart. The word used here properly were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

denotes to cut with a saw; and as applied to the mind, it means to be agitated with rage and indignation, as if wrath should seize upon the mind as a saw does upon wood, and tear it violently, or agitate it severely. When used in connection with the heart, it means that the heart is violently agitated and rent with rage. See ch. vii. 54. It is not used elsewhere in the New Testament. The reasons why they were thus indignant were doubtless, (1) Because the apostles had disregarded their command; (2) Because they charged them with murder; (3) Because they affirmed the doctrine of the resurrection of Jesus, and thus tended to overthrow the sect of the Sadducees. The effect of the doctrines of the gospel is often to make men enraged. ¶ Took counsel. The word rendered took counsel denotes commonly to will; then, to deliberate; and sometimes to decree or to determine. It doubtless implies here that their minds were made up to do it; but probably the formal decree was not passed to put them to death.

34. There stood up one. He rose, as is usual in deliberative assemblies, to speak. ¶ In the council. In the Sanhedrim, ch. iv. 15. ¶ A Pharisee. The high-priest and those who had been most active in opposing the apostles were Sadducees. The Pharisees were opposed to them, particularly on the doctrine in regard to which the apostles were so strenuous, the resurrection of the dead. See Notes on Mat. iii. 7. Comp. Ac. xxiii. 6. ¶ Gamaliel. This name was very common among the Jews. Dr. Lightfoot says that this man was the teacher of Paul (Ac. xxii. 3), the son of the Simon who took the Saviour in his arms (Lu. ii.), and the grandson of the famous Hillel, and was known among the Jews by the title of Rabban Gamaliel the elder. There were other men of this name, who were also eminent among the Jews. This man is said to have died eighteen years after the destruction of Jerusalem, and he died as he had lived, a Pharisee. There is not the least evidence that he was a friend of the Christian religion; but he was evi-had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space;

dently a man of far more liberal views than the other members of the Sanhedrim. ¶ A doctor of the law. That is, a teacher of the Jewish law; one whose province it was to interpret the laws of Moses, and probably to preserve and transmit the traditional laws of the Jews. See Notes on Mat. xv. 3. So celebrated was he, that Saul of Tarsus went to Jerusalem to receive the benefit of his instructions, Ac. xxii. 3. ¶ Had in reputation among all the people. Honoured by all the people. His advice was likely, therefore, to be respected. ¶ To put the apostles forth. This was done, doubtless, because, if the apostles had been suffered to remain, it was apprehended that they would take fresh courage, and be confirmed in their purposes. It was customary, besides, when they deliberated, to command those accused to retire, ch. iv. 15. ¶ A little space. A little time, Lu. xxii. 58.

36. For before those days. The advice of Gamaliel was to suffer these men to go on. The arguments by which he enforced his advice were: (1) That there were cases or precedents in point (ver. 36, 37); and (2) That if it should turn out to be of God, it would be a solemn affair to be involved in the consequences of opposing him. How long before these days this transaction occurred, cannot now be determined, as it is not certain to what case Gamaliel refers. ¶ Rose up. That is, commenced or excited an insurrection. ¶ Theudas. This was a name quite common among the Jews. Of this man nothing more is known than is here recorded. Josephus (Antiq., b. xx. ch. v.) mentions one Theudas, in the time of Fadus, the procurator of Judea, in the reign of the Emperor Claudius (A.D. 45 or 46), who persuaded a great part of the people to take their effects with them and follow him to the river Jordan. He told them he was a prophet, and that he would divide the river and lead them over. Fadus, however, came suddenly upon them, and slew many of them. Theudas was taken alive and conveyed to Jerusalem, and there beheaded. But this occurred at least ten or fifteen years after this discourse of Gamaliel. Many efforts have been made to reconcile Luke and Josephus, on the supposition that they refer to the same man. Lightfoot supposed that Josephus had made an error in chronology. But there is no reason to suppose that there is reference to the same event; and the fact that Josephus has not recorded the insurrection referred to by Gamaliel does not militate at all against the account in the Acts. For, (1) Luke, for anything that appears to the contrary, is quite as credible an historian as Josephus. (2) The name Theudas was a common name among the Jews; and there is no improbability that there were two leaders of an insurrection of this name. If it is improbable, the improbability would affect Josephus's credit as much as that of Luke. (3) It is altogether improbable that Gamaliel should refer to a case which was not well authenticated, and that Luke should record a speech of this kind unless it was delivered, when it would be so easy to detect the error. (4) Josephus has recorded many instances of insurrection and revolt. He has represented the country as in an unsettled state, and by no means professes to give an account of all that occurred. Thus he says (Antiq., xvii. x. § 4) that there were "at this time ten thousand other disorders in Judea;" and (§ 8) that "Judea was full of robberies." When this Theudas lived cannot be ascertained; but as Gamaliel mentions him before Judas of Galilee, it is probable that he lived not far from the time that our Saviour was born; at a time when many false prophets appeared, claiming to be the Messiah. ¶ Boasting himself to be somebody. Claiming to be an eminent prophet probably, or the Messiah. ¶ Obeyed him. The word used here is the one commonly used to denote belief. As many as believed on him, or gave credit to his pretensions.

ing, and drew away much people after him: 'he also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38 And now I say unto you,

37. Judas of Galilee. Josephus has given an account of this man (Antiq., b. xvii. ch. x. § 5), and calls him a Gaulonite. He afterwards calls him a Gaulonite, and says he was of the city of Gamala (Antiq., xviii. i. 1). He says that the revolt took place under Cyrenius, a Roman senator, who came into "Syria to be judge of that nation, and to take account of their substance." "Moreover," says he, "Cyrenius came himself into Judea, which was now added to the province of Syria, to take an account of their substance, and to dispose of Archelaus's money." "Yet Judas, taking with him Saddouk, a Pharisee, became zealous to draw them to a revolt, who both said that this taxation was no better than an introduction to slavery, and exhorted the nation to assert their liberty," &c. This revolt, he says, was the commencement of the series of revolts and calamities that terminated in the destruction of the city, temple, and nation. ¶ In the days of the tuxing. Or, rather, the enrolling, or the census. Josephus says it was designed to take an account of their substance. Comp. Lu. ii. 1, 2.

38. Refrain from these men. Cease to oppose them or to threaten them. The reason why he advised this he immediately adds, that if it were of men, it would come to nought; if of God, they could not overthrow it. ¶ This counsel or this work be of men. This plan or purpose. If the apostles had originated it for the purposes of imposture. ¶ It will come to nought. Gamaliel inferred that from the two instances which he specified. They had been suppressed without the interference of the Sanhedrim; and he inferred that this would also die away if it was a human device. It will be remembered that this is the mere advice of Gamaliel, who was not inspired, and that this opinion should not be adduced to guide us, except as it was an instance of great shrewdness and prudence. It is doubtless right to oppose error in the proper way and with the proper temper, not with arms, or vituperation, or with the civil power, but with argument and kind entreaty. But the sentiment of Gamaliel is full of wisdom in regard to error. For, (1) The very way to exalt error into notice, and to confirm men in it, is to oppose it in a harsh, authoritative, and unkind manner. (2) Error, if left alone, will often die away itself. The interest of men in it will often cease as soon as it ceases to be opposed; and, having nothing to fan the flame, it will expire. It is not so with truth. (3) In this respect the remark may be applied to the Christian religion. It has stood too long, and in too many circumstances of prosperity and adversity, to be of men. It has been subjected to all trials from its pretended friends and real foes; and it still lives as vigorous and flourishing as ever. Kingdoms have changed; empires have risen and fallen since Gamaliel spoke this; systems of opinion and belief have had their day, and expired; but the preservation of the Christian religion, unchanged through so many revolutions, and in so many fiery trials, shows that it is not of men, but of God. The argument for the divine origin of the Christian religion from its perpetuity is one that can be applied to no other system that has been, or that now exists. For Christianity has been opposed in every form. It confers no temporal conquests, and appeals to no base and strong native passions. Mohammedanism is supported by the sword and the state; paganism relies on the arm of the civil power and the terrors of superstition, and is sustained by all the corrupt passions of men; atheism and infidelity have been short-lived, varying in their forms, dying to-day, and to-morrow starting up in a new form; never organized, consolidated, or pure; and never tending to promote the peace or happiness of men. Christianity, without arms or human power, has lived, keeping on its steady and triumphant movement among men, regardless alike of the opposition of its foes, and of the treachery of its pretended friends. If the opinion of Gamaliel was just, it is from God; and the overthrow it: lest haply ye be found

Jews particularly should regard as important an argument derived from the opinion of one of the wisest of their ancient Rabbins.

39. But if it be of God. If God is the author of this religion. From this it seems that Gamaliel supposed that it was at least possible that this religion was divine. He evinced a far more candid mind than did the rest of the Jews; but still it does not appear that he was entirely convinced. The arguments which could not but stagger the Jewish Sanhedrim were those drawn from the resurrection of Jesus, the miracle on the day of Pentecost, the healing of the lame man in the temple, and the release of the apostles from the prison. ¶ Ye cannot overthrow it. Because, (1) God has almighty power, and can execute his purposes; (2) Because he is unchanging, and will not be diverted from his plans, Job xxiii. 13, 14. The plan which God forms must be accomplished. All the devices of man are feebleness when opposed to him, and he can dash them in pieces in an instant. The prediction of Gamaliel has been fulfilled. Men have opposed Christianity in every way, but in vain. They have reviled it; have persecuted it; have resorted to argument and to ridicule; to fire, and faggot, and sword; they have called in the aid of science; but all has been in vain. The more it has been crushed, the more it has risen, and it still exists with as much life and power as ever. The preservation of this religion amidst so much and so varied opposition proves that it is of God. No severer trial can await it than it has already experienced; and as it has survived so many storms and trials, we have every evidence that, according to the predictions, it is destined to live and to fill the world. See Notes on Mat. xvi. 18; Is. liv. 17; lv. 11; Da. iv. 35. ¶ Lest. That is, if you continue to oppose it, you may be found to have been opposing God. ¶ Haply. Perhaps. In the Greek this is lest at any time; that is, at some future time, when too late to retract your doings, &c. ¶ Ye be found. It shall appear that you have been opposing God. ¶ Even to fight against God. Greek Θεωράχοι, those who contend with God. The word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. To fight against

God is to oppose him, or to maintain an attitude of hostility against him. It is an attitude that is most fearful in its character, and will most certainly be attended with an overthrow. No condition can be more awful than such an opposition to the Almighty; no overthrow more terrible than that which must follow such opposition. Comp. Ac. ix. 5; xxiii. 9. Opposition to the gospel in the Scriptures is uniformly regarded as opposition to God, Mat. xii. 30; Lu. xi. 23. Men may be said to fight against God in the following ways, or on the following subjects: (1) When they oppose his gospel, its preaching, its plans, its influence among men; when they endeavour to prevent its diffusion, or to withdraw their families and friends from its influence. (2) When they oppose the doctrines of the Bible. When they become angry that the real truths of religion are preached, and suffer themselves to be irritated and excited by an unwillingness that those doctrines should be true, and should be presented to men. Yet this is no uncommon thing. Men by nature do not love those doctrines, and they are often indignant that they are preached. Some of the most angry feelings which men ever have arise from this source; and man can never find peace until he is willing that God's truth should exert its influence on his own soul, and rejoice that it is believed and loved by others. (3) Men oppose the law of God. It seems to them too stern and harsh. It condemns them; and they are unwilling that it should be applied to them. There is nothing which a sinner likes less than he does the pure and holy law of God. (4) Sinners fight against the providence of God. When he afflicts them they rebel. When he takes away their health, or property, or friends, they murmur. They esteem him harsh and cruel; and instead of finding peace by submission, they greatly aggravate their sufferings, and infuse a mixture of wormwood and gall into the cup by murmuring and repining. There is no peace in affliction but in the feeling that God is right. And until this belief is cherished, the wicked will be like the troubled sea which cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt, Is. lvii. 20. Such opposition

40 And to him they agreed: and when they had called the

to God is as wicked as it is foolish. The Lord gave, and has a right to remove our comforts; and we should be still, and know that he is God. (5) Sinners fight against God when they resist the influences of his Spirit; when they oppose serious thoughts; when they seek evil or gay companions and pleasures rather than submit to God; and when they spurn all the entreaties of their friends to become Christians. All these may be the appeals which God is making to men to be prepared to meet him. And yet it is common for sinners thus to stifle conviction, and refuse even to think of their eternal welfare. Nothing can be an act of more direct and deliberate wickedness and folly than this. Without the aid of the Holy Spirit none can be saved; and to resist his influences is to put away the only prospect of eternal life. To do it is to do it over the grave; not knowing that another hour of life may be granted; and not knowing that if life is prolonged, the Spirit will ever strive again with the heart.

In view of this verse, we may remark, 1. That the path of wisdom is to submit at once to the requirements of God. Without this, we must expect conflicts with him, and peril and ruin. No man can be opposed to God without endangering himself every minute. 2. Submission to God should be entire. It should extend to every doctrine and demand; every law, and every act of the Almighty. In all his requirements, and in all afflictions, we should submit to him, for thus only shall we find peace. 3. Infidels and scoffers will gain nothing by opposing God. They have thus far been thwarted, and unsuccessful; and they will be still. None of their plans have succeeded; and the hope of destroying the Christian religion, after the efforts of almost two thousand years, must be vain, and will recoil with tremendous vengeance on those who make them.

40. And to him they agreed. Greek, . They were persuaded by him; or they trusted to him. They agreed only so far as their design of putting them to death was concerned. They abandoned that design. But they did not comply with his advice to let them entirely alone. ¶ And beaten them. The usual amount of lashes which were inflicted on offenders was thirty-nine, 2 Co. xi. 24. Beating, or whipping, was a common mode of punishing minor offences among the Jews. It was expressly foretold by the Saviour that the apostles would be subjected to this, Mat. x. 17. The reason why they did not adopt the advice of Gamaliel altogether doubtless was, that if they did, they feared that their authority would be despised by the people. They had commanded them not to preach; they had threatened them (ch. iv. 18; v. 28); they had imprisoned them (ch. v. 18); and now, if they suffered them to go without even the appearance of punishment, their authority, they feared, would be despised by the nation, and it would be supposed that the apostles had triumphed over the Sanhedrim. It is probable, also, that they were so indignant, that they could not suffer them to go without the gratification of subjecting them to the public odium of a whipping. Men, if they cannot accomplish their full purposes of malignity against the gospel, will take up with even some petty annoyance and malignity rather than let it alone.

41. Rejoicing. Nothing to most men would seem more disgraceful than a public whipping. It is a punishment inflicted usually not so much because it gives pain, as because it is esteemed to be attended with disgrace. The Jewish rulers doubtless desired that the apostles might be so affected with the sense of this disgrace as to be unwilling to appear again in public, or to preach the gospel any more. Yet in this they were disappointed. The effect was just the reverse. If it be asked why they rejoiced in this manner, we may reply, (1) Because they were permitted thus to imitate the example of the Lord Jesus. He had been scourged and reviled, and they were glad that they were permitted to be treated as he was. Comp. Phi. iii. 10; Col. i. 24; 1 Pe. iv. 13, "Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings." (2) Because, by this, they had evidence that they were the friends and followers of Christ. It was clear they were engaged in the same cause that he was. They were enduring the same sufferings, and strivspeak in the name of Jesus, and let them go.

41 And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing

that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.

ing to advance the same interests. As they loved the cause, they would rejoice in enduring even the shame and sufferings which the cause, of necessity, involved. The kingdom of the Redeemer was an object so transcendently important, that for it they were willing to endure all the afflictions and disgrace which it might involve. (3) They had been told to expect this, and they now rejoiced that they had this evidence that they were engaged in the cause of truth, Mat. v. 11, 12; x. 17, 22; 2 Co. xii. 10; Phi. i. 29; Ja. i. 2. (4) Religion appears to a Christian so excellent and lovely, that he is willing, for its sake, to endure trial, persecution, and death. With all this, it is infinite gain; and we should be willing to endure these trials, if, by them, we may gain a crown of glory. Comp. Mar. x. 30. (5) Christians are the professed friends of Christ. We show attachment for friends by being willing to suffer for them; to bear contempt and reproach on their account; and to share their persecutions, sorrows, and calamities. (6) The apostles were engaged in a cause of innocence, truth, and benevolence. They had done nothing of which to be ashamed; and they rejoiced, therefore, in a conscience void of offence, and in the consciousness of integrity and benevolence. When other men disgrace themselves by harsh, or vile, or opprobrious language or conduct toward us, we should not feel that the disgrace belongs to us. It is theirs; and we should not be ashamed or distressed, though their rage should fall on us. See 1 Pe. iv. 14-16. ¶ Counted worthy. Esteemed to be deserving. That is, esteemed fit for it by the Sanhedrim. It does not mean that God esteemed them worthy, but that the Jewish council judged them fit to suffer shame in this cause. They evinced so much zeal and determination of purpose that they were judged fit objects to be treated as the Lord Jesus had himself been. ¶ To suffer shame. To be dishonoured or disgraced in the estimation of the Jewish rulers. The particular disgrace to which reference is made here was whipping.

To various other kinds of shame they were also exposed. They were persecuted, reviled, and finally put to death. Here we may remark that a profession of the Christian religion has been in all ages esteemed by many to be a disgrace. The reasons are, (1) That Jesus is himself despised; (2) That his precepts are opposed to the gaiety and follies of the world; (3) That it attacks that on which the men of the world pride themselves; (4) That it requires a spirit which the world esteems mean and grovelling—meekness, humility, self-denial, patience, forgiveness of injuries; and (5) That it requires duties—prayer, praise, seriousness, benevolence. All these things the men of the world esteem degrading and mean, and hence they endeavour to subject those who practise them to disgrace. The kinds of disgrace to which Christians have been subjected are too numerous to be mentioned here. In former times they were subjected to the loss of property, of reputation, and to all the shame of public punishment, and to the terrors of the dungeon, the stake, or the rack. One main design of persecution was, to select a kind of punishment so disgraceful as to deter others from professing religion. Disgrace even yet may attend it. It may subject one to the ridicule of friends—of even a father, mother, or brother. Christians hear their opinions abused; their names vilified; their Bible travestied; the name of their God profaned, and of their Redeemer blasphemed. Their feelings are often wantonly and rudely torn by the cutting sarcasm or the bitter sneer. Books and songs revile them; their peculiarities are made the occasion of indecent merriment on the stage and in novels; and in this way they are still subjected to shame for the name of Jesus. Every one who becomes a Christian should remember that this is a part of his inheritance, and should not esteem it dishonourable to be treated as his Master was before him, Jn. xv. 18-20; Mat. x. 25. ¶ For his name. For attachment to him.

42. And daily, &c. Comp. 2 Ti. iv. 2. See also Notes on Ac. ii. 46.

CHAPTER VI.

AND in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmur-

CHAPTER VI.

1. In those days, &c. The first part of this chapter contains an account of the appointment of deacons. It may be asked, perhaps, why the apostles did not appoint these officers at the first organization of the church? To this question we may reply, that it was better to defer the appointment until an occasion should occur when it would appear to be manifestly necessary and proper. When the church was small, its alms could be distributed by the apostles themselves without difficulty. But when it was greatly increased; when its charities were multiplied; and when the distribution might give rise to contentions, it was necessary that this matter should be intrusted to the hands of laymen, and that the ministry should be freed from all embarrassment, and all suspicions of dishonesty and unfairness in regard to pecuniary matters. It has never been found to be wise that the temporal affairs of the church should be intrusted in any considerable degree to the clergy, and they should be freed from such sources of difficulty and embarrassment. ¶ Was multiplied. By the accession of the three thousand on the day of Pentecost, and of those who were subsequently added, ch. iv. 4; v. 14. ¶ A murmuring. A complaint—as if there had been partiality in the distribution. ¶ Of the Grecians. There has been much diversity of opinion in regard to these persons, whether they were Jews who had lived among the Gentiles, and who spoke the Greek language, or whether they were proselytes from the Gentiles. The former is probably the correct opinion. The word here used is not that which is commonly employed to designate the inhabitants of Greece, but it properly denotes those who imitate the customs and habits of the Greeks, who use the Greek language, &c. In the time when the gospel was first preached, there were two classes of Jews—those who remained in Palestine, who used the Hebrew language, and who were appropriately called Hebrews; and those who were scattered among the Gentiles, who spoke the Greek language, and who used in their

ing of the “Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations.

synagogues the Greek translation of the Old Testament, called the Septuagint. These were called Hellenists, or, as it is in our translation, Grecians. See Notes on Jn. vii. 35. These were doubtless the persons mentioned here—not those who were proselyted from Gentiles, but those of Jewish origin who were not natives of Judea, who had come up to Jerusalem to attend the great festivals. See ch. ii. 5, 9–11. Dissensions would be very likely to arise between these two classes of persons. The Jews of Palestine would pride themselves much on the fact that they dwelt in the land of the patriarchs and the land of promise; that they used the language which their fathers spoke, and in which the oracles of God were given; and that they were constantly near the temple, and regularly engaged in its solemnities. On the other hand, the Jews from other parts of the world would be suspicious, jealous, and envious of their brethren, and would be likely to charge them with partiality, or of taking advantage in their intercourse with them. These occasions of strife would not be destroyed by their conversion to Christianity, and one of them is furnished on this occasion. ¶ Because their widows, &c. The property which had been contributed, or thrown into common stock, was understood to be designed for the equal benefit of all the poor, and particularly, it would seem, for the poor widows. The distribution before this seems to have been made by the apostles themselves—or possibly, as Mosheim conjectures (Comm. de rebus Christianorum ante Constantinum, p. 139, 118), the apostles committed the distribution of these funds to the Hebrews, and hence the Grecians are represented as murmuring against them, and not against the apostles. ¶ In the daily ministrations. In the daily distribution which was made for their wants. Comp. ch. iv. 35. The property was contributed doubtless with an understanding that it should be equally distributed to all classes of Christians that had need. It is clear from the Epistles that widows were objects of special attention in the primitive church, and that the first Christians regarded it as a matter of indispensable obligation to provide for their wants, 1 Ti. v. 3, 9, 10, 16; Ja. i. 27.

2. Then the twelve. That is, the apostles. Matthias had been added to them after the apostasy of Judas, which had completed the original number. ¶ The multitude of the disciples. It is not necessary to suppose that all the disciples were convened, which amounted to many thousands, but that the business was laid before a large number; or perhaps the multitude here means those merely who were more particularly interested in the matter, and who had been engaged in the complaint. ¶ It is not reason. The original words used here properly denote it is not pleasing or agreeable; but the meaning evidently is, it is not fit or proper. It would be a departure from the design of their appointment, which was to preach the gospel, and not to attend to the pecuniary affairs of the church. ¶ Leave the word of God. That we should neglect or abandon the preaching of the gospel so much as would be necessary if we attended personally to the distribution of the alms of the church. The gospel is here called the word of God, because it is his message; it is that which he has spoken, or which he has commanded to be proclaimed to men. ¶ Serve tables. This expression properly denotes to take care of, or provide for the table, or for the daily wants of a family. It is an expression that properly applies to a steward or a servant. The word tables is, however, sometimes used with reference to money, as being the place where money was kept for the purpose of exchange, &c., Mat. xxi. 12; xxv. 27. Here the expression means, therefore, to attend to the pecuniary transactions of the church, and to make the proper distribution for the wants of the poor.

3. Look ye out. Select, or choose. As this was a matter pertaining to their own pecuniary affairs, it was proper that they should be permitted to choose such men as they could confide in. By this means the apostles would be free from all suspicions. It could not be pretended that they were partial, nor could it ever be charged on them that they wished to embezzle the funds by managing them themselves, or by intrusting them to men of their own selection. It follows from this, also, that the right of selecting deacons resides in the church, and does not pertain to the ministry. It is evidently proper that men who are to be intrusted with the alms of the church should be selected by the church itself. ¶ Among you. That is, from among the Grecians and Hebrews, that there may be justice done, and no farther cause of complaint. ¶ Seven men. Seven was a sacred number among the Hebrews, but there does not appear to have been any mystery in choosing this number. It was a convenient number, sufficiently large to secure the faithful performance of the duty, and not so large as to cause confusion and embarrassment. It does not follow, however, that the same number is now to be chosen as deacons in a church, for the precise number is not commanded. ¶ Of honest report. Of fair reputation; regarded as men of integrity. Greek, testified of, or borne witness to; that is, whose characters were well known and fair. ¶ Full of the Holy Ghost. This evidently does not mean endowed with miraculous gifts, or the power of speaking foreign languages, for such gifts were not necessary to the discharge of their office, but it means men who were eminently under the influence of the Holy Ghost, or who were of distinguished piety. This was all that was necessary in the case, and this is all that the words fairly imply. ¶ And wisdom. Prudence, or skill, to make a wise and equitable distribution. The qualifications of deacons are still further stated and illustrated in 1 Ti. iii. 8-10. In this place it is seen that they must be men of eminent piety and fair character, and that they must possess prudence, or wisdom, to manage the affairs connected with their office. These qualifications are indispensable to a faithful discharge of the duty intrusted to the officers of the church. ¶ Whom we may appoint. Whom we may constitute, or set over this business. The way in which this was done was by prayer and the imposition of hands, ver. 6. Though they were selected by the church, yet the power of ordaining them, or setting them apart, was retained by the apostles. Thus the rights of both were preserved—the right of the church to designate those who should serve them in the office of deacon, and the right of the apostles to organize and establish the church with its appropriate officers; on the one hand, a due regard to the liberty and privileges of the Christian community, and, on the other, the security of proper respect for the office as being of apostolic appointment and authority. ¶ Over this business. That is, over the distribution of the alms of the church—not to preach, or to govern the church, but solely to take care of the sacred funds of charity, and distribute them to supply the wants of the poor. The office is distinguished from that of preaching the gospel. To that the apostles were to attend. The deacons were expressly set apart to a different work, and to that work they should be confined. In this account of their original appointment, there is not the slightest intimation that they were to preach, but the contrary is supposed in the whole transaction. Nor is there here the slightest intimation that they were regarded as an order of clergy, or as in any way connected with the clerical office. In the ancient synagogues of the Jews there were three men to whom was intrusted the care of the poor. They were called by the Hebrews parnashin, or pastors (Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. et Talm.; Mat. iv. 23). From these officers the apostles took the idea probably of appointing deacons in the Christian church, and doubtless intended that their duties should be the same.

3 Wherefore, brethren, "look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.

4. But we will give ourselves continually. The original expression here used denotes intense and persevering application to a thing, or unwearied effort in it. See Notes on Ac. i. 14. It means that the apostles designed to make this their constant and main object, undistracted by the cares of life, and even by attention to the temporal wants of the church. ¶ To prayer. Whether this means private or public prayer cannot be certainly determined. The passage, however, would rather incline us to suppose that the latter was meant, as it is immediately connected with preaching. If so, then the phrase denotes that they would give themselves to the duties of their office, one part of which was public prayer, and another preaching. Still it is to be believed that the apostles felt the need of secret prayer, and practised it, as preparatory to their public preaching. ¶ And to the ministry of the word. To preaching the gospel, or communicating the message of eternal life to the world. The word ministry (dιακονία) properly denotes the employment of a servant, and is given to the preachers of the gospel because they are employed in this as the servants of God and of the church. We have here a view of what the apostles thought to be the proper work of the ministry. They were set apart to this work. It was their main, their only employment. To this their lives were to be devoted, and both by their example and their writings they have shown that it was on this principle they acted. Comp. 1 Ti. iv. 15, 16; 2 Ti. iv. 2. It follows also that if their time and talents were to be wholly devoted to this work, it was reasonable that they should receive competent support from the churches, and this reasonable claim is often urged. See Notes on 1 Co. ix. 7-14; Ga. vi. 6.

5. And the saying. The word—the counsel, or command. ¶ And they chose Stephen, &c. A man who soon showed (ch. vii.) that he was every way qualified for his office, and fitted to defend also the cause of the Lord Jesus. This man had the distinguished honour of being the first Christian martyr. ¶ And Nicolas. From this man some of the fathers (Iren., lib. i. 27; Epiphanius, 1; Hæres., 5) says that the sect of the Nicolaianæ, mentioned with so much disapprobation (Re. ii. 6, 15), took their rise. But the evidence of this is not clear. ¶ A proselyte. A proselyte is one who is converted from one religion to another. See Notes on Mat. xxiii. 15. The word does not mean here that he was a convert to Christianity—which was true—but that he had been converted at Antioch from paganism to the Jewish religion. As this is the only proselyte mentioned among the seven deacons, it is evident that the others were native-born Jews, though a part of them might have been born out of Palestine, and have been of the denomination of Grecians, or Hellenists. ¶ Of Antioch. This city, often mentioned in the New Testament (Ac. xi. 19, 20, 26; xv. 22, 35; Ga. ii. 11, &c.), was situated in Syria, on the river Orontes, and was formerly called Riblath. It is not mentioned in the Old Testament, but is frequently mentioned in the Apocrypha. It was built by Seleucus Nicanor, A.C. 301, and was named Antioch, in honour of his father Antiochus. It became the seat of empire of the Syrian kings of the Macedonian race, and afterward of the Roman governors of the eastern provinces. In this place the disciples of Christ were first called Christians, Ac. xi. 26. Josephus says it was the third city in size of the Roman provinces, being inferior only to Seleucia and Alexandria. It was long, indeed, the most powerful city of the East. The city was almost square, had many gates, was adorned with fine fountains, and possessed great fertility of soil and commercial opulence. It was subject to earthquakes, and was often almost destroyed by them. In A.D. 588 above sixty thousand persons perished in it in this manner. In A.D. 970 an army of one hundred thousand Saracens besieged it, and took it. In 1268 it was taken possession of by the Sultan of Egypt, who demolished it, and placed it under the dominion of the Turk. It is now called Antakia, and till the year 1822 it occupied a remote corner of the ancient inclosure of its walls, its splendid buildings being reduced to hovels, and its population living in Turkish debasement. It contains now about ten thousand inhabitants (Robinson's Calmet). This city should be distinguished from Antioch in Pisidia, also mentioned in the New Testament, Ac. xiii. 14.

6. And when they had prayed. Invoking in this manner the blessing of God to attend them in the discharge of the duties of their office. ¶ They laid their hands, &c. Among the Jews it was customary to lay hands on the head of a person who was set apart to any particular office, Nu. xxvii. 18; Comp. Ac. viii. 19. This was done, not to impart any power or ability, but to designate that they received their authority or commission from those who thus laid their hands on them, as the act of laying hands on the sick by the Saviour was an act signifying that the power of healing came from him, Mat. ix. 18; comp. Mar. xvi. 18. In such cases the laying on of the hands conveyed of itself no healing power, but was a sign or token that the power came from the Lord Jesus. Ordination has been uniformly performed in this way. See 1 Ti. v. 22. Though the seven deacons had been chosen by the church to this work, yet they derived their immediate commission and authority from the apostles.

7. And the word of God increased. That is, the gospel was more and more successful, or became more mighty and extensive in its influence. An instance of this success is immediately added. ¶ And a great company of the priests.

A great multitude. This is recorded justly as a remarkable instance of the power of the gospel. How great this company was is not mentioned. But the number of the priests in Jerusalem was very great; and their conversion was a striking proof of the power of truth. It is probable that they had been opposed to the gospel with quite as much hostility as any other class of the Jews. And it is now mentioned, as worthy of special record, that the gospel was sufficiently mighty to humble even the proud, and haughty, and self-greatly; "and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith.

8 And Stephen, full of faith and

ish, and envious priests to the foot of the cross. One design of the gospel is to evince the power of truth in subduing all classes of men; and hence in the New Testament we have the record of its having actually subdued every class to the obedience of faith. Some MSS., however, here instead of priests read Jews. This reading is followed in the Syriac version. ¶ Were obedient to the faith. The word faith here is evidently put for the Christian religion. Faith is one of the main requirements of the gospel (Mar. xvi. 16), and by a figure of speech is put for the gospel itself. To become obedient to the faith, therefore, is to obey the requirements of the gospel, particularly that which requires us to believe. Comp. Ro. x. 16. By the accession of the priests also no small part of the reproach would be taken away from the gospel, that it made converts only among the lower classes of the people. Comp. Jn. vii. 48.

8. And Stephen. The remarkable death of this first Christian martyr, which soon occurred, gave occasion to the sacred writer to give a detailed account of his character, and of the causes which led to his death. Hitherto the opposition of the Jews had been confined to threats and imprisonment; but it was now to burst forth with furious rage and madness, that could be satisfied only with blood. This was the first in a series of persecutions against Christians which filled the church with blood, and which closed the lives of thousands, perhaps millions, in the great work of establishing the gospel on the earth. ¶ Full of faith. Full of confidence in God, or trusting entirely to his promises. See Notes on Mar. xvi. 16. ¶ And power. The power which was evinced in working miracles. ¶ Wonders. This is one of the words commonly used in the New Testament to denote miracles.

9. Then there arose. That is, they stood up against him, or they opposed him. ¶ Of the synagogue. See Notes on Mat. iv. 23. The Jews were scattered in all parts of the world. In every place they would have synagogues. But it is also probable that there would be enough foreign Jews residing at Jerupower, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, salem from each of those places to maintain the worship of the synagogue; and at the great feasts, those synagogues adapted to Jewish people of different nations would be attended by those who came up to attend the great feasts. It is certain that there was a large number of synagogues in Jerusalem. The common estimate is, that there were four hundred and eighty in the city (Lightfoot; Vitringa). ¶ Of the Libertines. There has been very great difference of opinion about the meaning of this word. The chief opinions may be reduced to three: 1. The word is Latin, and means properly a freedman, a man who had been a slave and was set at liberty. Many have supposed that these persons were manumitted slaves of Roman origin, but who had become proselyted to the Jewish religion, and who had a synagogue in Jerusalem. This opinion is not very probable; though it is certain, from Tacitus (Ann., lib. ii. c. 85), that there were many persons of this description at Rome. He says that four thousand Jewish proselytes of Roman slaves made free were sent at one time to Sardinia. 2. A second opinion is, that these persons were Jews by birth, and had been taken captives by the Romans, and then set at liberty, and were thus called freedmen or libertines. That there were many Jews of this description there can be no doubt. Pompey the Great, when he subjugated Judea, sent large numbers of the Jews to Rome (Philo, In Legat. ad Caium). These Jews were set at liberty at Rome, and assigned a place beyond the Tiber for a residence. See Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans. These persons are by Philo called libertines, or freedmen (Kuinoel, in loco). Many Jews were also conveyed as captives by Ptolemy I. to Egypt, and obtained a residence in that country and the vicinity. 3. Another opinion is, that they took their name from some place which they occupied. This opinion is more probable from the fact that all the other persons mentioned here are named from the countries which they occupied. Suidas says that this is the name of a place. And in one of the fathers this passage occurs: "Victor, bishop of the Catholic Church at Libertina, says, unity is there," &c. From this passage it is plain that there was a place called Libertina. That place was in Africa, not far from ancient Carthage. See Bishop Pearce's Comment. on this place. ¶ Cyrenians. Jews who dwelt at Cyrene in Africa. See Notes on Mat. xxvii. 32. ¶ Alexandrians. Inhabitants of Alexandria in Egypt. That city was founded by Alexander the Great, B.C. 332, and was peopled by colonies of Greeks and Jews. It was much celebrated, and contained not less than three hundred thousand free citizens, and as many slaves. The city was the residence of many Jews. Josephus says that Alexander himself assigned to them a particular quarter of the city, and allowed them equal privileges with the Greeks (Antiq., xiv. 7, 2; Against Apion, ii. 4). Philo affirms that of five parts of the city, the Jews inhabited two. According to his statement, there dwelt in his time at Alexandria and the other Egyptian cities not less than ten hundred thousand Jews. Amron, the general of Omar, when he took the city, said that it contained 40,000 tributary Jews. At this place the famous version of the Old Testament called the Septuagint, or the Alexandrian version, was made. See Robinson's Calmet. ¶ Cilicia. This was a province of Asia Minor, on the sea-coast, at the north of Cyprus. The capital of this province was Tarsus, the native place of Paul, ch. ix. 11. As Paul was of this place, and belonged doubtless to this synagogue, it is probable that he was one who was engaged in this dispute with Stephen. Comp. ch. vii. 58. ¶ Of Asia. See Notes on ch. ii. 9. ¶ Disputing with Stephen. Doubtless on the question whether Jesus was the Messiah. This word does not denote angry disputing, but is commonly used to denote fair and impartial inquiry; and it is probable that the discussion began in this way, and when they were overcome by argument, they resorted, as disputants are apt to do, to angry criminations and violence.

10. To resist. That is, they were not resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake.

11 Then they suborned men, which said, We have heard him able to answer his arguments. ¶ The wisdom. This properly refers to his knowledge of the Scriptures; his skill in what the Jews esteemed to be wisdom — acquaintance with their sacred writings, opinions, &c. ¶ And the spirit. This has been commonly understood of the Holy Spirit, by which he was aided; but it rather means the energy, power, or ardour of Stephen. He evinced a spirit of zeal and sincerity which they could not withstand; which served, more than mere argument could have done, to convince them that he was right. The evidence of sincerity, honesty, and zeal in a public speaker will often go farther to convince the great mass of mankind, than the most able argument if delivered in a cold and indifferent manner.

11. Then they suborned men. To suborn in law means to procure a person to take such a false oath as constitutes perjury (Webster). It has substantially this sense here. It means that they induced them to declare that which was false, or to bring a false accusation against him. This was done, not by declaring a palpable and open falsehood, but by perverting his doctrines, and by stating their own inferences as what he had actually maintained—the common way in which men oppose doctrines from which they differ. The Syriac reads this place, "Then they sent certain men, and instructed them that they should say," &c. This was repeating an artifice which they had before practised so successfully in relation to the Lord Jesus Christ. See Mat. xxvi. 60, 61. ¶ We have heard, &c. When they alleged that they had heard this is not said. Probably, however, they referred to some of his discourses with the people when he wrought miracles and wonders among them, ver. 8.

¶ Blasphemous words. See Notes on Mat. ix. 3. Moses was regarded with profound reverence. His laws they held to be unchangeable. Any intimation, therefore, that there was a greater law-giver than he, or that his institutions were mere shadows and types, and were no longer binding, would be regarded as blasphemy, even though it should be spoken with the highest professed respect for Moses. That the Mosaic institutions were to be changed, and give place to another and a better dispensation, all the Christian teachers would affirm; but this was not said with a design to blaspheme or revile Moses. In the view of the Jews, to say that was to speak blasphemy; and hence, instead of reporting what he actually did say, they accused him of saying what they regarded as blasphemy. If reports are made of what men say, their very words should be reported; and we should not report our inferences or impressions as what they said. ¶ And against God. God was justly regarded by the Jews as the giver of their law and the author of their institutions. But the Jews, either wilfully or involuntarily, not knowing that they were a shadow of good things to come, and were therefore to pass away, regarded all intimations of such a change as blasphemy against God. God had a right to change or abolish those ceremonial observances, and it was not blasphemy in Stephen to declare it.

12. And they stirred up the people. They excited the people, or alarmed their fears, as had been done before when they sought to put the Lord Jesus to death, Mat. xxvii. 20. ¶ The elders. The members of the Sanhedrim, or great council. ¶ Scribes. See Notes on Mat. ii. 4. ¶ To the council. To the Sanhedrim, or the great council of the nation, which claimed jurisdiction in the matters of religion. See Notes on Mat. ii. 4.

13. And set up false witnesses. It has been made a question why these persons are called false witnesses, since it is supposed by many that they reported merely the words of Stephen. It may be replied that if they did report merely his words; if Stephen had actually said what they affirmed, yet they perverted his meaning. They accused him of blasphemy; that is, of calumnious and

reproachful words against Moses and against God. That Stephen had spoken in such a manner, or had designed to reproach Moses, there is no evidence. What was said in the mildest manner, and in the way of cool argument, might easily be perverted so as in their view to amount to blasphemy. But there is no evidence whatever that Stephen had ever used these words on any occasion, and it is altogether improbable that he ever did, for the following reasons: (1) Jesus himself never affirmed that he would destroy that place. He uniformly taught that it would be done by the Gentiles, Mat. xxiv. It is altogether improbable, therefore, that Stephen should declare any such thing. (2) It is equally improbable that he taught that Jesus would abolish the peculiar customs and rites of the Jews. It was long, and after much discussion, before the apostles themselves were convinced that they were to be changed, and when they were changed it was done gradually. See Ac. x. 14, &c.; xi. 2, &c.; xv. 20; xxi. 20, &c. The probability therefore is, that the whole testimony was false, and was artfully invented to produce the utmost exasperation among the people, and yet was at the same time so plausible as to be easily believed. For on this point the Jews were particularly sensitive; and it is clear that they had some expectations that the Messiah would produce some such changes. Comp. Mat. xxvi. 61 with Da. ix. 26, 27. The same charge was afterward brought against Paul, which he promptly denied. See Ac. xxv. 8. ¶ This holy place. The temple. ¶ The law. The law of Moses.

14. Shall change. Shall abolish them, or shall introduce others in their place. ¶ The customs. The ceremonial rites and observances of sacrifices, festivals, &c., appointed by Moses.

15. Looking steadfastly on him. Fixing the eyes intently on him. Probably they were attracted by the unusual appearance of the man, his meekness, his calm and collected fearlessness, and the proofs of conscious innocence and sincerity. ¶ The face of an angel. This expression is one evidently denoting that he manifested evidence of sincerity, gravity, fearlessness, confidence in God. It is used in the Old Testament to denote peculiar wisdom, 2 Sa. xiv. 17; xix. 27. In Ge. xxxiii. 10, it is used to denote peculiar majesty and glory, as if it were the face of God. When Moses came down from Mount Sinai, it is said that the skin of his face shone so that the children of Israel were afraid to come nigh to him, Ex. xxxiv. 29, 30; 2 Co. iii. 7, 13. Comp. Re. i. 16; Mat. xvii. 2. The expression is used to denote the impression produced on the countenance by communion with God; the calm serenity and composure which follow a confident committing of all into his hands. It is not meant that there was anything miraculous in the case of Stephen, but it is language that denotes calmness, dignity, and confidence in God, all of which were so marked on his countenance that it impressed them with clear proofs of his innocence and piety. The language is very common in the Jewish writings. It is not unusual for deep feeling, sincerity, and confidence in God, to impress themselves on the countenance. Any deep emotion will do this; and it is to be expected that religious feeling, the most tender and solemn of all feeling, will diffuse seriousness, serenity, calmness, and peace, not affected sanctimoniousness, over the countenance.

In this chapter we have another specimen of the manner in which the church of the Lord Jesus was established. It was from the beginning amidst scenes of persecution, encountering opposition adapted to try the nature and power of religion. If Christianity was an imposture, it had enemies acute and malignant enough to detect the imposition. The learned, the cunning, and the mighty rose up in opposition, and by all the arts of sophistry, all the force of authority, and all the fearfulness of power, attempted to destroy it in the commencement. Yet it lived; it gained new accessions of strength from every new form of opposition; it evinced its genuineness more and more by showing that it was superior to the arts and malice of earth and of hell.

CHAPTER VII.

This chapter contains the defence of Stephen before the Sanhedrim, or great council of the Jews. There has been great diversity of opinion about the object which Stephen had in view in this defence, and about the reason why he introduced at such length the history of the Jewish people. But a few remarks may perhaps show his design. He was accused of blasphemy in speaking against the institutions of Moses and the temple, that is, against everything held sacred among the Jews. To meet this charge, he gives a statement, at length, of his belief in the Mosaic religion, in the great points of their history, and in the fact that God had interposed in a remarkable manner in defending them from dangers. By this historical statement he avows his full belief in the divine origin of the Jewish religion, and thus indirectly repels the charge of blasphemy. It is further to be remembered that this was the best way of securing the attention of the council. Had he entered on an abstract defence, he might expect to be stopped by their cavils or their clamour. But the history of their own nation was a favourite topic among the Jews. They were always ready to listen to an account of their ancestors; and to secure their attention, nothing more was necessary than to refer to their illustrious lives and deeds. Comp. Ps. lxxviii., cv., cxi., cxxxv.; Eze. xx. In this way Stephen secured their attention, and practically repelled the charge of speaking reproachfully of Moses and the temple. He showed them that he had as firm a belief as they in the great historical facts of their nation. It is to be remembered, also, that this speech was broken off in the midst (ver. 53, 54), and it is therefore difficult to state fully what the design of Stephen was. It seems clear, however, that he intended to convict them of guilt, by showing that they sustained the same character as their fathers had manifested (ver. 51, 52); and there is some probability that he intended to show that the acceptable worship of God was not to be confined to any place particularly, from the fact that the worship of Abraham, and the patriarchs, and Moses, was acceptable before the temple was reared (ver. 2, &c.), and from the declaration in ver. 48, that God dwells not in temples made with hands. All that can be said here is, (1) That Stephen showed his full belief in the divine appointment of Moses and the historical facts of their religion; (2) That he laid the foundation of an argument to show that those things were not perpetually binding, and that acceptable worship might be offered in other places and in another manner than at the temple.

2 And he said, "Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken: The God of

It has been asked in what way Luke became acquainted with this speech so as to repeat it. The Scripture has not informed us. But we may remark, (1) That Stephen was the first martyr. His death, and the incidents connected with it, could not but be a matter of interest to the first Christians, and the substance of his defence, at least, would be familiar to them. There is no improbability in supposing that imperfect copies might be preserved by writing, and circulated among them. (2) Luke was the companion of Paul. (See Introduction to the Gospel by Luke.) Paul was present when this defence was delivered, and was a man who would be likely to remember what was said on such an occasion. From him Luke might have derived the account of this defence. In regard to this discourse, it may be further remarked, that it is not necessary to suppose that Stephen was inspired. Even if there should be found inaccuracies, as some critics have pretended, in the address, it would not militate against its genuineness. It is the defence of a man on trial under a serious charge; not a man of whom there is evidence that he was inspired, but a pious, devoted, heavenly-minded man. All that the sacred narrative is responsible for is the correctness of the report. Luke alleges only that such a speech was in fact delivered, without affirming that every particular in it is correct.

1. Then said the high-priest. See Notes on Mat. ii. 4. In this case the high-priest seems to have presided in glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, the council. ¶ Are these things so? To wit, the charge alleged against him of blasphemy against Moses and the temple, ch. vi. 13, 14.

2. Men, brethren, and fathers. These were the usual titles by which the Sanhedrim was addressed. In all this Stephen was perfectly respectful, and showed that he was disposed to render due honour to the institutions of the nation. ¶ The God of glory. This is a Hebrew form of expression denoting the glorious God. It properly denotes his majesty, or splendour, or magnificence; and the word glory is often applied to the splendid appearances in which God has manifested himself to men, De. v. 24; Ex. xxxiii. 18; xvi. 7, 10; Le. ix. 23; Nu. xiv. 10. Perhaps Stephen meant to affirm that God appeared to Abraham in some such glorious or splendid manifestation, by which he would know that he was addressed by God. Stephen, moreover, evidently uses the word glory to repel the charge of blasphemy against God, and to show that he regarded him as worthy of honour and praise. ¶ Appeared, &c. In what manner he appeared is not said. In Ge. xii. 1, it is simply recorded that God had said unto Abraham, &c. ¶ To our father. The Jews valued themselves much on being the children of Abraham. See Notes on Mat. iii. 9. The expression was therefore well calculated to conciliate their minds. ¶ When he was in Mesopotamia. In Ge. xi. 31, it is said that Abraham dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees. The word Mesopotamia properly denotes the region between the two rivers, the Euphrates and the Tigris. See Notes on Ac. ii. 9. The name is Greek, and the region had also other names before the Greek name was given to it. In Ge. xi. 31; xv. 7, it is called Ur of the Chaldees. Mesopotamia and Chaldea might not exactly coincide; but it is evident that Stephen meant to say that Ur was in the country afterward called Mesopotamia. Its precise situation is unknown. A Persian fortress of this name is mentioned by Ammianus (xxv. 8) between Nisibis and the Tigris.

¶ Before he dwelt in Charran. From Ge. xi. 31, it would seem that Terah took his son Abraham of his own accord, and removed to Haran. But from Ge.

3 And said unto him, <sup>b</sup>Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee.

xii. 1; xv. 7, it appears that God had commanded Abraham to remove, and so he ordered it in his providence that Terah was disposed to remove his family with an intention of going into the land of Canaan. The word Charran is the Greek form of the Hebrew Haran, Ge. xi. 31. This place was also in Mesopotamia, in  $36^{\circ} 52' N.$  lat. and  $39^{\circ} 5' E.$  long. Here Terah died (Ge. xi. 32); and to this place Jacob retired when he fled from his brother Esau, Ge. xxvii. 43. It is situated "in a flat and sandy plain, and is inhabited by a few wandering Arabs, who select it for the delicious water which it contains" (Robinson's Calmet).

3. And said unto him. How long this was said before he went is not recorded. Moses simply says that God had commanded him to go, Ge. xii. 1. ¶ Thy kindred. Thy relatives, or family connections. It seems that Terah went with him as far as to Haran; but Abraham was apprised that he was to leave his family, and to go almost alone. ¶ Into the land, &c. The country was yet unknown. The place was to be shown him. This is presented in the New Testament as a strong instance of faith, He. xi. 8, 9. It was an act of simple confidence in God. And to leave his country and home; to go into a land of strangers, not knowing whither he went, required strong confidence in God. It is a simple illustration of what man is always required to do at the command of God. Thus the gospel requires him to commit all to God; to yield body and soul to his disposal; to be ready at his command to forsake father, and mother, and friends, and houses, and lands, for the sake of the Lord Jesus, Lu. xiv. 33; Mat. xix. 27, 29. The trials which Abraham might have anticipated may be readily conceived. He was going, in a rude and barbarous age of the world, into a land of strangers. He was without arms or armies, and almost alone. He did not even know the nature or situation of the land, or the character of its inhabitants. He had no title to it; no claim to urge; and he went depending on the simple promise of God that he would give it to him. He went, therefore, trusting simply to the promise of God. Thus his conduct illustrated precisely what we are to do in reference to all our coming life, and to the eternity before us: we are to trust simply to the promise of God, and do that which he requires. This is faith. In Abraham it was as simple and intelligible an operation of mind as ever occurs in any instance. Nor is faith in the Scriptures regarded as more mysterious than any other mental operation. Had Abraham seen all that was to result from his going into that land, it would have been a sufficient reason to induce him to do as he did. But God saw it; and Abraham was required to act just as if he had seen it all, and all the reasons why he was called. On the strength of God's promises he was called to act. This was faith. It did not require him to act where there was no reason for his so acting, but where he did not see the reason. So in all cases of faith. If man could see all that God sees, he would perceive reasons for acting as God requires. But the reasons of things are often concealed, and man is required to act on the belief that God sees reasons why he should so act. To act under the proper impression of that truth which God presents is faith; as simple and intelligible as any other act or operation of the mind. See Notes on Mar. xvi. 16.

4. Land of the Chaldeans. From Ur of the Chaldees, Ge. xi. 31. ¶ When his father was dead. This passage has given rise to no small difficulty in the interpretation. The difficulty is this: From Ge. xi. 26, it would seem that Abraham was born when Terah was seventy years of age. "And Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran." From Ge. xii. 4, it seems that Abraham was seventy-five years of age when he departed from Haran to Canaan. The age of Terah was therefore but one hundred and forty-five years. Yet in Ge. xi. 32, it is said that Terah was two hundred and five years old when he died, thus leaving sixty years of Terah's life beyond the time when Abraham left Haran.

e Ge.15.13.16.

Various modes have been proposed of meeting this difficulty. (1) Errors in numbers are more likely to occur than any other. In the Samaritan copy of the Pentateuch, it is said that Terah died in Haran at the age of one hundred and five years, which would suppose that his death occurred forty years before Abraham left Haran. But the Hebrew, Latin, Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read it two hundred and five years. (2) It is not affirmed that Abraham was born just at the time when Terah was seventy years of age. All that the passage in Ge. xi. 26 proves, according to the usual meaning of similar expressions, is, that Terah was seventy years old before he had any sons, and that the three were born subsequently to that. But which was born first, or what intervals intervened between their birth, does not appear. Assuredly it does not mean that all were born precisely at the time when Terah was seventy years of age. Neither does it appear that Abraham was the oldest of the three. The sons of Noah are said to have been Shem, Ham, and Japheth (Ge. v. 32); yet Japheth, though mentioned last, was the eldest, Ge. x. 21. As Abraham afterward became much the most distinguished, and as he was the father of the Jewish people, of whom Moses was writing, it was natural that he should be mentioned first. If it cannot be proved that Abraham was the eldest, as assuredly it cannot be, then there is no improbability in supposing that his birth might have occurred many years after Terah was seventy years of age. (3) The Jews unanimously affirm that Terah relapsed into idolatry before Abraham left Haran; and this they denominate death, or a moral death (Kuinoel). It is certain, therefore, that, from some cause, they were accustomed to speak of Terah as dead before Abraham left him. Stephen only used language which was customary among the Jews, and would employ it, doubtless, correctly, though we may not be able to see precisely how it can be reconciled with the account in Genesis.

5. And he gave him none inheritance. Abraham led a wandering life; and this passage means that he did not himself receive a permanent possession or residence in that land. The only land which he owned was the field which he purchased of the children of Heth for a burial place, Ge. xxiii. As this was obtained by purchase, and not by the direct gift of God, and as it was not designed for a residence, it is said that God gave him no inheritance. It is mentioned as a strong instance of his faith that he should remain there without a permanent residence himself, with only the prospect that his children, at some distant period, would inherit it. ¶ Not so much as to set his foot on. This is a proverbial expression, denoting in an emphatic manner that he had no land, De. ii. 5. ¶ Would give it to him. Ge. xiii. 15. Abraham did not himself possess all that land; and the promise is evidently equivalent to saying that it would be conferred on the family of Abraham, or the family of which he was the father, without affirming that he would himself personally possess it. It is true, however, that Abraham himself afterward dwelt many years in that land as his home, Ge. xiii., &c. ¶ For a possession. To be held as his own property. ¶ When as yet he had no child. When there was no human probability that he would have any posterity. Comp. Ge. xv. 2, 3; xviii. 11, 12. This is mentioned as a strong instance of his faith; "who against hope believed in hope," Ro. iv. 18.

6. And God spake on this wise. In this manner, Ge. xv. 13, 14. ¶ His seed. His posterity; his descendants. ¶ Should sojourn. This means that they would have a temporary residence there. The word is used in opposition to a fixed, permanent home, and is applied to travellers, or foreigners. ¶ In a strange land. In the Hebrew (Ge. xv. 13), "Shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs." The land of Canaan and the land of Egypt were to them strange lands, though the obvious reference here is to the latter. ¶ Should bring them into bondage. Or, would make them slaves, Ex. i. 11. ¶ And entreat them evil. Would oppress or afflict them. ¶ Four hundred years. This is the precise time which is mentioned by Moses, Ge. xv. 13. Great perplexity has been experienced in explaining this passage, or reconciling it with other statements. In Ex. xii. 40, it is said that their sojourning in Egypt was four hundred and thirty years. Josephus (Antiq., b. ii. ch. ix. § 1) also says that the time in which they were in Egypt was four hundred years; though in another place (Antiq., b. ii. ch. xv. § 2) he says that they left Egypt four hundred and thirty years after their forefather Abraham came to Canaan, but two hundred and fifteen years after Jacob removed to Egypt. Paul also (Ga. iii. 17) says that it was four hundred and thirty years from the time when the promise was given to Abraham to the time when the law was given on Mount Sinai. The Samaritan Pentateuch says also (Ex. xii. 40) that the “dwelling of the sons of Israel, and of their fathers, which they dwelt in the land of Canaan, and in the land of Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years.” The same is the version of the Septuagint. A part of this perplexity is removed by the fact that Stephen and Moses use, in accordance with a very common custom, round numbers in speaking of it, and thus speak of four hundred years when the literal time was four hundred and thirty. The other perplexities are not so easily removed. From the account which Moses has given of the lives of certain persons, it would seem clear that the time which they spent in Egypt was not four hundred years. From Ge. xlvi. 8, 11, it appears that Kohath was born when Jacob went into Egypt. He lived one hundred and thirty-three years, Ex. vi. 18. Amram, his son, and the father of Moses lived one hundred and thirty-seven years, Ex. vi. 20. Moses was eighty years old when he was sent to Pharaoh, Ex. vii. 7. The whole time thus mentioned, including the time in which the father lived after his son was born, was only three hundred and fifty years. Exclusive of that, it is reasonable to suppose that the actual time of their being in Egypt could not have been but about two hundred years, according to one account of Josephus. The question then is, how can these accounts be reconciled? The only satisfactory way is by supposing that the four hundred and thirty years includes the whole time from the calling of Abraham to the departure from Egypt. And that this was the fact is probable from the following circumstances. (1) The purpose of all the narratives on this subject is to trace the period before they became finally settled in the land of Canaan. During all this period from the calling of Abraham, they were in a wandering, unfixed situation. This constituted substantially one period, including all their oppressions, hardships, and dangers; and it was natural to have reference to this entire period in any account which was given. (2) All this period was properly the period of promise, not of possession. In this respect the wanderings of Abraham and the oppressions of Egypt came under the same general description. (3) Abraham was himself occasionally in Egypt. He was unsettled; and since Egypt was so prominent in all their troubles, it was natural to speak of all their oppressions as having occurred in that country. The phrase “residence in Egypt,” or “in a strange land,” would come to be synonymous, and would denote all their oppressions and trials. They would speak of their sufferings as having been endured in Egypt, because their afflictions there were so much more prominent than before. (4) All this receives countenance from the version of the LXX., and from the Samaritan text, showing the manner in which the ancient Jews were accustomed to understand it. (5) It should be added, that difficulties of chronology are more likely to occur than any others; and it should not be deemed strange if there are perplexities of this kind found in ancient writings which we cannot explain. It is so in all ancient records; and all that is usually expected in relation to such difficulties is that we should be able to present a probable explanation.

particularly to the Egyptians. ¶ Will I judge. The word judge, in the Bible, often means to execute judgment as well as to pronounce it; that is, to punish. See Jn. xviii. 31; iii. 17; viii. 50; xii. 47; Ac. xxiv. 6; 1 Co. v. 13, &c. It has this meaning here. God regarded their oppressive acts as deserving his indignation, and he evinced it in the plagues with which he visited them, and in their overthrow in the Red Sea. ¶ Shall serve me. Shall worship me, or be regarded as my people. ¶ In this place. That is, in the place where God made this promise to Abraham. These words are not found in Genesis, but similar words are found in Ex. iii. 12, and it was a practice, in making quotations, to quote the sense only, or to connect two or more promises having relation to the same thing.

8. And he gave him. That is, God appointed or commanded this, Ge. xvii. 9-13. ¶ The covenant. The word covenant denotes properly a compact or agreement between two or more persons, usually attended with seals, pledges, or sanctions. In Ge. xvii. 7, and elsewhere, it is said that God would establish his covenant with Abraham; that is, he made him certain definite promises, attended with pledges and seals, &c. The idea of a strict compact or agreement between God and man, as between equal parties; is not found in the Bible. The word is commonly used, as here, to denote a promise on the part of God, attended with pledges, and demanding, on the part of man, in order to avail himself of its benefits, a specified course of conduct. The covenant is therefore another name for denoting two things on the part of God: (1) A command, which man is not at liberty to reject, as he would be if it were a literal covenant; and, (2) A promise, which is to be fulfilled only on the condition of obedience. The covenant with Abraham was simply a promise to give him the land, and to make him a great nation, &c. It was never proposed to Abraham with the supposition that he was at liberty to reject it, or to refuse to comply with its conditions. Circumcision was appointed as the mark or indication that Abraham and those thus designated were the persons included in the gracious purpose and promise. It served to separate them as a peculiar people; a people whose peculiar characteristic it was that they obeyed and served the God who had made the promise to Abraham. The phrase "covenant of circumcision" means, therefore, the covenant or promise which God made to Abraham, of which circumcision was the distinguishing mark or sign. ¶ The twelve patriarchs. The word patriarch properly denotes the father and ruler of a family. But it is commonly applied, by way of eminence, to the progenitors of the Jewish race, particularly to the twelve sons of Jacob. See Notes on Ac. ii. 29.

9. Moved with envy. That is, dissatisfied with the favour which their father Jacob showed Joseph, and envious at the dreams which indicated that he was to be raised to remarkable honour above his parents and brethren, Ge. xxxvii. 3-11. ¶ Sold Joseph into Egypt. Sold him, that he might be taken to Egypt. This was done at the suggestion of Judah, who advised it that Joseph might not be put to death by his brethren, Ge. xxxvii. 28. It is possible that Stephen, by this fact, might have designed to prepare the way for a severe rebuke of the Jews for having dealt in a similar manner with their Messiah. ¶ But God was with him. God protected him, and overruled all these wicked doings, so that he was raised to extraordinary honours.

10. And delivered him, &c. That is, restored him to liberty from his servitude and humiliation, and raised him up to high honours and offices in Egypt.

¶ Favour and wisdom. The favour was the result of his wisdom. His wisdom was particularly evinced in interpreting the dreams of Pharaoh, Ge. xli. ¶ And made him governor, &c. Ge. xli. 40.

all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; and he<sup>o</sup> made him governor over Egypt and all his house.

¶ All his house. All the family, or all the court and government of the nation.

11. Now there came a dearth. A famine, Ge. xli. 54. ¶ And Chanaan. Jacob was living at that time in Canaan. ¶ Found no sustenance. No food; no means of living.

12. Was corn in Egypt. The word corn here rather denotes wheat. See Notes on Mat. xii. 1. ¶ Our fathers. His ten sons; all his sons except Joseph and Benjamin, Ge. xlvi. Stephen here refers only to the history, without entering into details. By this general reference he sufficiently showed that he believed what Moses had spoken, and did not intend to show him disrespect.

13. Joseph was made known, Ge. xlvi. 4. ¶ Joseph's kindred, &c. His relatives; his family, Ge. xlvi. 16.

14. All his kindred. His father and family, Ge. xlvi. 17-28; xlvi. 1-26. ¶ Threescore and fifteen souls. Seventy-five persons. There has been much perplexity felt in the explanation of this passage. In Ge. xlvi. 26, Ex. i. 5, and De. x. 22, it is expressly said that the number which went down to Egypt consisted of seventy persons. The question is, in what way these accounts can be reconciled? It is evident that Stephen has followed the account which is given by the Septuagint. In Ge. xlvi. 27, that version reads, "But the sons of Joseph who were with him in Egypt were nine souls; all the souls of the house of Jacob which came with Jacob into Egypt were seventy-five souls." This number is made out by adding these nine souls to the sixty-six mentioned in ver. 26. The difference between the Septuagint and Moses is, that the former mentions five descendants of Joseph who are not recorded by the latter. The names of the sons of Ephraim and Manasseh are recorded in 1 Ch. vii. 14-21. Their names were there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first.

13 And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls.

15 So Jacob went down into

Ashriel, Machir, Zelophehad, Peresh, sons of Manasseh; and Shuthelah, son of Ephraim. Why the Septuagint inserted these, it may not be easy to see. But such was evidently the fact; and the fact accords accurately with the historic record, though Moses did not insert their names. The solution of difficulties in regard to chronology is always difficult; and what might be entirely apparent to a Jew in the time of Stephen, may be wholly inexplicable to us.

15, 16. And died. Ge. xlvi. 33. ¶ He and our fathers. The time which the Israelites remained in Egypt was two hundred and fifteen years, so that all the sons of Jacob were deceased before the Jews went out to go to the land of Canaan. ¶ And were carried over. Jacob himself was buried in the field of Macpelah by Joseph and his brethren, Ge. l. 13. It is expressly said that the bones of Joseph were carried by the Israelites when they went into the land of Canaan, and buried in Shechem, Jos. xxiv. 32; comp. Ge. l. 25. No mention is made in the Old Testament of their carrying the bones of any of the other patriarchs, but the thing is highly probable in itself. If the descendants of Joseph carried his bones, it would naturally occur to them to take also the bones of each of the patriarchs, and give them an honourable sepulchre together in the land of promise. Josephus (Antiq., b. ii. ch. viii. § 2) says that "the posterity and sons of these men (of the brethren of Joseph), after some time, carried their bodies and buried them in Hebron; but as to the bones of Joseph, they carried them into the land of Canaan afterward, when the Hebrews went out of Egypt." This is in accordance with the common opinion of the Jewish writers, that they were buried in Hebron. Yet

Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers,

the tradition is not uniform. Some of the Jews affirm that they were buried in Sychem (Kuineol). As the Scriptures do not anywhere deny that the patriarchs were buried in Sychem, it cannot be proved that Stephen was in error. There is one circumstance of strong probability to show that he was correct. At the time when this defence was delivered, Sychem was in the hands of the Samaritans, between whom and the Jews there was a violent hostility. Of course the Jews would not be willing to concede that the Samaritans had the bones of their ancestors, and hence perhaps the opinion had been maintained that they were buried in Hebron. ¶ Into Sychem. This was a town or village near to Samaria. It was called Sichar (see Notes on Jn. iv. 5), Shechem, and Sychem. It is now called Naplos or Napolose, and is ten miles from Shiloh, and about forty from Jerusalem, toward the north. ¶ That Abraham bought. The word Abraham here has given rise to considerable perplexity, and it is now pretty generally conceded that it is a mistake. It is certain, from Ge. xxxiii. 19 and Jos. xxiv. 32, that this piece of land was bought, not by Abraham, but by Jacob, of the sons of Hamor, the father of Shechem. The land which Abraham purchased was the cave of Macpelah, of the sons of Heth, in Hebron, Ge. xxiii. Various solutions have been proposed of this difficulty, which it is not necessary to detail. It may be remarked, however, (1) That as the text now stands, it is an evident error. This is clear from the passages cited from the Old Testament above. (2) It is not at all probable that either Stephen or Luke would have committed such an error. Every consideration must lead us to the conclusion that they were too well acquainted with such prominent points of the Jewish history to commit an error like this. (3) The probability, therefore, is, that the error has arisen since; but how, is not known, nor is there any way of ascertaining. All

17 But when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, "the people grew and multiplied in Egypt,

the ancient versions agree in reading Abraham. One MS. only reads "Abraham our father." Some have supposed, therefore, that it was written "which our father bought," and that some early transcriber inserted the name of Abraham. Others, that the name was omitted entirely by Stephen; and then the antecedent to the verb "bought" will be "Jacob," in ver. 15, according with the fact. Other modes have been proposed also, but none are entirely satisfactory. If there was positive proof of Stephen's inspiration, or if it were necessary to make that out, the difficulty would be much greater. But it has already been remarked that there is no decisive evidence of that, and it is not necessary to make out that point to defend the Scriptures. All that can be demanded of the historian is, that he should give a fair account of the defence as it was delivered; and though the probability is that Stephen would not commit such an error, yet, admitting that he did, it by no means proves that Luke was not inspired, or that Luke has committed any error in recording what was actually said. ¶ Of the sons of Emmor. In the Hebrew (Ge. xxxiii. 19), "the children of Hamor"—but different ways of rendering the same word.

17. The time of the promise. The time of the fulfilment of the promise. ¶ The people grew, &c. Ex. i. 7-9.

18. Till another king arose. This is quoted from Ex. i. 8. What was the name of this king is not certainly known. The common name of all the kings of Egypt was Pharaoh, as Cæsar became the common name of the emperors of Rome after the time of Julius Cæsar: thus we say, Augustus Cæsar, Tiberius Cæsar, &c. It has commonly been supposed to have been the celebrated Rameses, the sixth king of the eighteenth dynasty, and the event is supposed to have occurred about 1559 years before the Christian era. M. Champollion supposes that his name was Mandonei, whose reign commenced 1585, and ended our kindred, and evil-entreated our fathers, "so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

v Ex. i. 22. w Ex. ii. 2, &c. 1 or, fair to God.

1565 years before Christ (Essay on the Hieroglyphic System, p. 94, 95). Sir Jas. G. Wilkinson supposes that it was Amosis, or Ames, the first king of the eighteenth dynasty (Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, vol. i. p. 42, 2d ed.). "The present knowledge of Egyptian history is too imperfect to enable us to determine this point" (Prof. Hackett). ¶ That knew not Joseph. It can hardly be supposed that he would be ignorant of the name and deeds of Joseph; and this expression, therefore, probably means that he did not favour the designs of Joseph; he did not remember the benefits which he had conferred on the nation; or furnish the patronage for the kindred of Joseph which had been secured for them by Joseph under a former reign. National ingratitude has not been uncommon in the world, and a change of dynasty has often obliterated all memory of former obligations and compacts.

19. Dealt subtilly. He acted deceitfully; he used fraud. The cunning or deceitful attempt which is referred to, is his endeavour to weaken and destroy the Jewish people by causing their male children to be put to death, Ex. i. 22. ¶ Our kindred. Our nation, or our ancestors. ¶ And evil-entreated. Was unjust and cruel toward them. ¶ So that, &c. For that purpose, or to cause them to cast them out. He dealt with them in this cruel manner, hoping that the Israelites themselves would destroy their own sons, that they might not grow up to experience the same sufferings as their fathers had. The cunning or subtilty of Pharaoh extended to everything that he did to oppress, to keep under, and to destroy the children of Israel.

20. In which time, &c. During this period of oppression. See Ex. ii. 2, &c. ¶ Was exceeding fair. Greek, "was fair to God;" properly rendered, was very handsome. The word God in the Greek here in accordance with the Hebrew usage, by which anything that is very handsome, lofty, or grand is thus designated. Thus, Ps. xxxvi. 7, mountains of God, mean lofty mountains; Ps. lxxx. 11, cedars of God, mean lofty, beautiful cedars. Thus Nineveh is called "a great city to God" (Jonah iii. 3, Greek), meaning a very great city. The expression here simply means that Moses was very fair, or handsome. Comp. He. xi. 23, where he is called "a proper child;" that is, a handsome child. It would seem from this that Moses was preserved by his mother on account of his beauty; and this is hinted at in Ex. ii. 2. And it would also seem from this that Pharaoh had succeeded by his oppressions in what he had attempted; and that it was not unusual for parents among the Jews to expose their children, or to put them to death.

21 And when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and <sup>2</sup> nourished him for her own son.

21. Was cast out. When he was exposed on the banks of the Nile, Ex. ii. 3. ¶ And nourished him. Adopted him, and treated him as her own son, Ex. ii. 10. It is implied in this that he was educated by her. An adopted son in the family of Pharaoh would be favoured with all the advantages which the land could furnish for an education.

22. Moses was learned. Or, was instructed. It does not mean that he had that learning, but that he was carefully trained or educated in that wisdom. The passage does not express the fact that Moses was distinguished for learning, but that he was carefully educated, or that pains were taken to make him learned. ¶ In all the wisdom, &c. The learning of the Egyptians was confined chiefly to astrology, to the interpretation of dreams, to medicine, to mathematics, and to their sacred science or traditional doctrines about religion, which were concealed chiefly under their hieroglyphics. Their learning is not unfrequently spoken of in the Scriptures, 1 Ki. iv. 30; comp. Is. xix. 11, 12. Their knowledge is equally celebrated in the heathen world. It is known that science was carried from Egypt to Phenicia, and thence to Greece; and not a few of the Grecian philosophers travelled to Egypt in pursuit of knowledge. Herodotus himself frankly concedes that the Greeks derived very much of their knowledge from Egypt. (See Rawlinson's Herodotus, vol. ii. p. 80, 81; Herodotus, bk. ii. p. 50, 51.) ¶ And was mighty. Was powerful, or was distinguished. This means that he was eminent in Egypt before he conducted the children of Israel forth. It refers to his addresses to Pharaoh, and to the miracles which he wrought before their departure. ¶ In words. From Ex. iv. 10, it seems that Moses was "slow of speech, and of a slow tongue." When it is said that he was mighty in words, it means that he was mighty in his communications to Pharaoh, though they were spoken by his brother Aaron. Aaron was in his place, and Moses addressed Pharaoh through him, who was appointed to deliver the message, Ex. iv. 11-16. ¶ Deeds. Miracles, Ex. vii. &c.

23 And<sup>2</sup> when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

24 And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

23. Full forty years of age. This is not recorded in the Old Testament; but it is a constant tradition of the Jews that Moses was forty years of age when he undertook to deliver them. Thus it is said, "Moses lived in the palace of Pharaoh forty years; he was forty years in Midian; and he ministered to Israel forty years" (Kuinoel). ¶ To visit, &c. Probably with a view of delivering them from their oppressive bondage. Comp. ver. 25.

24. Suffer wrong. The wrong or injury was, that the Egyptian was smiting the Hebrew, Ex. ii. 11, 12. ¶ Smote the Egyptian. He slew him, and buried him in the sand.

25. For he supposed. This is not mentioned by Moses; but it is not at all improbable. When they saw him alone contending with the Egyptian; when it was understood that he had come would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood not.

26 And the next day he showed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, and taken vengeance on one of their oppressors, it might have been presumed that he regarded himself as directed by God to interpose, and save the people.

26. And the next day. Ex. ii. 13. ¶ He showed himself. He appeared in a sudden and unexpected manner to them. ¶ Unto them. That is, to two of the Hebrews, Ex. ii. 13. ¶ As they strove. As they were engaged in a quarrel. ¶ Have set them at one. Greek, "would have urged them to peace." This he did by remonstrating with the man that did the wrong. ¶ Saying. What follows is not quoted literally from the account which Moses gives, but it is substantially the same. ¶ Sirs. Greek, "Men." ¶ Ye are brethren. You belong not only to the same nation, but you are brethren and companions in affliction, and should not, therefore, contend with each other. One of the most melancholy scenes in the world is that, where those who are poor, and afflicted, and oppressed, add to all their other calamities altercations and strifes among themselves. Yet it is from this class that contentions and law-suits usually arise. The address which Moses here makes to the contending Jews might be applied to the whole human family in view of the contentions and wars of nations: "Ye are brethren, members of the same great family, and why do you contend with each other?"

27. But he that did, &c. Intent on his purpose, filled with rage and passion, he rejected all interference, and all attempts at peace. It is usually the man that does the injury that is unwilling to be reconciled; and when we find a man that regards the entreaties of his friends as improper interference, when he becomes increasingly angry when we exhort him to peace, it is usually a strong evidence that he is conscious that he has been at fault. If we wish to reconcile parties, we should go first to the man that has been injured. In the controversy between God and man, it is the sinner who has done the wrong that is unwilling to be reconciled, and not God. ¶ His neighbour. The Jew with whom he was contending. ¶ Who made thee, &c. What right have you to interfere in this matter? The usual salutation with which a man is greeted who attempts to prevent quarrels.

Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?

29 Then fled Moses at this saying;

28. Wilt thou kill me, &c. How it was known that he had killed the Egyptian does not appear. It was probably communicated by the man who was rescued from the hands of the Egyptian, Ex. ii. 11, 12.

29. Then fled Moses, &c. Moses fled because he now ascertained that what he had done was known. He supposed that it had been unobserved, Ex. ii. 12. But he now thought that the knowledge of it might reach Pharaoh, and that his life might thus be endangered. Nor did he judge incorrectly; for as soon as Pharaoh heard of it, he sought to take his life, Ex. ii. 15. ¶ Was a stranger. Or became a sojourner (πάροικος), one who had a temporary abode in the land. The use of this word implies that he did not expect to make that his permanent dwelling. ¶ In the land of Midian. This was a part of Arabia. "This would seem," says Gesenius, "to have been a tract of country extending from the eastern shore of the Elanitic Gulf to the region of Moab on the one hand, and to the vicinity of Mount Sinai on the other. The people were nomadic in their habits, and moved often from place to place." This was extensively a desert region, an unknown land; and Moses expected there to be safe from Pharaoh. ¶ Where he begat two sons. He married Zipporah, the daughter of Reuel (Ex. ii. 18), or Jethro (Nu. x. 29; Ex. iii. 1), a priest of Midian. The names of the two sons were Gershom and Eliezer, Ex. xviii. 3, 4.

30. And when forty years, &c. At the age of eighty years. This, however, was known by tradition. It is not expressly mentioned by Moses. It is said, however, to have been after the king of and was a stranger in the land of Midian, where he begat two sons.

Egypt had died (Ex. ii. 23); and the tradition is not improbable. ¶ In the wilderness of mount Sinai. In the desert adjacent to, or that surrounded Mount Sinai. In Ex. iii. 1, it is said that this occurred at Mount Horeb. But there is no contradiction; Horeb and Sinai are different peaks or elevations of the same mountain. They are represented as springing from the same base, and branching out in different elevations. The mountains, according to Burckhardt, are a prodigious pile, comprehending many peaks, and about thirty miles in diameter. From one part of this mountain, Sinai, the law was given to the children of Israel. ¶ An angel of the Lord. The word angel means properly a messenger (see Notes on Mat. i. 20), and is applied to the invisible spirits in heaven, to men, to the winds, to the pestilence, or to whatever is appointed as a messenger to make known or to execute the will of God. The mere name, therefore, can determine nothing about the nature of the messenger. That name might be applied to any messenger, even an inanimate object. The nature and character of this messenger are to be determined by other considerations. The word may denote that the bush on fire was the messenger. But a comparison with the other places where this occurs will show that it was a celestial messenger, and perhaps that it was the Messiah who was yet to come, appearing to take the people of Israel under his own charge and direction. Comp. Jn. i. 11, where the Jews are called "his own." In Ex. iii. 2, it is said that the angel of the Lord appeared IN a flame of fire; in ver. 4 it is said that Jehovah spake to him out of the midst of the bush; language which implies that God was there, and which is strongly expressive of the doctrine that the angel was Jehovah. In Ex. xxii. 20, 21, God says, "I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice," &c., ver. 23; xxxii. 34; xxxiii. 2. In all these places this angel is mentioned as an extraordinary messenger sent to conduct them to the land in the wilderness of mount Sinai, an angel of the Lord, in a flame of fire in a bush.

31 When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight; and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold.

of Canaan. He was to guide them, to defend them, and to drive out the nations before them. All these circumstances seem to point to the conclusion that this was no other than the future deliverer of the world, who came then to take his people under his own guidance, as emblematic of the redemption of his people. ¶ In a flame of fire. That is, in what appeared to be a flame of fire. The bush or clump of trees seemed to be on fire, or to be illuminated with a peculiar splendour. God is often represented as encompassed with this splendour, or glory, Lu. ii. 9; Mat. xvii. 1-5; Ac. ix. 3; xii. 7. ¶ In a bush. In a grove, or clump of trees. Probably the light was seen issuing from the midst of such a grove.

31. He wondered, &c. What particularly attracted his attention was the fact that the bush was not consumed, Ex. iii. 2, 3. ¶ The voice of the Lord. Jehovah spake to him from the midst of the bush. He did not see him. He merely heard a voice.

32. Saying, I am the God, &c. See this explained in the Notes on Mat. xxii. 32. ¶ Then Moses trembled. Ex. iii. 6.

33. Then said the Lord, &c. In Ex. iii. this is introduced in a different order, as being spoken before God said "I am the God," &c. ¶ Put off thy shoes, &c., Ex. iii. 5. To put off the shoes, or sandals, was an act of reverence. Especially the ancients were not permitted to enter a temple or holy place with their shoes on. Indeed, it was customary for the Jews to remove their shoes whenever they entered any house as a mere matter of civility. Comp. Notes on Jn. xiii. 5. See Jos. v. 15. "The same custom, growing out of the same feeling," says Professor 33 Then said the Lord to him, "Put off thy shoes from thy feet; for the place where thou standest is holy ground."

34 I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt.

35 This Moses, whom they refused, (saying, Who made thee

Hackett (Illustrations of Scripture, p. 74, 75), "is observed among the Eastern nations at the present day. The Arabs and Turks never enter the mosques without putting off their shoes. They exact a compliance with this rule from those of a different faith who visit these sacred places. Though, until a recent period, the Mohammedans excluded Christians entirely from the mosques, they now permit foreigners to enter some of them, provided they leave their shoes at the door, or exchange them for others which have not been defiled by common use."

"A Samaritan from Nablus, who conducted Messrs. Robinson and Smith to the summit of Gerizim, when he came within a certain distance of the spot, took off his shoes, saying it was unlawful for his people to tread with shoes upon this ground, it being holy." ¶ Is holy ground. Is rendered sacred by the symbol of the divine presence. We should enter the sanctuary, the place set apart for divine worship, not only with reverence in our hearts, but with every external indication of veneration. Solemn awe and deep seriousness become the place set apart to the service of God. Comp. Ec. v. 1.

34. I have seen, &c. The repetition of this word is in accordance with the usage of the Hebrew writers when they wish to represent anything emphatically. ¶ Their groaning. Under their oppressions. ¶ Am come down. This is spoken in accordance with human conceptions. It means that God was about to deliver them. ¶ I will send thee, &c. This is a mere summary of what is expressed at much greater length in Ex. iii. 7-10.

35. Whom they refused. That is, when he first presented himself to them, Ex. ii. 13, 14. Stephen introduces and dwells upon this refusal in order, perhaps, to remind them that this had been the character of their nation, and to prepare the way for the charge which he intended to bring against those whom he addressed, as being stiff-necked and rebellious. See ver. 51, 52, &c. ¶ A ruler. A military leader, or a governor in civil matters. ¶ A deliverer. A Redeemer—λυτρων. It properly means one who redeems a captive or a prisoner by paying a price or ransom. It is applied thus to the Lord Jesus, as having redeemed or purchased sinners by his blood as a price, Tit. ii. 14; 1 Pe. i. 18; He. ix. 12. It is used here, however, in a more general sense to denote the deliverance, without specifying the manner. Comp. Ex. vi. 6; Lu. xxiv. 21; i. 68; ii. 38. ¶ By the hand of the angel. Under the direction and by the help of the angel, Nu. xx. 16. See on ver. 30.

a ruler and a judge?) the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer, by the hand of <sup>a</sup>the angel which appeared to him in the bush.

36. Wonders and signs. Miracles, and remarkable interpositions of God. See Notes on Ac. ii. 22. ¶ In the land of Egypt. By the ten plagues. Ex. iv.-xii. ¶ In the Red sea. Dividing it, and conducting the Israelites in safety, and overthrowing the Egyptians, Ex. xiv. ¶ In the wilderness. During their forty years' journey to the promised land. The wonders or miracles were, providing them with manna daily; with flesh in a miraculous manner; with water from the rock, &c., Ex. xvi., xvii., &c.

37. Which said, &c. De. xviii. 15, 18. See this explained, Ac. iii. 22. Stephen introduced this to remind them of the promise of a Messiah; to show his faith in that promise; and particularly to remind them of their obligation to hear and obey him.

38. In the church. The word church means literally the people called out, and is applied with great propriety to the assembly or multitude called out of Egypt, and separated from the world. It has not, however, of necessity our idea of a church, but means the assembly, or people called out of Egypt and placed under the conduct of Moses. ¶ With the angel. In this place there is undoubtedly reference to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. Yet that was done by God himself, Ex. xx. It is clear, therefore, that by the angel here, Stephen intends to designate him who was God. It may be observed, however, that the law is represented as having been given by the ministry of an angel (in this place) and by the ministry of angels, Ac. vii. 53; He. ii. 2. The essential idea is, that God did it by a messenger, or by mediators. The character and rank of the messengers, or of the principal messenger, must be learned by looking at all the circumstances of the case. ¶ The lively oracles. See Ro. iii. 2. The word oracles here means commands or laws of God. The word lively, or living (ζῶντα), stands in opposition to that which is dead, or useless, and means that which is vigorous, efficacious; and in this place it means that the commands were of such a nature, and given in such circumstances, as to secure attention; to produce obedience; to excite them to act for God—in opposition to laws which would fall powerless, and produce no effect.

39. Would not obey, &c. This refers to what they said of him when he was in the mount, Ex. xxxii. 1, 23. ¶ In their hearts turned, &c. They wished to return to Egypt. They regretted that they had come out of Egypt, and desired again the things which they had there, as preferable to what they had not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt, in the desert, Nu. xi. 5. Perhaps, however, the expression means, not that they desired literally to return to Egypt, but that their hearts inclined to the habits and morals of the Egyptians. They forsook God, and imitated the idolatries of the Egyptians.

40. Saying unto Aaron. Ex. xxxii. 1. ¶ Make us gods. That is, idols.

41. And they made a calf. This was made of the ear-rings and ornaments which they had brought from Egypt, Ex. xxxii. 2-4. Stephen introduces this to remind them how prone the nation had been to reject God, and to walk in the ways of sin.

42. Then God turned. That is, turned away from them; abandoned them to their own desires. ¶ The host of heaven. The stars, or heavenly bodies. The word host means armies. It is applied to the heavenly bodies because they are very numerous, and appear to be marshalled or arrayed in military order. It is from this that God is called JEHOVAH of hosts, as being the ruler of these well-arranged heavenly bodies. See Notes on Is. i. 9. The proof that they did this Stephen proceeds to allege by a quotation from the prophets. ¶ In the book of the prophets. Am. v. 25, 26. The twelve minor prophets were commonly written in one volume, and were called the Book of the Prophets; that is, the book containing these several prophecies, Daniel, Hosea, Micah, &c. They were small tracts separately, and were bound up together to preserve them from being lost. This passage is not quoted literally; it is evidently made from memory; and though in its main spirit it coincides with the passage in Amos, yet in some important respects it varies from it. ¶ O ye house of Israel.

them up to worship <sup>r</sup>the host of heaven: as it is written in the book of the prophets, 'O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts, and sacrifices, by the space of forty years in the wilderness?

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made, to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

Ye people of Israel. ¶ Have ye offered, &c. That is, ye have not offered. The interrogative form is often an emphatic way of saying that the thing had not been done. But it is certain that the Jews did offer sacrifices to God in the wilderness, though it is also certain that they did not do it with a pure and upright heart. They kept up the form of worship generally, but they frequently forsook God, and offered worship to idols. Through the continuous space of forty years they did not honour God, but often departed from him, and worshipped idols.

43. Yea, ye took up. That is, you bore, or you carried with you, for purposes of idolatrous worship. ¶ The tabernacle. This word properly means a tent; but it is also applied to the small tent or house in which was contained the image of the god; the shrine, box, or tent in which the idol was placed. It is customary for idolatrous nations to bear their idols about with them, inclosed in cases or boxes of various sizes, usually very small, as their idols are commonly small. Probably they were made in the shape of small temples or tabernacles; and such appear to have been the silver shrines for Diana, made at Ephesus, Ac. xix. 24. These shrines, or images, were borne with them as a species of amulet, charm, or talisman, to defend them from evil. Such images the Jews seem to have borne with them. ¶ Moloch. This word comes from the Hebrew word signifying king. This was a god of the Ammonites, to whom human sacrifices were offered. Moses in several places forbids the Israelites, under penalty of death, to dedicate their children to Moloch, by making them pass through the fire, Le. xviii. 21; xx. 2-5. There is great probability that the Hebrews were addicted to the worship of this deity after they entered the land of Canaan. Solomon built a temple to Moloch on the Mount of Olives (1 Ki. xi. 7); and Manasseh made his son pass through the fire in honour of this idol, 2 Ki. xxi. 3, 6. The image of this idol was made of brass, and his arms extended so as to embrace anyone; and when they offered children to him, they heated the statue, and when it was burning hot, they placed the child in his arms, where it was soon destroyed by heat. It is not certain what this god was supposed to represent. Some suppose it was in honour of the planet Saturn; others, the sun; others, Mercury, Venus, &c. What particular god it was is not material. It was the most cutting reproof that could be made to the Jews, that their fathers had been guilty of worshipping this idol. ¶ And the star. The Hebrew in this place is, "Chiun your images, the star of your god." The expression here used leads us to suppose that this was a star which was worshipped, but what star it is not easy to ascertain; nor is it easy to determine why it is called both Chiun and Remphan. Stephen quotes from the Septuagint translation. In that translation the word Chiun is rendered by the word Raiphan, or Rephan, easily changed into Remphan. Why the authors of that version adopted this is not known. It was probably, however, from one of two causes. (1) Either because the word Chiun in Hebrew meant the same as Remphan in the language of Egypt, where the translation was made; or, (2) Because the object of worship called Chiun in Hebrew was called Remphan in the language of Egypt. It is generally agreed that the object of their worship was the planet Saturn, or Mars, both of which planets were worshipped as gods of evil influence. In Arabic, the word Cherân denotes the planet Saturn. Probably Rephan, or Remphan, is the Coptic name for the same planet, and the Septuagint adopted this because that translation was made in Egypt, where the Coptic language was spoken. ¶ Figures which ye made.

Images of the god which they made. See the article "Chiun" in Robinson's Calmet. ¶ And I will carry you away, &c. This is simply expressing in few words what is stated at greater length in Am. v. 27. In Hebrew it is Damascus; but this evidently denotes the eastern region, in which also Babylon was situated.

44. The tabernacle of witness. The tent or tabernacle which Moses was commanded to make. It was called a tabernacle of witness, or of testimony, because it was the visible witness or proof of God's presence with them; the evidence that he to whom it was devoted was their protector and guide. The name is given either to the tent, to the two tables of stone, or to the ark; all of which were witnesses, or evidences of God's relation to them as their law-giver and guide, Ex. xvi. 34; xxv. 16, 21; xxvii. 21; xxx. 6, 36; xxxi. 18, &c.; Nu. i. 50, 53. The two charges against Stephen were, that he had spoken blasphemy against Moses, or his law, and against the temple, ch. vi. 13, 14. In the previous part of this defence he had shown his respect for Moses and his law. He now proceeds to show that he did not design to speak with disrespect of the temple, or the holy places of their worship. He therefore expresses his belief in the divine appointment of both the tabernacle (ver. 44-46) and of the temple (ver. 47). ¶ According to the fashion, &c. According to the pattern that was shown to him, by which it was to be made, Ex. xxv. 9, 40; xxvi. 30. As God showed him a pattern, it proved that the tabernacle had his sanction. Against that Stephen did not intend to speak.

45. Our fathers that came after. None of the generation that came out of Egypt were permitted to enter into the land of Canaan except Caleb and Joshua, Nu. xiv. 22-24; xxxii. 11, 12. Hence it is said that their fathers who came after, that is, after the generation when the tabernacle was built. The Greek, however, here means, properly, "which also our fathers, having received, brought," &c. The sense is not materially different. Stephen means that it was not brought in by that generation, but by the next. ¶ With Jesus. This should have been rendered “with Joshua.” Jesus is the Greek mode of writing the name Joshua. But the Hebrew name should by all means have been retained here, as also in He. iv. 8. ¶ Into the possession of the Gentiles. Into the land possessed by the Gentiles, that is, into the promised land then occupied by the Canaanites, &c. ¶ Whom God, &c. That is, he continued to drive them out until the time of David, when they were completely expelled. Or it may mean that the tabernacle was in the possession of the Jews, and was the appointed place of worship, until the time of David, who desired to build him a temple. The Greek is ambiguous. The connection favours the latter interpretation.

46. Who found favour, &c. That is, God granted him great prosperity, and delivered him from his enemies. ¶ To find a tabernacle. To prepare a permanent dwelling-place for the ark, and for the visible symbols of the divine presence. Hitherto the ark had been kept in the tabernacle, and had been borne about from place to place. David sought to build a house that would be permanent, where the ark might be deposited, 2 Sa. vii. ; 1 Ch. xxii. 7.

47. But Solomon, &c. Built the temple. David was not permitted to do it because he had been a man of war, 1 Ch. xxii. 8. He prepared the principal materials for the temple, but Solomon built it, 1 Ch. xxii. Comp. 1 Ki. vi.

48. Howbeit. But. Stephen was charged with speaking against the temple. He had now shown that he had due veneration for it, by his declaring that it had been built by the command of God. But he now adds that God does not need such a temple. Heaven is his throne; the universe his dwelling-dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet,

49 Heaven<sup>a</sup> is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?

place; and therefore this temple might be destroyed. A new, glorious truth was to be revealed to mankind, that God was not confined in his worship to any age, or people, or nation. In entire consistency, therefore, with all proper respect for the temple at Jerusalem, it might be maintained that the time would come when that temple would be destroyed, and when God might be worshipped by all nations. ¶ The Most High. God. This sentiment was expressed by Solomon when the temple was dedicated, 1 Ki. viii. 27. ¶ As saith the prophet. Is. lxvi. 1,2. The place is not literally quoted, but the sense is given.

49. Heaven is my throne. See Notes on Mat. v. 34. ¶ Earth is my footstool. See Notes on Mat. v. 35. ¶ What house, &c. What house or temple can be large or magnificent enough for the dwelling of Him who made all things? ¶ The place of my rest. My home, my abode, my fixed seat or habitation. Comp. Ps. xciv. 11.

51. Ye stiff-necked. The discourse of Stephen has every appearance of having been interrupted by the clamours and opposition of the Sanhedrim. This verse has no immediate connection with that which precedes, and appears to have been spoken in the midst of opposition and clamour. If we may conjecture in this case, it would seem that the Jews saw the drift of his argument; that they interrupted him; and that when the tumult had somewhat subsided, he addressed them in the language of this verse, showing them that they sustained a character precisely similar to their rebellious fathers. The word stiff-necked is often used in the Old Testament, Ex. xxxii. 9; xxxiii. 3, 5; xxxiv. 9; De. ix. 6, 18; x. 16, &c. It is a figurative expression taken from oxen that are refractory, and that will not submit to be yoked. Applied to men, it means that they are stubborn, contumacious, and unwilling to submit to the restraints of law. ¶ Uncircumcised in heart. Circumcision was a sign of being a Jew—of acknowledging the authority of the laws of Moses. It was also emblematic of purity, and of submission to the law of God. The expression uncircumcised in heart denotes those who were not willing to acknowledge that law, and submit to it. They had hearts filled with vicious and unsubdued affections and desires. ¶ And ears. That is, who are unwilling to hear what God says. Comp. Le. xxvi. 41; Je. ix. 26. Notes on Ro. ii. 28, 29. ¶ Resist the Holy Ghost. You oppose the message which is brought to you by the authority of God and the inspiration of his Spirit. The message brought by Moses; by the prophets; by the Saviour; and by the apostles—all by the infallible direction of the Holy Ghost—they and their fathers opposed. ¶ As your fathers did, &c. As he had specified in ver. 27, 35, 39–43.

52. Which of the prophets, &c. The interrogative form here is a strong mode of saying that they had persecuted all the prophets. It was the characteristic of the nation to persecute the messengers of God. This is not to be taken as literally and universally true; but it was a general truth; it was the national characteristic. See Notes on Mat. xxi. 33–40; xxiii. 29–35. ¶ And they have slain them, &c. That is, they have slain the prophets, whose main message was that the Messiah was to come. It was a great aggravation of their offence that they put to death the messengers which foretold the greatest blessing that the nation could receive. ¶ The Just One. The Messiah. See Notes on ch. iii. 14. ¶ Of whom ye, &c. You thus show that you resemble those who rejected and put to death the prophets. You have even gone beyond them in guilt, because you have put the Messiah himself to death. ¶ The betrayers. They are called betrayers here because they employed Judas to betray him—agreeable to the maxim in law, He who does anything by another is held to have done it himself.

53. Who have received the law. The law of Moses, given on Mount Sinai. ¶ By the disposition of angels. There has been much diversity of opinion in regard to this phrase, in διαταγής ἀρχιλόγων. The word translated disposition does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It properly means the constituting or arranging of an army; disposing it into ranks and proper divisions. Hence it has been supposed to mean that the law was given amidst the various ranks of angels, being present to witness its promulgation. Others suppose that the angels were employed as agents or instruments to communicate the law. All that the expression fairly implies is the former; that the law was given amidst the attending ranks of angels, as if they were summoned to witness the pomp and ceremony of giving law to an entire people, and through them to an entire world. It should be added, moreover, that the Jews applied the word angels to any messengers of God; to fire, and tempest, and wind, &c. And all that Stephen means here may be to express the common Jewish opinion that God was attended on this occasion by the heavenly hosts, and by the symbols of his presence, fire, and smoke, and tempest. Comp. Ps. civ. 4; lxviii. 17. Other places declare that the law was spoken by an angel, one eminent above all attending angels, the peculiar messenger of God. See Notes on ver. 38. It is plain that Stephen spoke only the common sentiment of the Jews. Thus Herod is introduced by Josephus (Antiq., b. xv. ch. v. § 3) as saying, “We have learned from God the most excellent of our doctrines, and the most holy part of our law by angels,” &c. In the eyes of the Jews, it justly gave increased majesty and solemnity to the law, that it had been given in so grand and imposing circumstances. It greatly aggravated their guilt that, notwithstanding this, they had not kept it.

54. They were cut to the heart. They were exceedingly enraged and indignant. The whole course of the speech had been such as to excite their anger, and now they could restrain themselves no longer. ¶ They gnashed on him, &c. Expressive of the bitterness and malignity of their feeling.

55. Full of the Holy Ghost. See Notes on ch. ii. 4. ¶ Looked up stedfastly. Fixed his eyes intently on heaven. Foreseeing his danger, and the effect his speech had produced; seeing that there was no safety in the great council of the nation, and no prospect of justice at their hands, he cast his eyes to heaven and sought protection there. When dangers threaten us, our hope of safety lies in heaven. When men threaten our persons, reputation, or lives, it becomes us to fix our eyes on the heavenly world; and we shall not look in vain. ¶ And saw the glory of God. This phrase is commonly used to denote the visible symbols of God. It means some magnificent representation; a splendour, or light, that is the appropriate exhibition of the presence of God, Mat. xvi. 27; xxiv. 30. See Notes on Lu. ii. 9. In the case of Stephen there is every indication of a vision or supernatural representation of the heavenly objects; something in advance of mere faith such as dying Christians now have. What was its precise nature we have no means of ascertaining. Objects were often represented to prophets by visions; and probably something similar is intended here. It was such an elevation of view—such a representation of truth and of the glory of God, as to be denoted by the word see; though it is not to be maintained that Stephen really saw the Saviour with the bodily eye. ¶ On the right hand of God. That is, exalted to a place of honour and power in the heavens. 57. Then they cried out. That is, probably, the people, not the members of the council. It is evident he was put to death in a popular tumult. They had charged him with blasphemy; and they regarded what he had now said as full proof of it. ¶ And stopped their ears. That they might hear no more blasphemy. ¶ With one accord. In a tumult; unitedly.

58. And cast him out of the city. This was in accordance with the usual custom. In Le. xxiv. 14, it was directed to bring forth him that had cursed without the camp; and it was not usual, the Jewish writers inform us, to stone in the presence of the Sanhedrim. Though this was a popular tumult, and Stephen was condemned without the regular process of trial, yet some of the forms of law were observed, and he was stoned in the manner directed in the case of blasphemers. ¶ And stoned him. This was the punishment appointed in the case of blasphemy, Le. xxiv. 16. See Notes on Jn. x. 31. ¶ And the witnesses. That is, the false witnesses who bore testimony against him, ch. vi. 13. It was directed in the law (De. xvii. 7) that the witnesses in the case should be first in executing the sentence of the law. This was done to prevent false accusations by the prospect that they must be employed as executioners. After they had commenced the process of execution, all the people joined in it, De. xvii. 7; Le. xxiv. 16. ¶ Laid down their clothes. Their outer garments. They were accustomed to lay these aside when they ran or worked. See Notes on Mat. v. 40. ¶ At a young man's feet, &c. That is, they procured him to take care of their garments. This is mentioned solely because Saul, or Paul, afterward became so celebrated, first as a persecutor, and then an apostle. His whole heart was in this persecution of Stephen; and he himself afterward alluded to this circumstance as an evidence of his sinfulness in persecuting the Lord Jesus, Ac. xxii. 20.

59. Calling upon God. The word God is not in the original, and should not have been in the translation. It is in none of the ancient MSS. or versions. It should have been rendered, They stoned Stephen, invoking, or calling upon, and saying, Lord Jesus, &c. That is, he was engaged in prayer to the Lord Jesus. The word is used to express prayer in the following, among other places: 2 Co. i. 23, "I call God to witness;" 1 Pe. i. 17, "And if ye call on the Father," &c.; Ac. ii. 21, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord," &c.; ix. 14; xxii. 16; Ro. x. 12-14. This was, therefore, an act of worship; a solemn invocation of the Lord Jesus, in the most interesting circumstances in which a man can be placed—in his dying moments. And this shows that it is right to worship the Lord Jesus, and to pray to him. For if Stephen was inspired, it settles the question. The example of an inspired man in such circumstances is a safe and correct example. If it should be said that the inspiration of Stephen cannot be made out, yet the inspiration of Luke, who has recorded it, will not be called in question. Then the following circumstances show that he, an inspired man, regarded it as right, and as a proper example to be followed. (1) He has recorded it without the slightest expression of an opinion that it was improper. On the contrary, there is every evidence that he regarded the conduct of Stephen in this case as right and praiseworthy. There is, therefore, this attestation to its propriety. (2) The spirit that inspired Luke knew what use would be made of this case. He knew that it would be used as an example, and as an evidence that it was right to worship the Lord Jesus. It is one of

59 And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, "receive my spirit!"

60 And he kneeled down, and the cases which has been used to perpetuate the worship of the Lord Jesus in every age. If it was wrong, it is inconceivable that it should be recorded without some expression of disapprobation. (3) The case is strikingly similar to that recorded in Jn. xx. 28, where Thomas offered worship to the Lord Jesus as his God, without reproof. If Thomas did it in the presence of the Saviour without reproof, it was right. If Stephen did it without any expression of disapprobation from the inspired historian, it was right. (4) These examples were used to encourage Christians and Christian martyrs to offer homage to Jesus Christ. Thus Pliny, writing to the Emperor Trajan, and giving an account of the Christians in Bithynia, says that they were accustomed to meet and sing hymns to Christ as to God (Lardnei). (5) It is worthy of remark that Stephen, in his death, offered the same act of homage to Christ that Christ himself did to the Father when he died, Lu. xxiii. 46. From all these considerations, it follows that the Lord Jesus is a proper object of worship; that in most solemn circumstances it is right to call upon him, to worship him, and to commit our dearest interests to his hands. If this may be done, he is divine. ¶ Receive my spirit. That is, receive it to thyself; take it to thine abode in heaven.

60. And he kneeled down. This seems to have been a voluntary kneeling; a placing himself in this position for the purpose of prayer, choosing to die in this attitude. ¶ Lord. That is, Lord Jesus. See Notes on ch. i. 24. ¶ Lay not, &c. Forgive them. This passage strikingly resembles the dying prayer of the Lord Jesus, Lu. xxiii. 34. Nothing but the Christian religion will enable a man to utter such sentiments in his dying moments. ¶ He fell asleep. This is the usual mode of describing the death of saints in the Bible. It is an expression indicating, (1) The peacefulness of their death, compared with the alarm of sinners; (2) The hope of a resurrection; as we retire to sleep with the hope of again awaking to the duties and enjoyments of life. See Jn. xi. 11, 12; 1 Co. xi. 30; xv. 51; 1 Th. iv. 14; v. 10; Mat. ix. 24.

In view of the death of this first Christian martyr, we may remark:

1. That it is right to address to the Lord Jesus the language of prayer.

2. It is peculiarly proper to do it in afflictions, and in the prospect of death, He. iv. 15.

3. Sustaining grace will be derived in trials chiefly from a view of the Lord Jesus. If we can look to him as our Saviour; see him to be exalted to deliver us; and truly commit our souls to him, we shall find the grace which we need in our afflictions.

4. We should have such confidence in him as to enable us to commit ourselves to him at any time. To do this, we should live a life of faith. In health, and youth, and strength, we should seek him as our first and best friend.

5. While we are in health we should prepare to die. What an unfit place for preparation for death would have been the situation of Stephen! How impossible then would it have been to have made preparation! Yet the dying bed is often a place as unfit to prepare as were the circumstances of Stephen. When racked with pain; when faint and feeble; when the mind is indisposed to thought, or when it raves in the wildness of delirium, what an unfit place is this to prepare to die! I have seen many dying beds; I have seen many persons in all stages of their last sickness; but never have I yet seen a dying bed which seemed to me to be a proper place to make preparation for eternity.

6. How peaceful and calm is a death like that of Stephen, when compared with the alarms and anguish of a sinner! One moment of such peace in that trying time is better than all the pleasures and honours which the world can bestow; and to obtain such peace then, the dying sinner would be willing to give all the wealth of the Indies, and all the crowns of the earth. So may I time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and <sup>b</sup>they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.

die—and so may all my readers—enabled, like this dying martyr, to commit my departing spirit to the sure keeping of the great Redeemer! When we take a parting view of the world; when our eyes shall be turned for the last time to take a look of friends and relatives; when the darkness of death shall begin to come around us, then may we be enabled to cast the eye of faith to the heavens, and say, "Lord Jesus, receive our spirits." Thus may we fall asleep, peaceful in death, in the hope of the resurrection of the just.

CHAPTER VIII.

1. And Saul was consenting, &c. Was pleased with his being put to death, and approved it. Comp. ch. xxii. 20. This part of the verse should have been connected with the previous chapter. ¶ And at that time. That is, immediately following the death of Stephen. The persecution arose on account of Stephen, ch. xi. 19. The tumult did not subside when Stephen was killed. The anger of his persecutors continued to be excited against all Christians. They had become so embittered by the zeal and success of the apostles, and by their frequent charges of murder in putting the Son of God to death, that they resolved at once to put a period to their progress and success. This was the first persecution against Christians; the first in a series that terminated only when the religion which they wished to destroy was fully established on the ruins of both Judaism and paganism.

¶ The church. The collection of Christians which were now organized into a church. The church at Jerusalem was the first that was collected. ¶ All scattered. That is, the great mass of Christians. ¶ The regions of Judea, &c. See Notes on Mat. ii. 22. ¶ Except the apostles. Probably the other Christians fled from fear. Why the apostles, who were particularly in danger, did not flee also, is not stated by the historian. Having been, however, more fully in-phen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

structed than the others, and having been taught their duty by the example and teaching of the Saviour, they resolved, it seems, to remain and brave the fury of the persecutors. For them to have fled then would have exposed them, as leaders and founders of the new religion, to the charge of timidity and weakness. They therefore resolved to remain in the midst of their persecutors; and a merciful Providence watched over them, and defended them from harm. The dispersion extended not only to Judea and Samaria, but those who fled carried the gospel also to Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch, ch. xi. 19. There was a reason why this was permitted. The early converts were Jews. They had strong feelings of attachment to the city of Jerusalem, to the temple, and to the land of their fathers. Yet it was the design of the Lord Jesus that the gospel should be preached everywhere. To accomplish this, he suffered a persecution to rage; and they were scattered abroad, and bore his gospel to other cities and lands. Good thus came out of evil; and the first persecution resulted, as all others have done, in advancing the cause which was intended to be destroyed.

2. And devout men. Religious men. The word used here does not imply of necessity that they were Christians. There might have been Jews who did not approve of the popular tumult, and the murder of Stephen, who gave him a decent burial. Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus, both Jews, thus gave to the Lord Jesus a decent burial, Jn. xix. 38, 39. ¶ Carried Stephen. The word translated carried means properly to collect, as fruits, &c. Then it is applied to all the preparations necessary for fitting a dead body for burial, as collecting, or confining it by bandages, with spices, &c. ¶ And made great lamentation. This was usual among the Jews at a funeral. See Notes on Mat. ix. 23.

3. As for Saul. But Saul. He took no interest or part in the pious attentions shown to Stephen, but engaged with zeal in the work of persecution. ¶ He made havoc—ιαυμένο. This word is commonly applied to wild beasts, to of the church, entering into every house; and haling men and women, committed them to prison.

4 Therefore they that were scat-

lions, wolves, &c., and denotes the devastations which they commit. Saul raged against the church like a wild beast—a strong expression, denoting the zeal and fury with which he engaged in persecution. ¶ Entering into every house. To search for those who were suspected of being Christians. ¶ Haling. Dragging, or compelling them. ¶ Committed them to prison. The Sanhedrim had no power to put them to death, Jn. xviii. 31. But they had power to imprison; and they resolved, it seems, to exercise this power to the utmost. Paul frequently refers to his zeal in persecuting the church, Ac. xxvi. 10, 11; Ga. i. 13. It may be remarked here that there never was a persecution commenced with more flattering prospects to the persecutors. Saul, the principal agent, was young, zealous, learned, and clothed with power. He showed afterward that he had talents fitted for any station, and zeal that tired with no exertion, and that was appalled by no obstacle. With this talent and this zeal he entered on his work. The Christians were few and feeble. They were scattered and unarmed. They were unprotected by any civil power, and exposed, therefore, to the full blaze and rage of persecution. That the church was not destroyed was owing to the protection of God—a protection which not only secured its existence, but which extended its influence and power by means of this very persecution far abroad on the earth.

4. Went every where. That is, they travelled through the various regions where they were scattered. In all places to which they came, they preached the word. ¶ Preaching the word. Greek, evangelizing, or announcing the good news of the message of mercy, or the word of God. This is not the usual word which is rendered preach, but it means simply announcing the good news of salvation. There is no evidence, nor is there any probability, that all these persons were ordained to preach. They were manifestly common Christians who were scattered by the persecution; and the meaning is, that they communicated to their fellow-men in conversation wherever they met them, and probably in the synagogues, where all Jews had a right to speak, the glad tidings that the Messiah had come. It is not said that they set themselves up for public teachers, or that they administered baptism, or that they founded churches, but they proclaimed everywhere the news that a Saviour had come. Their hearts were full of it. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks; and they made the truth known to all whom they met. We may learn from this, (1) That persecution tends to promote the very thing which it would destroy. (2) That one of the best means to make Christians active and zealous is to persecute them. (3) That it is right for all Christians to make known the truths of the gospel. When the heart is full the lips will speak, and there is no more impropriety in their speaking of redemption than of anything else. (4) It should be the great object of all Christians to make the Saviour known everywhere. By their lives, their conversation, and their pious exhortations and entreaties, they should beseech dying sinners to be reconciled to God. And especially should this be done when they are travelling. Christians when away from home seem almost to imagine that they lay aside the obligations of religion. But the example of Christ and his early disciples has taught us that this is the very time to attempt to do good.

5. Then Philip. One of the seven deacons, ch. vi. 5. He is afterward called the evangelist, Ac. xxi. 8. ¶ The city of Samaria. This does not mean a city whose name was Samaria, for no such city at that time existed. Samaria was a region, Mat. ii. 22. The ancient city Samaria, the capital of that region, had been destroyed by Hyrcanus, so completely as to leave no vestige of it remaining; and he "took away," says Josephus, "the very marks that there had ever been such a city there" (Antiq., b. xiii. ch. x. § 3). Herod the Great afterward built a city on this site, and called it Sebaste; that is, Augusta, in honour of the Emperor Augustus (Jos. Antiq., b. xv. ch. viii. § 5). Perhaps this city is intended, as being the principal city of Samaria; or possibly Sychar,

another city where the gospel had been before preached by the Saviour himself, Jn. iv. ¶ And preached Christ. Preached that the Messiah had come, and made known his doctrines. The same truths had been before stated in Samaria by the Saviour himself (Jn. iv.); and this was doubtless one of the reasons why they so gladly now received the word of God. The field had been prepared by the Lord Jesus. He had said that it was white for the harvest (Jn. iv. 35), and into that field Philip now entered, and was signally blessed. His coming was attended with a remarkable revival of religion. The word translated preach here is not that which is used in the previous verse. This denotes to proclaim as a crier, and is commonly employed to denote the preaching of the gospel, so called, Mar. v. 20; vii. 36; Lu. viii. 39; Mat. xxiv. 14; Ac. x. 42; Ro. x. 15; 1 Co. ix. 27; xv. 12; 2 Ti. iv. 2. It has been argued that because Philip is said thus to have preached to the Samaritans, that therefore all deacons have a right to preach, or that they are, under the New Testament economy, an order of ministers. But this is by no means clear. For, (1) It is not evident, nor can it be shown, that the other deacons (ch. vi.) ever preached. There is no record of their doing so; and the narrative would lead us to suppose that they did not. (2) They were appointed for a very different purpose (ch. vi. 1-5); and it is fair to suppose that, as deacons, they confined themselves to the design of their appointment. (3) It is not said that Philip preached in virtue of his being a deacon. From anything in this place, it would seem that he preached as the other Christians did—wherever he was. (4) But elsewhere an express distinction is made between Philip and the others. A new appellation is given him, and he is expressly called the evangelist, Ac. xxi. 8. From this, it seems that he preached, not because he was a deacon, but because he had received a special appointment to this business as an evangelist. (5) This same office, or rank of Christian teachers, is expressly recognized elsewhere, Ep. iv. 11. All these considerations show that there is not in the sacred Scriptures an order cord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, 'hearing, and seeing the miracles which he did.'

8. And there was great joy. This joy arose (1) From the fact that so many persons, before sick and afflicted, were restored to health. (2) From the conversion of individuals to Christ. (3) From the mutual joy of families and friends that their friends were converted. The tendency of a revival of religion is thus to produce great joy.

9. But there was a certain man called Simon. The fathers have written much respecting this man, and have given strange accounts of him; but nothing more is certainly known of him than is stated in this place. Rosenmüller and Kuinoel suppose him to have been a Simon mentioned by Josephus (Antiq., b. xx. ch. vii. § 2), who was born in Cyprus. He was a magician, and was employed by Felix to persuade Drusilla to forsake her husband Azizus, and to marry Felix. But it is not very probable that this was the same person. (See Note in Whiston's Josephus.) Simon Magus was probably a Jew or a Samaritan, who had addicted himself to the arts of magic, and who was much celebrated for it. He had studied philosophy in Alexandria in Egypt (Mosheim, i. p. 113, 114, Murdock's translation), and then lived in Samaria. After he was cut off from the hope of adding to his other powers the power of working miracles, the fathers say that he fell into many errors, and became the founder of the sect of the Simonians. They accused him of affirming that he came down as the Father in respect to the

8 And there was great joy in that city.

9 But there was a certain man called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, 'giving out that himself was some great one:

Samaritans, the Son in respect to the Jews, and the Holy Spirit in respect to the Gentiles. He did not acknowledge Christ to be the Son of God, but a rival, and pretended himself to be Christ. He rejected the law of Moses. Many other things are affirmed of him which rest on doubtful authority. He seems to have become an enemy to Christianity, though he was willing then to avail himself of some of its doctrines in order to advance his own interests. The account that he came to a tragical death in Rome; that he was honoured as a deity by the Roman senate; and that a statue was erected to his memory in the isle of Tiber, is now generally rejected. His end is not known. (See Calmet, art. "Simon Magus," and Mosheim, i. p. 114, note.) ¶ Beforetime. The practice of magic, or sorcery, was common at that time, and in all the ancient nations. ¶ Used sorcery. Greek, μαγιστηρίων. Exercising the arts of the Magi, or magicians; hence the name Simon Magus. See Notes on Mat. ii. 1. The ancient Magi had their rise in Persia, and were at first addicted to the study of philosophy, astronomy, medicine, &c. This name came afterward to signify those who made use of the knowledge of these arts for the purpose of imposing on mankind—astrologers, sooth-sayers, necromancers, fortune-tellers, &c. Such persons pretended to predict future events by the positions of the stars, and to cure diseases by incantations, &c. See Is. ii. 6. See also Da. i. 20; ii. 2. It was expressly forbidden the Jews to consult such persons on pain of death, Le. xix. 31; xx. 6. In these arts Simon had been eminently successful. ¶ And bewitched. This is an unhappy translation. The Greek means merely that he astonished or amazed the people, or confounded their judgment. The idea of bewitching them is not in the original. ¶ Giving out, &c. Saying; that is, boasting. It was in this way, partly, that he so confounded them. Jugglers generally impose on people just in proportion to the extravagance and folly of their pretensions. The same remark may be made of quack doctors, and of all persons who attempt to delude and impose on mankind.

10. The great power of God. Probably this means only that they believed that he was invested with the power of God, not that they supposed he was really the Great God.

13. Then Simon himself believed also. That is, he believed that Jesus had wrought miracles, and was raised from the dead, &c. All this he could believe in entire consistency with his own notions of the power of magic; and all that the connection requires us to suppose is that he believed this Jesus had the power of working miracles; and as he purposed to turn this to his own account, he was willing to profess himself to be his follower. It might have injured his popularity, moreover, if he had taken a stand in opposition when so many were professing to become Christians. Men often profess religion because, if they do not, they fear that they will lose their influence, and be left with the ungodly. That Simon was not a real Christian is apparent from the whole narrative, ver. 18, 21–23.

¶ And when he was baptized. He was admitted to a profession of religion in the same way as others. Philip did not pretend to know the heart; and Simon was admitted because he professed his belief. This is all the evidence that ministers of the gospel can now have, and it is no wonder that they, as well Philip, are often deceived. The reasons which influenced Simon to make a profession of religion seem to have been these: (1) An impression that Christianity was true. He seems to have been convinced of this by the miracles of Philip. (2) The fact that many others the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himself believed also; and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the <sup>1</sup>miracles and signs which were done.

14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of were becoming Christians; and he went in with the multitude. This is often the case in revivals of religion. (3) He was willing to make use of Christianity to advance his own power, influence, and popularity—a thing which multitudes of men of the same mind with Simon Magus have been willing since to do. ¶ And continued, &c. It was customary and natural for the disciples to remain with their teachers. See ch. ii. 42. ¶ And wondered. This is the same word that is translated bewitched in ver. 9, 11. It means that he was amazed that Philip could really perform so much greater miracles than he had even pretended to. Hypocrites will sometimes be greatly attentive to the external duties of religion, and will be greatly surprised at what is done by God for the salvation of sinners. ¶ Miracles and signs. Greek, signs and great powers, or great miracles. That is, so much greater than he pretended to be able to perform.

14. They sent. That is, the apostles deputed two of their number. This shows conclusively that there was no chief or ruler among them. They acted as being equal in authority. The reason why they sent Peter and John was probably that there would be a demand for more labour than Philip could render; a church was to be founded, and it was important that persons of experience and wisdom should be present to organize it, and to build it up. The harvest had occurred in Samaria, of which the Saviour spoke (Jn. iv. 35), and it was proper that they should enter into it. In times of revival there is often more to be done than can be done by the regular pastor of a people, and it is proper that he should be aided from abroad. ¶ Peter. This shows that Peter had no such authority and primacy as the Roman Catholics claim for him. He exercised no authority in sending others, but was himself sent. He was upon none of them; "only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

appointed by their united voice, instead of claiming the power himself of directing them. ¶ And John. Peter was ardent, bold, zealous, rash; John was mild, gentle, tender, persuasive. There was wisdom in uniting them in this work, as the talents of both were needed; and the excellencies in the character of the one would compensate for the defects of the other. It is observable that the apostles sent two together, as the Saviour had himself done. See Notes on Mar. vi. 7.

15. Were come down. To Samaria. Jerusalem was generally represented as up, or higher than the rest of the land, Mat. xx. 18; Jn. vii. 8. ¶ Prayed for them. They sought at the hand of God the extraordinary communications of the Holy Spirit. They did not even pretend to have the power of doing it without the aid of God. ¶ That they might receive the Holy Ghost. The main question here is, what was meant by the Holy Ghost? In ver. 20, it is called "the gift of God." The following remarks may make this plain. (1) It was not that gift of the Holy Ghost by which the soul is converted, for they had this when they believed, ver. 6. Everywhere the conversion of the sinner is traced to his influence. Comp. Jn. i. 13. (2) It was not the ordinary influences of the Spirit by which the soul is sanctified; for sanctification is a progressive work, and this was sudden. (3) It was something that was discernible by external effects; for Simon saw (ver. 18) that this was done by the laying on of hands. (4) The phrase "the gift of the Holy Ghost," and "the descent of the Holy Ghost," signified not merely his ordinary influences in converting sinners, but those extraordinary influences that attended the first preaching of the gospel—the power of speaking with new tongues (ch. ii.), the power of working miracles, &c., Ac. xix. 6. (5) This is further clear from the fact that Simon wished to purchase this power, evidently to keep up his influence among the people, and to retain his ascendancy as a juggler and sorcerer. But surely Simon would not wish to purchase the converting and sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit; it was the power of working miracles. These things made it clear that by the gift of the Holy Spirit here is meant the power of speaking with new tongues (comp. 1 Co. xiv.) and the power of working miracles. And it is further clear that this passage should not be adduced in favour of "the rite of confirmation" in the Christian church. For, besides the fact that there are now no apostles, the thing spoken of here is entirely different from the rite of confirmation. This was to confer the extraordinary power of working miracles; that is for a different purpose.

If it be asked why this power was conferred on the early Christians, it may be replied that it was to furnish striking proof of the truth of the Christian religion; to impress the people, and thus to win them to embrace the gospel. The early church was thus armed with the power of the Holy Spirit; and this extraordinary attestation of God to his message was one cause of the rapid propagation and permanent establishment of the gospel.

16. He was fallen. This expression is several times applied to the Holy Spirit, ch. x. 44; xi. 15. It does not differ materially from the common expression, "The Holy Ghost descended." It means that he came from heaven; and the expression to fall, applied to his influences, denotes the rapidity and suddenness of his coming. Comp. ch. xix. 2. ¶ In the name of the Lord Jesus. See Notes on ch. ii. 38. See also ch. x. 48; xix. 5, 6.

17. Then laid they their hands, &c. This was an act of prayer, expressing an invocation to God that he would impart the blessing to them. On how many they laid their hands is not said. It is evident that it was not on all, for they did not thus lay hands on Simon. Perhaps it was done on a few of the more prominent and leading persons, who were to be employed particularly in bearing witness to the truth of the gospel. It was customary to lay the hands on any person when a favour was to be conferred or a blessing imparted. See Notes on Mat. ix. 18.

18. Simon saw, &c. That is, he witnessed the extraordinary effects, the power of speaking in a miraculous manner, &c. See Notes on ver. 15. ¶ He offered them money. He had had a remarkable influence over the Samaritans, and he saw that the possession of this power would perpetuate and increase his influence. Men commonly employ the tricks of legerdemain for the purpose of making money, and it seems probable that such had been the design of Simon. He saw that if he could communicate to others this power; if he could confer on them the talent of speaking other languages, it might be turned to vast account, and he sought, therefore, to purchase it of the apostles. From this act of Simon we have derived our word simony, to denote the buying and selling of ecclesiastical preferment, or church offices, where religion is supported by the state. This act of Simon shows conclusively that he was influenced by improper motives in becoming connected with the church.

20. Thy money perish with thee. This is expressive of the horror and indignation of Peter at the base offer of Simon. It is not to be understood as an imprecation on Simon. The main idea is the apostle's contempt for the money, as if he regarded it as of no value. "Let your money go to destruction. We abhor your impious offer. We can freely see any amount of money destroyed before we will be tempted to sell the gift of the Holy Ghost." But there was here also an expression of his belief that Simon also would perish. It was a declaration that he was hastening to ruin, and as if this was certain, Peter says, let your money perish too. ¶ The gift of God. That which he has given, or conferred as a favour. The idea was absurd that that which God himself gave as a sovereign could be purchased. It was impious to think of attempting to buy with worthless gold that which was of so inestimable value. The gift of God here means the extraordinary influences of the Holy Ghost, ch. x. 48; xi. 17. How can we pay a price to God? All that we can give, the silver, and the gold, and the cattle on a thousand hills, belong to him already. We have nothing which we can present for his favours. And yet there are many who seek to purchase the favour of God. Some do it by alms and prayers; some by penance and fasting; some by attempting to make their own hearts better, and by self-righteousness; and some by penitence and tears. All these will not purchase his favour. Salvation, like every other blessing, will be his gift; and if ever received, we must be willing to accept it on his own terms; at his own time; in his own way. We are without merit; and if saved, it will be by the sovereign grace of God.

20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, "because thou hast thought that 'the gift of God may be purchased with money.'

21. Neither part. You have no portion of the grace of God; that is, you are destitute of it altogether. This word commonly denotes the part of an inheritance which falls to one when it is divided. ¶ Nor lot. This word means properly a portion which falls to one when an estate, or when spoil in war is divided into portions, according to the number of those who are to be partakers, and the part of each one is determined by lot. The two words denote emphatically that he was in no sense a partaker of the favour of God.

¶ In this matter. Greek, in this word; that is, thing. That which is referred to here is the religion of Christ. Simon was not a Christian. It is remarkable that Peter judged him so soon, and when he had seen but one act of his. But it was an act which satisfied him that he was a stranger to religion. One act may sometimes bring out the whole character; it may evince the governing motives; it may show traits of character utterly inconsistent with true religion; and then it is as certain a criterion as any long series of acts. ¶ Thy heart. Your affections, or governing motives; your principle of conduct. Comp. 2 Ki. x. 15. You love gold and popularity, and not the gospel for what it is. There is no evidence here that Peter saw this in a miraculous manner, or by any supernatural influence. It was apparent and plain that Simon was not influenced by the pure, disinterested motives of the gospel, but by the love of power and of the world. ¶ In the sight of God. That is, God sees or judges that your heart is not sincere and pure. No external profession is acceptable without the heart. Reader, is your heart right with God? Are your motives pure; and does God see there the exercise of holy, sincere, and benevolent affections toward him? God knows the motives; and with unerring certainty he will judge, and with unerring justice he will fix our doom according to the affections of the heart.

22. Repent, therefore. Here we may remark, (1) That Simon was at this time an unconverted sinner. (2) That the command was given to him as such. (3) That he was required to do the thing; not to wait or seek merely, but actually to repent. (4) That this was to be the first step in his conversion. He was not even directed to pray first, but his first indispensable work was to repent; that is, to exercise proper sorrow for this sin, and to abandon his plan or principle of action. And this shows, (1) That all sinners are to be exhorted to repent, as their first work. They are not to be told to wait, and read, and pray, in the expectation that repentance will be given them. With such helps as they can obtain, they are to do the thing. (2) Prayer will not be acceptable or heard unless the sinner comes repenting; that is, unless he regrets his sin, and desires to forsake it. Then, and then only, will he be heard. When he comes loving his sins, and resolving still to practise them, God will not hear him. When he comes desirous of forsaking them, grieved that he is guilty, and feeling his need of help, God will haps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee:

23 For I perceive that thou art hear his prayer. See Is. i. 15; Mi. iii. 4; Pr. i. 28; Ps. lxvi. 18. ¶ And pray God. Having a desire to forsake the sin, and to be pardoned, then pray to God to forgive. It would be absurd to ask forgiveness until a man felt his need of it. This shows that a sinner ought to pray, and how he ought to do it. It should be with a desire and purpose to forsake sin, and in that state of mind God will hear the prayer. Comp. Da. iv. 27. ¶ If perhaps. There was no certainty that God would forgive him; nor is there any evidence either that Simon prayed, or that he was forgiven. This direction of Peter presents another important principle in regard to the conduct of sinners. They are to be directed to repent; not because they have the promise of forgiveness, and not because they hope to be forgiven, but because sin is a great evil, and because it is right and proper that they should repent, whether they are forgiven or not. That is to be left to the sovereign mercy of God. They are to repent of sin, and then they are to feel, not that they have any claim on God, but that they are dependent on him, and must be saved or lost at his will. They are not to suppose that their tears will purchase forgiveness, but that they lie at the footstool of mercy, and that there is hope—not certainty—that God will forgive. The language of the humbled sinner is,

"Perhaps he will admit my plea,
Perhaps will hear my prayer;
But if I perish I will pray,
And perish only there."

"I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away, I know
I shall for ever die."

¶ The thought, &c. Your purpose, or wish. Thoughts may be, therefore, evil, and need forgiveness. It is not open sin only that needs to be pardoned; it is the secret purpose of the soul.

23. For I perceive. That is, by the act which he had done. His offer had shown a state of mind that was wholly inconsistent with true religion. One single sin may as certainly show that there is no true piety as many acts of iniquity. It may be so decided, so malignant, so utterly inconsistent with just views as at once to determine what in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond <sup>a</sup> of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, <sup>b</sup>Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

the character is. The sin of Simon was of this character. Peter here does not appear to have claimed the power of judging the heart; but he judged, as all other men would, by the act. ¶ In the gall. This word denotes properly bile, or that bitter, yellowish-green fluid that is secreted in the liver. Hence it means anything very bitter; and also any bad passion of the mind, as anger, malice, &c. We speak of bitterness of mind, &c. ¶ Of bitterness. This is a Hebraism; the usual mode of expressing the superlative, and means excessive bitterness. The phrase is used respecting idolatry (De. xxix. 18), "Lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood." A similar expression occurs in He. xii. 15, "Lest any root of bitterness springing up, trouble you." Sin is thus represented as a bitter or poisonous thing; a thing not only unpleasant in its consequences, but ruinous in its character, as a poisonous plant would be in the midst of other plants, Je. ii. 19, "It is an evil and bitter thing that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God;" Je. iv. 18; Ro. iii. 14, "Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness;" Ep. iv. 31. The meaning here is, that the heart of Simon was full of dreadful, malignant sin. ¶ Bond of iniquity. Or, that thou art bound by iniquity. That is, that it has the rule over you, and binds you as a captive. Sin is often thus represented as bondage and captivity, Ps. cxvi. 16; Pr. v. 22, "He shall be holden with the cords of his sins;" Ro. vii. 23, 24. These expressions prove conclusively that Simon was a stranger to religion.

24. Pray ye, &c. Here remark, (1) That Simon was directed to pray for himself (ver. 22), but he had no disposition to do it, but was willing to ask others to do it for him. Sinners will often ask others to pray for them, when they are too proud, or too much in love with sin, to pray for themselves. (2) The main thing that Peter wished to impress on him was a sense of his sin. Simon did not regard this, but looked

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26 And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, only to the punishment. He was terrified and alarmed; he sought to avoid future punishment, but he had no alarm about his sins. So it is often with sinners. So it was with Pharaoh (Ex. viii. 28, 32), and with Jeroboam (1 Ki. xiii. 6). Sinners often quiet their own consciences by asking ministers and Christian friends to pray for them, while they still purpose to persevere in iniquity. If men expect to be saved, they must pray for themselves; and pray not chiefly to be freed from punishment, but from the sin which deserves hell. This is all that we hear of Simon in the New Testament; and the probability is, that, like many other sinners, he did not pray for himself, but continued to live in the gall of bitterness, and died in the bond of iniquity. The testimony of antiquity is decided on that point. See Notes on ver. 9.

25. In many villages, &c. They went at first directly to the city of Samaria. On their return to Jerusalem they travelled more at leisure, and preached in the villages also—a good example for the ministers of the gospel, and for all Christians, when travelling from place to place. The reason why they returned to Jerusalem, and made that their permanent abode, might have been, that it was important to bear witness to the resurrection of Christ in the very city where he had been crucified, and where his resurrection had occurred. If the doctrine was established there, it would be more easy to establish it elsewhere.

26. And the angel of the Lord. The word angel is used in the Scriptures in a great variety of significations. See Notes on Mat. i. 20. Here it has been supposed by some to mean literally a celestial messenger sent from God; others have supposed that it means a dream; others a vision, &c. The word properly means a messenger; and all that it can be shown to signify here is, that the Lord sent a message to Philip of this kind. It is most probable, I think, that the passage means that God communicated the message by his Spirit; for in ver. 29, 39, it is expressly said that the Spirit spake to Philip, &c. Thus, in Ac. xvi. 7, the Spirit is said to have forbidden Paul to preach in Bithynia; and in ver. 9, the message on the subject is said to have been conveyed in a vision. There is no absurdity, however, in supposing that an angel literally was employed to communicate this message to Philip. See He. i. 14; Ge. xix. 1; xxii. 11; Ju. vi. 12. ¶ Spake unto Philip. Comp. Mat. ii. 13. ¶ Arise. See Notes on Lu. xv. 18. ¶ And go, &c. Philip had been employed in Samaria. As God now intended to send the gospel to another place, he gave a special direction to him to go and convey it. It is evident that God designed the conversion of this eunuch, and the direction to Philip shows how he accomplishes his designs. It is not by miracle, but by the use of means. It is not by direct power without truth, but it is by a message fitted to the end. The salvation of a single sinner is an object worthy the attention of God. When such a sinner is converted, it is because God forms a plan or purpose to do it. When it is done, he inclines his servants to labour; he directs their labours; he leads his ministers; and he prepares the way (ver. 28) for the reception of the truth. ¶ Toward the south. That is, south of Samaria, where Philip was then labouring. ¶ Unto Gaza. Gaza, or AZZAH (Ge. x. 19), was a city of the Philistines, given by Joshua to Judah (Jos. xv. 47; 1 Sa. vi. 17). It was one of the five principal cities of the Philistines. It was formerly a large place; was situated on an eminence, and commanded a beautiful prospect. It was in this place that Samson took away the gates of the city, and bore them off, Ju. xvi. 2, 3. It was near Askelon, about 60 miles south-west from Jerusalem. ¶ Which is desert. This may refer either to the way or to the place. The natural construction is the latter. In explanation of this, it is to be observed that there were two towns of that name, Old and New Gaza. The prophet Zephaniah (ii. 4) said that Gaza should be forsaken, that is, destroyed. "This was partly accomplished by Alexander the Great (Jos. Antiq., b. xi. ch. viii. § 3, 4; b. xiii. ch. xiii. § 3). Another town was afterward built of the same name, but at some distance from the former, and Old Gaza was abandoned to desolation. Strabo mentions 'Gaza the desert,' and Diodorus Siculus speaks of 'Old Gaza'" (Robinson's Calmet). Some have supposed, however, that Luke refers here to the road leading to Gaza, as being desolate and uninhabited. Dr. Robinson (Biblical Res., ii. 640) remarks: "There were several ways leading from Jerusalem to Gaza. The most frequented at the present day, although the longest, is the way by Ramleh. Anciently there appear to have been two more direct roads. Both these roads exist at the present day, and the one actually passes through the desert, that is, through a tract of country without villages, inhabited only by nomadic tribes." "In this place, in 1823, the American missionaries, Messrs. Fisk and King, found Gaza, a town built of stone, making a very mean appearance, and containing about five thousand inhabitants" (Hall on the Acts).

27 And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under d Zep. 3.10. e Is. 56.3-5.

27. A man of Ethiopia. Gaza was near the confines between Palestine and Egypt. It was in the direct road from Jerusalem to Egypt. Ethiopia was one of the great kingdoms of Africa, part of which is now called Abyssinia. It is frequently mentioned in Scripture under the name of Cush. But Cush comprehended a much larger region, including the southern part of Arabia, and even sometimes the countries adjacent to the Tigris and Euphrates. Ethiopia proper lay south of Egypt, on the Nile, and was bounded north by Egypt, that is, by the cataracts near Syene; east by the Red Sea, and perhaps part by the Indian Ocean; south by unknown regions in the interior of Africa; and west by Libya and the deserts. It comprehended the modern kingdoms of Nubia or Sennaar, and Abyssinia. The chief city in it was the ancient Meroë, situated on the island or tract of the same name, between the Nile and Ashtaboras, not far from the modern Shendi (Robinson's Calmet). ¶ An eunuch, &c. xix. 12. Eunuchs were commonly employed in attendance on the females of the harem; but the word is often used to denote any confidential officer, or counsellor of state. It is evidently so used here. ¶ Of great authority. Of high rank; an officer of the court. It is clear from what follows that this man was a Jew. But it is known that Jews were often raised to posts of high honour and distinction in foreign courts, as in the case of Joseph in Egypt, and of Daniel in Babylon. ¶ Under Candace, &c. Candace is said to have been the common name of the queens of Ethiopia, as Pharaoh was of the sovereigns of Egypt. This is expressly stated by Pliny (Nat. History, vii. 29). His words are: "The edifices of the city were few; a woman reigned there of the name of CANDACE, which name had been transmitted to these queens for many years." Strabo mentions also a queen of Ethiopia of the name of Candace. Speaking of an insurrection against the Romans, he says, "Among these were the officers of queen CANDACE, who in our days reigned over the Ethiopians." As this could not have been the Candace mentioned here, it is plain that the name was common to these queens—a sort of royal title. She was probably queen of Meroë, an important part of Ethiopia (Bruce's Travels, vol. ii. p. 431; Clarke). ¶ Who had the charge, &c. The treasurer was an officer of high trust and responsibility. ¶ And had come, &c. This proves that he was a Jew, or at least a Jewish proselyte. It was customary for the Jews in foreign lands, as far as practicable, to attend the great feasts at Jerusalem. He had gone up to attend the Passover, &c. See Notes on ch. ii. 5.

28. And sitting in his chariot. His carriage; his vehicle. The form of the carriage is not known. In some instances the carriages of the ancients were placed on wheels; in others were borne on poles, in the form of a litter or palanquin, by men, mules, or horses. See Calmet, article "Chariot." ¶ Reading Esaias, &c. Isaiah. Reading doubtless the translation of Isaiah called the Septuagint. This translation was made in Egypt for the special use of the Jews in Alexandria and throughout Egypt, and was that which was commonly used. Why he was reading the Scriptures, and especially this prophet, is not certainly known. It is morally certain, however, that he was in Judea at the time of the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus; that he had heard much of him; that this would be a subject of discussion; and it was natural for him, in returning, to look at the prophecies respecting the Messiah, either to meditate on them as a suitable subject of inquiry and thought, or to examine the claims of Jesus of Nazareth to this office. The prophecy in Is. liii. was so striking, and coincided so clearly with the character of Jesus, that it was natural for a candid mind to examine whether he might not be the person intended by the prophet. On this narrative we may remark, (1) It is a proper and profitable employment, on returning from worship, to examine the sacred Scriptures. (2) It is well to be in the habit of reading the Scriptures when we are on a journey. It may serve to keep the heart from worldly objects, and secure the affections for God. (3) It is well at all times to read the Bible. It is one of the means of grace. And it is when we are searching his will that we obtain light and comfort. The sinner should examine with a candid mind the sacred volume. It may be the means of conducting him in the true path of salvation. (4) God often gives us light in regard to the meaning of the Bible in unexpected modes. How little did this eunuch expect to be enlightened in the manner in which he actually was. Yet God, who intended to instruct and save him, sent the living teacher, and opened to him the Scriptures, and led him to the Saviour.

29. The Spirit. See Notes on ver. 26. The Holy Spirit is here evidently intended. The thought in Philip's mind is here traced to his suggestion. All good thoughts and designs have the same origin. ¶ Join thyself. Join him in his chariot. Go and sit with him.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, "Understandest thou what thou readest?"

31 And he said, "How can I, ex-

32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, "He was

30. And Philip ran, &c. Indicating his haste and his desire to obey the suggestions of the Spirit. A thousand difficulties might have been started in the mind of Philip if he had reflected a little. The eunuch was a stranger; he had the appearance of a man of rank; he was engaged in reading; he might be indisposed to be interrupted or to converse, &c. But Philip obeyed without any hesitation the monitions of the Spirit, and ran to him. It is well to follow the first suggestions of the Spirit; to yield to the clear indications of duty, and to perform it at once. Especially in a deed of benevolence, and in conversing with others on the subject of religion, our first thoughts are commonly safest and best. If we do not follow them, the calculations of avarice, or fear, or of worldly prudence are very apt to come in. We become alarmed; we are afraid of the rich and the great; we suppose that our conversation and admonitions will be unacceptable. We may learn from this case, (1) To do our duty at once, without hesitation or debate. (2) We shall often be disappointed in regard to subjects of this kind. We shall find candid, humble, Christian conversation far more acceptable to strangers, to the rich, and to the great, than we commonly suppose. If, as in this case, they are alone; if we approach them kindly; if we do not rudely and harshly address them, we shall find most men willing to talk on the subject of religion. I have conversed with some hundreds of persons on the subject of religion, and do not now recollect but two instances in which I was rudely treated, and in which it was not easy to gain a respectful and kind attention to Christian conversation. ¶ And heard him read. He was reading loud—sometimes the best way of impressing truth on the mind in our private reading the Scriptures. ¶ And said, &c. This question, there might have been reason to fear, would not be kindly received. But the eunuch's mind was in such a state that he took no offence from such an inquiry, though made by a footman and a stranger. He doubtless recognized him as a brother Jew. It is an important question to ask ourselves when we read the sacred Scriptures.

31. And he said, &c. This was a general acknowledgment of his need of direction. It evinced a humble state of mind. It was an acknowledgment, also, originating probably from this particular passage which he was reading. He did not understand how it could be applied to the Messiah; how the description of his humiliation and condemnation (ver. 33) could be reconciled to the prevalent ideas of his being a prince and a conqueror. The same sentiment is expressed by Paul in Ro. x. 14. The circumstance, the state of mind in the eunuch, and the result, strongly remind one of the declaration in Ps. xxv. 9, "The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way." ¶ And he desired, &c. He was willing to receive instruction even from a stranger. The rich and the great may often receive valuable instruction from a stranger, and from a poor, unknown man.

32. The place, &c. Is. liii. 7, 8. ¶ He was led, &c. This quotation is taken literally from the Septuagint. It varies very little from the Hebrew. It has been almost universally understood that this place refers to the Messiah; and Philip expressly applies it to him. The word "was led" (וַיְהִי נָסֹן) implies that he was conducted by others; that he was led as a sheep is led to be killed. The general idea is that of meekness and submission when he was led to be put to death; a description that applies in a very striking manner to the Lord Jesus. ¶ To the slaughter. To be killed. The characteristic here recorded is more remarkable in sheep than in any other animals. ¶ And like a lamb dumb, &c. Still, patient, unresisting. ¶ So he opened not his mouth. He did not complain or murmur; he offered no resistance, but yielded patiently to what was done by others. Comp. Notes on Isa. liii.

led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33. In his humiliation. This varies from the Hebrew, but is copied exactly from the Septuagint, showing that he was reading the Septuagint. The Hebrew is, "He was taken from prison and from judgment." The word rendered "prison" denotes any kind of detention, or even oppression. It does not mean, as with us, to be confined in a prison or jail, but may mean custody, and be applied to the detention or custody of the Saviour when his hands were bound, and he was led to be tried. See Notes on Mat. xvii. 2. It is not known why the LXX. thus translated the expression "he was taken from prison," &c., by "in his humiliation," &c. The word "from prison" may mean, as has been remarked, however, from oppression, and this does not differ materially from humiliation; and in this sense the LXX. understood it. The meaning of the expression in the Septuagint and the Acts is clear. It denotes that in his state of oppression and calamity; when he was destitute of protectors and friends; when at the lowest state of humiliation, and therefore most the object of pity, in addition to that, justice was denied him; his judgment—a just sentence—was taken away, or withheld, and he was delivered to be put to death. His deep humiliation and friendless state was followed by an unjust and cruel condemnation, when no one would stand forth to plead his cause. Every circumstance thus goes to deepen the view of his sufferings. ¶ His judgment. Justice, a just sentence, was denied him, and he was cruelly condemned. ¶ And who shall declare his generation? The word generation used here properly denotes posteriority; then an age of mankind, comprehending about thirty years, as we speak of this and the next generation; then it denotes the men of a particular age or time. Very various interpretations have been given of this expression. Lowth translates it, "His manner of life who would declare?" referring, as he supposes, to the fact that when a prisoner was condemned and led to execution, it was customary for a proclamation to be made by a crier in these words, "Whoever knows anything ment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

about his innocence, let him come and declare it." This passage is taken from the Gemara of Babylon (Kennicott, as quoted by Lowth). The same Gemara of Babylon on this passage adds, "that before the death of Jesus, this proclamation was made forty days; but no defence could be found"—a manifest falsehood, and a story strikingly illustrative of the character of the Jewish writings. The Gemara was written some time after Christ, perhaps not far from the year 180 (Lardner), and is a collection of commentaries on the traditional laws of the Jews. That this custom existed is very probable; but it is certain that no such thing was done on the trial of the Saviour. The Chaldee paraphrase translates the passage in Isaiah, "He shall collect our captivity from infirmities and vengeance; and who can declare what wonderful things shall be done for us in his days?" Others have referred this question to his Deity, or his divine generation; intimating that no one could explain the mystery of his eternal generation. But the word in the Scriptures has no such signification; and such a sense would not suit the connection. (See Calvin in loco.) Others have referred it to his own spiritual posterity, his disciples, his family; "the number of his friends and followers who could enumerate?" (Calvin, Beza, &c.) Another sense which the word has is to denote the men of any particular age or time (Mat. xi. 16; xxiii. 36; Lu. xvi. 8, &c.); and it has been supposed that the question here means, "Who can describe the character and wickedness of the generation when he shall live—the enormous crime of that age, in putting him to death?" On this passage, see Notes on Is. liii. 8. Perhaps, after all that has been written on this passage, the simple idea is, "Who shall stand up for him, declaring who he is? Who will appear for him? Who will vindicate him?" meaning that all would forsake him, and that there would be none to declare really who he was. ¶ For his life, &c. The Hebrew is, "For he was cut off from the land of the living;" that is he was put to death. The expression used in the Acts was taken from the Septuagint, and means substantially the same as the Hebrew.

34. Answered Philip. That is, addressed Philip. The Hebrews often use the word answer as synonymous with addressing one, whether he had spoken or not. ¶ Of himself, &c. This was a natural inquiry, for there was nothing in the text itself that would determine to whom the reference was. The ancient Jews expressly applied the passage to the Messiah. Thus the Targum of Jonathan on Is. iii. 13, "Behold, my servant shall deal prudently," &c., renders it, "Behold, my servant, the Messiah, shall be prospered," &c. But we should remember that the eunuch was probably not deeply versed in the Scriptures. We should remember, further, that he had just been at Jerusalem, and that the public mind was agitated about the proceedings of the Sanhedrim in putting Jesus of Nazareth, who claimed to be the Messiah, to death. It is by no means improbable that this passage had been urged as a proof that he was the Messiah; and that the Jews, to evade the force of it, had maintained that it referred to Isaiah or Jeremiah—as they have since done. Yet the subject was so important and so difficult that it had occupied the attention of the traveller during his journey; and his question shows that he had been deeply pondering the inquiry whether it could refer to Isaiah himself or any of the prophets, or whether it must have reference to the Messiah. In this state of suspense and agitation, when his mind was just fitted to receive instruction, God sent a messenger to guide him. He often thus prepares, by his providence, or by a train of affecting and solemn events, the minds of men for a reception of the truth; and then he sends his messengers to guide the thoughtful and the anxious in the way of peace and salvation.

35. Opened his mouth. See Mat. v. 2.

¶ At the same scripture. Taking this as a text to be illustrated. ¶ Preached unto him Jesus. Showed him that Jesus of Nazareth exactly answered to the description of the prophet, and that therefore he referred to the Messiah, and that the Messiah was Jesus of Nazareth. How far Philip detailed the circumstances of the life and death of Christ is unknown. What follows shows also that he stated the design of baptism, and the duty of being baptized.

36. As they went on their way. In their journey. ¶ A certain water. The expression used here does not determine whether this was a river, a brook, or a standing pool. And there are no circumstances to determine that. It is well known, however, that there is no large river or very considerable stream in this vicinity. All that is intimated is that there was water enough to perform the rite of baptism, whether that was by sprinkling, pouring, or immersion. It must be admitted, I think, that there might have been water enough for either. Grotius says they came "to a fountain which was in the neighbourhood of Bethsora, in the tribe of Juda, at the twentieth milestone from Elia(Jerusalem) to Hebron." This is, however, a tradition taken from Eusebius. The place is still shown (Pococke). ¶ What doth hinder me, &c. This shows that he had been instructed by Philip in the nature and design of baptism. It evinces also a purpose at once to give himself to Christ, to profess his name, and to be dedicated to his service. ¶ To be baptized. On the meaning of the word baptize, see Notes on Mat. iii. 6.

37. And Philip said, &c. This was stated by Philip as the proper qualification for making a profession of religion. The terms are, (1) Faith; that is, a reception of Jesus as a Saviour; yielding the mind to the proper influences of the truths of redemption. See Notes on Mar. xvi. 16. (2) There is required not merely the assent of the understanding, but a surrender of the heart, the will, the said, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God."

affections, to the truth of the gospel. As these were the proper qualifications then, so they are now. Nothing less is required; and nothing but this can constitute a proper qualification for the Lord's supper. ¶ I believe, &c. This profession is more than a professed belief that Jesus was the Messiah. The name Christ implies that. "I believe that Jesus the Messiah is the Son of God." He professed his belief that he was the Son of God—showing either that he had before supposed that the Messiah would be the Son of God, or that Philip had instructed him on that point. It was natural for Philip, in discoursing on the humiliation and poverty of Jesus, to add also that he sustained a higher rank of being than a man, and was the Son of God. What precise ideas the eunuch attached to this expression cannot be now determined. This verse is wanting in a very large number of manuscripts (Mill), and has been rejected by many of the ablest critics. It is also omitted in the Syriac and Ethiopic versions. It is not easy to conceive why it has been omitted in almost all the Greek MSS. unless it is spurious. If it was not in the original copy of the Acts, it was probably inserted by some early transcriber, and was deemed so important to the connection, to show that the eunuch was not admitted hastily to baptism, that it was afterward retained. It contains, however, an important truth, elsewhere abundantly taught in the Scriptures, that faith is necessary to a proper profession of religion.

38. And they went down both into the water. This passage has been made the subject of much discussion on the subject of baptism. It has been adduced in proof of the necessity of immersion. It is not proposed to enter into that subject here. It may be remarked here that the preposition to, translated "into," does not of necessity mean that they went into the water. Its meaning would be as well expressed by "to" or "unto," or as we should say, "they went to the water," without meaning to determine whether they went into it or not. Out of twenty-six significations which Schleusner has to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

given the word, this is one, and one which frequently occurs: Jn. xi. 38, "Jesus, therefore, groaning in himself, cometh to (at) the grave"—assuredly not into the grave; Lu. xi. 49, "I send them prophets," Greek, "I send to (at) them prophets"—to them, not into them, comp. Ro. ii. 4, 1 Co. xiv. 36; Mat. xii. 41, "They repented at (at) the preaching of Jonas"—not into his preaching; Jn. iv. 5, "Then cometh he to (at) a city of Samaria," that is, near to it, for the context shows that he had not yet entered into it, comp. ver. 6, 8; Jn. xxi. 4, "Jesus stood on (at) the shore," that is, not in, but near the shore. These passages show, (1) That the word does not necessarily mean that they entered into the water. But, (2) If it did, it does not necessarily follow that the eunuch was immersed. There might be various ways of baptizing, even after they were in the water, besides immersing. Sprinkling or pouring might be performed there as well as elsewhere. The most solemn act of baptism that I ever saw performed was, when I was a boy, in the river on the banks of which I was born, where the minister and the candidate went both of them into the river, and, when near to the middle of the river, the candidate kneeled down in the water, and the minister with a bowl poured water on his head. Yet if the fact had been stated, in reference to this case, that "they went both down into the water, and came up out of the water," and it had been hence inferred that the man was immersed, it would have been wholly a false inference. No such immersion occurred, and there is, from the narrative here, no more evidence that it occurred in the case of the eunuch. (3) It is incumbent on those who maintain that immersion is the only valid mode of baptism, to prove that this passage cannot possibly mean anything else, and that there was no other mode practised by the apostles. (4) It would be still incumbent to show that if this were the common and even the only mode then, in a warm climate, that it is indispensable that this mode should be practised everywhere else. No such positive command can be adduced. And it follows, therefore, that it cannot be proved that immersion is the only lawful mode of baptism. See Notes on Mat. iii. 6.

39. Out of the water (ix). This preposition stands opposed to in, “into;” and as that may mean to, so this may mean from; if that means into, this means here out of. ¶ The Spirit of the Lord. See ver. 29. The Spirit had suggested to Philip to go to meet the eunuch, and the same Spirit, now that he had fulfilled the design of his going there, directed his departure. ¶ Caught away. This phrase has been usually understood of a forcible or miraculous removal of Philip to some other place. Some have even supposed that he was borne through the air by an angel (see even Doddridge). To such foolish interpretations have many expositors been led. The meaning is, clearly, that the Spirit, who had directed Philip to go near the eunuch, now removed him in a similar manner. That this is the meaning is clear, (1) Because it accounts for all that occurred. It is not wise to suppose the existence of a miracle except where the effect cannot otherwise be accounted for, and except where there is a plain statement that there was a miracle. (2) The word “caught away” (ηγαπε) does not imply that there was a miracle. The word properly means to seize and bear away anything violently, without the consent of the owner, as robbers and plunderers do. Then it signifies to remove anything in a forcible manner; to make use of strength or power to remove it, Ac. xxiii. 10; Mat. xiii. 19; Jn. x. 28; 2 Co. xii. 2, 4, &c. In no case does it ever denote that a miracle is performed. And all that can be signified here is, that the Spirit strongly admonished Philip to go to some other place; that he so forcibly or vividly suggested the duty to his mind as to tear him away, as it were, from the society of the eunuch. He had been deeply interested in the case. He would have found pleasure in continuing the journey with him. But the strong convictions of duty urged by the Holy Spirit impelled him, as it were, to break off this new and interesting acquaintanceship, and to go to some other place. The purpose for which he was sent, to instruct and baptize the eunuch, was accomplished, and now he was called to

some other field of labour. A similar instance of interpretation has been considered in the Notes on Mat. iv. 5. ¶ And he went on his way rejoicing. His mind was enlightened on a perplexing passage of Scripture. He was satisfied respecting the Messiah. He was baptized; and he experienced that which all feel who embrace the Saviour and are baptized—joy. It was joy resulting from the fact that he was reconciled to God; and a joy the natural effect of having done his duty promptly in making a profession of religion. If we wish happiness—if we would avoid clouds and gloom, we should do our duty at once. If we delay till to-morrow what we ought to do to-day, we may expect to be troubled with melancholy thoughts. If we find peace, it will be in doing promptly just that which God requires at our hands. This is the last that we hear of this man. Some have supposed that he carried the gospel to Ethiopia, and preached it there. But there is strong evidence to believe that the gospel was not preached there successfully until about the year 330, when it was introduced by Frumentius, sent to Abyssinia for that purpose by Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria. From this narrative we may learn, (1) That God often prepares the mind to receive the truth. (2) That this takes place sometimes with the great and the noble, as well as the poor and obscure. (3) That we should study the Scriptures. This is the way in which God usually directs the mind in the truths of religion. (4) That they who read the Bible with candour and care may expect that God will, in some mode, guide them into the truth. It will often be in a way which they least expect; but they need not be afraid of being left to darkness or error. (5) That we should be ready at all times to speak to sinners. God often prepares their minds, as he did that of the eunuch, to receive the truth. (6) That we should not be afraid of the great, the rich, or of strangers. God often prepares their minds to receive the truth; and we may find a man willing to hear of the Saviour where we least expected it. (7) That we should do our duty in this respect, as Philip did, promptly. We should not delay or hesitate, but should at once do that which we believe to be in accordance with the will of God. See Ps. cxix. 60.

Azotus: and passing through, he preached in all the cities till he came to Cesarea.

40. But Philip was found. That is, he came to Azotus, or he was not heard of until he reached Azotus. The word is often used in this sense. See 1 Ch. xxix. 17, margin; 2 Ch. xxix. 29, margin; Ge. ii. 20; see also Lu. xvii. 18; Ro. vii. 10. In all these places the word is used in the sense of to be, or to be present. It does not mean here that there was any miracle in the case, but that Philip, after leaving the eunuch, came to or was in Azotus. ¶ Azotus. This is the Greek name of the city which by the Hebrews was called Ash-dod. It was one of the cities which were not taken by Joshua, and which remained in the possession of the Philistines. It was to this place that the ark of God was sent when it was taken by the Philistines from the Israelites; and here Dagon was cast down before it, 1 Sa. v. 2, 3. Uzziah, king of Judah, broke down its wall, and built cities or watch-towers around it, 2 Ch. xxvi. 6. It was a place of great strength and consequence. It was distant about thirty miles from Gaza. It was situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, and had a seaport, which has now entirely disappeared. The sea is now some two miles distant, and the intervening space is a desert of moving sand, which has reached the outskirts of the town (Land and the Book, Dr. Thomson, vol. ii. p. 320). Prof. Hackett (Illustrations of Scripture, p. 142, 143) says of this place: "A little village called Esdud perpetuates the ancient name. Ashdod was one of the chief cities of the Philistines, but is now utterly forsaken. The prophet's sentence has been executed upon it to the letter: 'I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod' (Am. i. 8). The only marks of antiquity which I could discover were a high mound, where the old city stood, covered now with fragments of pottery; two or three cellars or cisterns that seemed to have been recently laid open; two marble columns, one prostrate in the court of a neighbouring khan, and the other wrought into a drinking-trough; several broken pieces of columns or tablets, mostly built into a sakieh, or watering machine; and a few traces of masonry near the Jaffa road, which may have belonged to the city walls. These last are so concealed as to be found only with special pains." ¶ He preached in all the cities. Joppa, Lydda, Askelon, Arimathea, &c., lying along the coast of the Mediterranean. ¶ Cesarea. This city was formerly called Strato's Tower. It is situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, at the mouth of a small river, and has a fine harbour. It is thirty-six miles south of Acre, and about sixty-two north-west of Jerusalem, and about the same distance north-east of Azotus. The city is supposed by some to be the Hazor mentioned in Jos. xi. 1. It was rebuilt by Herod the Great, and named Cesarea in honour of Augustus Cæsar. The city was dedicated to him, and was called Sebaste, the Greek word for Augustus. It was adorned with most splendid houses; and the Temple of Cæsar was erected by Herod over against the mouth of the haven, in which was placed the statue of the Roman emperor. It became the seat of the Roman governor while Judea was a Roman province, Ac. xxiii. 33; xxv. 6, 13. Philip afterward resided at this place. See Ac. xxi. 8, 9. Cesarea at present is inhabited only by jackals and beasts of prey. "Perhaps," says Dr. Clarke, "there has not been in the history of the world an example of any city that in so short a space of time rose to such an extraordinary height of splendour as did this of Cesarea, or that exhibits a more awful contrast to its former magnificence by the present desolate appearance of its ruins. Not a single inhabitant remains. Of its gorgeous palaces and temples, enriched with the choicest works of art, scarcely a trace can be discerned. Within the space of ten years after laying the foundation, from an obscure fortress, it became the most flourishing and celebrated city of all Syria." Now it is in utter desolation. See Robinson's Calmet, art. "Cæsarea."

CHAPTER IX.
This chapter commences a very important part of the Acts of the Apostles —the conversion and labours of Saul of

against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high-priest,

Tarsus. The remainder of the book is chiefly occupied with an account of his labours and trials in the establishment of churches, and in spreading the gospel through the Gentile world. As the fact that the gospel was to be thus preached to the Gentiles was a very important fact, and as the toils of the apostle Paul and his fellow-labourers for this purpose were of an exceedingly interesting character, it was desirable to preserve an authentic record of those labours; and that record we have in the remainder of this book.

1. And Saul. See Notes on ch. vii. 58; viii. 3. He had been engaged before in persecuting the Christians, but he now sought opportunity to gratify his insatiable desire on a larger scale.

¶ Yet breathing out. Not satisfied with what he had done, ch. viii. 3. The word breathing out is expressive often of any deep, agitating emotion, as we then breathe rapidly and violently. It is thus expressive of violent anger. The emotion is absorbing, agitating, exhausting, and demands a more rapid circulation of blood to supply the exhausted vitality; and this demands an increased supply of oxygen, or vital air, which leads to the increased action of the lungs. The word is often used in this sense in the classics (Schleusner). It is a favourite expression with Homer. Euripides has the same expression: “Breathing out fire and slaughter.” So Theocritus: “They came unto the assembly breathing mutual slaughter” (Idyll. xxii. 82). ¶ Threatening. Denunciation; threatening them with every breath—the action of a man violently enraged, and who was bent on vengeance. It denotes also intense activity and energy in persecution. ¶ Slaughter. Murder. Intensely desiring to put to death as many Christians as possible. He rejoiced in their death, and joined in condemning them, Ac. xxvi. 10, 11. From this latter place it seems that he had been concerned in putting many of them to death. ¶ The disciples of the Lord. Against Christians. ¶ Went unto the high-priest. See Notes on Mat. ii. 4. The letters were written and signed in the name and by the authority of the Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation. The high-priest did it as president of that council. See ver. 14,

2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that, and ch. xxii. 5. The high-priest at that time was Theophilus, son of Ananus, who had been appointed at the feast of Pentecost, A.D. 37, by Vitellius, the Roman governor. His brother Jonathan had been removed from that office the same year (Kuinoel).

2. And desired of him. This shows the intensity of his wish to persecute the Christians, that he was willing to ask for such an employment. ¶ Letters. Epistles, implying a commission to bring them to Jerusalem for trial and punishment. From this it seems that the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem claimed jurisdiction over all synagogues everywhere.

¶ To Damascus. This was a celebrated city of Syria, and long the capital of a kingdom of that name. It is situated in a delightful region about one hundred and twenty miles north-east of Jerusalem, and about one hundred and ninety miles south-east of Antioch. It is in the midst of an extensive plain, abounding with cypress and palm-trees, and extremely fertile. It is watered by the river Barrady, anciently called Abana, 2 Ki. v. 12. About five miles from the city is a place called the “meeting of the waters,” where the Barrady is joined by another river, and thence is divided by art into several streams that flow through the plain. These streams, six or seven in number, are conveyed to water the orchards, farms, &c., and give to the whole scene a very picturesque appearance. The city, situated in a delightful climate, in a fertile country, is perhaps among the most pleasant in the world. It is called by the Orientals themselves the paradise on earth. It is mentioned often in the Old Testament. It was a city in the time of Abraham, Ge. xv. 2. By whom it was founded is unknown. It was taken and garrisoned by David A.M. 2992, 2 Sa. viii. 6; 1 Ch. xviii. 6. It is subsequently mentioned as sustaining very important parts in the conflicts of the Jews with Syria, 2 Ki. xiv. 25; xvi. 5; Is. ix. 11. It was taken by the Romans A.M. 3939, or about sixty years before Christ, in whose possession it was when Saul went there. It was conquered by the Saracens A.D. 713. About the year 1250 it was taken by the Christians in the Crusades, and was captured A.D. 1517 by Selim, and

The Arabians call this city Damasc, or Demesch, or Schams. It is one of the most commercial cities in the Ottoman empire, and is distinguished also for manufactures, particularly for steel, hence called Damascus steel. The population is estimated by Ali Bey at two hundred thousand; Volney states it at eighty thousand; Hassel at one hundred thousand. About twenty thousand are Maronites of the Catholic church, five thousand Greeks, and one thousand are Jews. The road from Jerusalem to Damascus lies between two mountains, not above one hundred paces distant from each other; both are round at the bottom, and terminate in a point. That nearest the great road is called Cocab, the star, in memory of the dazzling light which is here said to have appeared to Saul. ¶ To the synagogues. See Notes on Mat. iv. 23. The Jews were scattered into nearly all the regions surrounding Judea, and it is natural to suppose that many of them would be found in Damascus. Josephus assures us that ten thousand were massacred there in one hour; and at another time eighteen thousand, with their wives and children (Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. xx. § 2; b. vii. ch. viii. § 7). By whom the gospel was preached there, or how they had been converted to Christianity, is unknown. The presumption is, that some of those who had been converted on the day of Pentecost had carried the gospel to Syria. See Notes on Ac. ii. 9-11. ¶ That if, &c. It would seem that it was not certainly known that there were any Christians there. It was presumed that there were, and probably there was a report of that kind. ¶ Of this way. Of this way or mode of life; of this kind of opinions and conduct; that is, any Christians. ¶ He might bring them, &c. To be tried. The Sanhedrim at Jerusalem claimed jurisdiction over religious opinions, and their authority would naturally be respected by foreign Jews.

3. And as he journeyed. On his way, or while he was travelling. The place where this occurred is not known. Irby and Mangles say it is "outside the eastern gate." In the Boat and Caravan it is described as about a mile from the town, and near the Christian burying-ground which belongs to the Armenians. All that we know of it is that it was near to Damascus. ¶ And suddenly. Like a flash of lightning. ¶ There shined round about him, &c. The language which is expressed here would be used in describing a flash of lightning. Many critics have supposed that God made use of a sudden flash to arrest Paul, and that he was thus alarmed and brought to reflection. That God might make use of such means cannot be denied. But to this supposition in this case there are some unanswerable objections. (1) It was declared to be the appearance of the Lord Jesus: ver. 27, "Barnabas declared unto them how that he had seen the Lord in the way;" 1 Co. xv. 8, "And last of all he was seen of me also;" 1 Co. ix. 1, "Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?" (2) Those who were with Saul saw the light, but did not hear the voice, Ac. xxii. 9. This is incredible on the supposition that it was a flash of lightning near them. (3) It was manifestly regarded as a message to Saul. The light appeared, and the voice spake to him. The others did not even hear the address. Besides, (4) It was as easy for Jesus to appear in a supernatural manner as to appear amidst thunder and lightning. That the Lord Jesus appeared is distinctly affirmed, and we shall see that it is probable that he would appear in a supernatural manner.

In order to understand this, it may be necessary to make the following remarks: (1) God was accustomed to appear to the Jews in a cloud; in a pillar of smoke, or of fire; in that peculiar splendour which they denominated the Shechinah. In this way he went before them into the land of Canaan, Ex. xiii. 21, 22; comp. Is. iv. 5, 6. This appearance or visible manifestation they called the glory of JEHOVAH, Is. vi. 1-4; Ex. xvi. 7, "In the morning ye shall see the glory of the Lord;" ver. 10; Le. ix. 23; Nu. xiv. 10; xvi. 19, 42; xxiv. 16; 1 Ki. viii. 11; Eze. x. 4. See Notes on Lu. ii. 9, "The glory of the Lord shone round about them." (2) The Lord Jesus, in his transfiguration on the mount,

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him,

had been encompassed with that glory. See Notes on Mat. xvii. 1-5. (3) He had spoken of similar glory as pertaining to him; as that with which he had been invested before his incarnation, and to which he would return; Jn. xvii. 5, "And now, Father, glorify thou me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was;" Mat. xxv. 31, "The Son of Man shall come in his glory." Comp. Mat. xvi. 27; xix. 28. To this glory he had returned when he left the earth. (4) It is a sentiment which cannot be shown to be incorrect, that the various appearances of "the angel of Jehovah," and of Jehovah, mentioned in the Old Testament, were appearances of the Messiah—the God who would be incarnate—the peculiar protector of his people. See Is. vi.; comp. with Jn. xii. 41. (5) If the Lord Jesus appeared to Saul, it would be in his appropriate glory and honour as the ascended Messiah. That he did appear is expressly affirmed. (6) This was an occasion when, if ever, such an appearance was proper. The design was to convert an infuriated persecutor, and to make him an apostle. To do this, it was necessary that he should see the Lord Jesus, 1 Co. ix. 1, 2. The design was further to make him an eminent instrument in carrying the gospel to the Gentiles. A signal miracle; a demonstration that he was invested with his appropriate glory (Jn. xvii. 5); a calling up a new witness to the fact of his resurrection, and of his solemn investment with glory in the heavens, seemed to be required in thus calling a violent persecutor to be an apostle and friend. (7) We are to regard this appearance, therefore, as the reappearance of the Shechinah, the Son of God invested with appropriate glory, appearing to convince an enemy of his ascension, and to change him from a foe to a friend.

It has been objected that as the Lord Jesus had ascended to heaven, it cannot be presumed that his body would return to the earth again. To this we may reply, that the New Testament has thrown no light on this. Perhaps it is not necessary to suppose that his body returned, but that he made such a visible manifestation of himself as to convince Saul that he was the Messiah. ¶ From heaven. From above; from the sky. In Ac. xxvi. 13, Paul says that the light was above the brightness of the sun at mid-day.

4. And he fell to the earth. He was astonished and overcome by the sudden flash of light. There is a remarkable similarity between what occurred here, and what is recorded of Daniel in regard to the visions which he saw, Da. viii. 17. Also Da. x. 8, "Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision; and there remained no strength in me, for my comeliness (vigour) was turned into corruption, and I retained no strength." The effect was such as to overpower the body. ¶ And heard a voice. The whole company heard a voice (ver. 7), but did not distinguish it as addressed particularly to Saul. He heard it speaking to himself. ¶ Saying unto him, &c. This shows that it was not thunder, as many have supposed. It was a distinct articulation or utterance, addressing him by name. ¶ Saul, Saul. A mode of address that is emphatic. The repetition of the name would fix his attention. Thus Jesus addresses Martha (Lu. x. 41), and Simon (Lu. xxii. 31), and Jerusalem (Mat. xxiii. 37). ¶ Why. For what reason. Jesus had done him no injury; had given him no provocation. All the opposition of sinners to the Lord Jesus and his church is without cause. See Notes on Jn. xv. 25, "They hated me without a cause," ¶ Persecutest. See Notes on Mat. v. 11. ¶ Thou me? Christ and his people are one, Jn. xv. 1-6. To persecute them, therefore, was to persecute him, Mat. xxv. 40, 45.

5. And he said, Who art thou, Lord? The word Lord here, as is frequently the case in the New Testament, means no more than sir, Jn. iv. 19. It is evident that Saul did not as yet know that this was the Lord Jesus. He heard a voice as of a man; he heard himself addressed, but by whom the words were spoken was to him unknown. In his amazement and confusion, he naturally asked who it was that was thus addressing him. ¶ And the Lord said. In this place the word Lord is used in a higher

sense, to denote the Saviour. It is his usual appellation. See Notes on Ac. i. 24. ¶ I am Jesus. It is clear, from this, that there was a personal appearance of the Saviour; that he was present to Saul; but in what particular form—whether seen as a man, or only appearing by the manifestation of his glory, is not affirmed. Though it was a personal appearance, however, of the Lord Jesus, designed to take the work of converting such a persecutor into his own hands, yet he designed to convert him in a natural way. He arrested his attention; he filled him with alarm at his guilt; and then he presented the truth respecting himself. In ch. xxii. 8, the expression is thus recorded: "I am Jesus of Nazareth," &c. There is no contradiction, as Luke here records only a part of what was said; Paul afterward stated the whole. This declaration was fitted peculiarly to humble and mortify Saul. There can be no doubt that he had often blasphemed his name, and profanely derided the notion that the Messiah could come out of Nazareth. Jesus here uses, however, that very designation. "I am Jesus the Nazarene, the object of your contempt and scorn." Yet Saul saw him now invested with peculiar glory. ¶ It is hard, &c. This is evidently a proverbial expression. Kuinoel has quoted numerous places in which a similar mode of expression occurs in Greek writers. Thus Euripides, Bacch., 791, "I, who am a frail mortal, should rather sacrifice to him who is a god, than, by giving place to anger, kick against the goads." So Pindar, Pyth., ii. 173, "It is profitable to bear willingly the assumed yoke. To kick against the goad is pernicious conduct." So Terence, Phome., 1, 2, 27, "It is foolishness for thee to kick against a goad." Ovid has the same idea, Trist., b. ii. 15. The word translated "pricks" here (ξίνης) means properly any sharp point which will pierce or perforate, as the sting of a bee, &c. But it commonly means an ox-goad, a sharp piece of iron stuck into the end of a stick, with which the ox is urged on. These goads among the Hebrews were made very large. Thus

6 And he, trembling and astonished, said, Lord, "what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the Shamgar slew six hundred men with one of them, Ju. iii. 31. Comp. 1 Sa. xiii. 21. The expression "to kick against the prick" is derived from the action of a stubborn and unyielding ox kicking against the goad. And as the ox would injure no one by it but himself; as he would gain nothing, it comes to denote an obstinate and refractory disposition and course of conduct, resisting the authority of him who has a right to command, and opposing the leadings of Providence, to the injury of him who makes the resistance. It denotes rebellion against lawful authority, and thus getting into greater difficulty by attempting to oppose the commands to duty. This is the condition of every sinner. If men wish to be happy, they should cheerfully submit to the authority of God. They should not rebel against his dealings. They should not murmur against their Creator. They should not resist the claims of their consciences. By all this they only injure themselves. No man can resist God or his own conscience and be happy. Men evince this temper in the following ways: (1) By violating plain laws of God. (2) By attempting to resist his claims. (3) By refusing to do what their conscience requires. (4) By attempting to free themselves from serious impressions and alarms. (5) By pursuing a course of vice and wickedness against what they know to be right. (6) By refusing to submit to the dealings of Providence. And (7) In any way by opposing God, and refusing to submit to his authority, and to do what is right.

6. And he, trembling. Alarmed at what he saw and heard, and at the consciousness of his own evil course. It is not remarkable that a sinner trembles when he sees his guilt and danger.

¶ And astonished. At what he saw. ¶ Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? This indicates a subdued soul, a humbled spirit. Just before, he had sought only to do his own will; now he inquired what was the will of the Saviour. Just before he was acting under a commission from the Sanhedrim; now he renounced their authority, and asked what the Lord Jesus would have him city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7 And the men which journeyed to do. Just before he had been engaged in a career of opposition to the Lord Jesus; now he sought at once to do his will. This indicates the usual change in the mind of the sinner when he is converted. The great controversy between him and God is, whose will shall be followed. The sinner follows his own; the first act of the Christian is to surrender his own will to that of God, and to resolve to do that which he requires. We may further remark here that this indicates the true nature of conversion. It is decided, prompt, immediate. Paul did not debate the matter (Gal. i. 16); he did not inquire what the scribes and Pharisees would say; he did not consult his own reputation; he did not ask what the world would think. With characteristic promptness—with a readiness which showed what he would yet be, he gave himself up at once, and entirely, to the Lord Jesus, evidently with a purpose to do his will alone. This was the case also with the jailer at Philippi, Ac. xvi. 30. Nor can there be any real conversion where the heart and will are not given to the Lord Jesus, to be directed and moulded by him at his pleasure. We may test our conversion then by the example of the apostle Paul. If our hearts have been given up as his was, we are true friends of Christ. ¶ Go into the city. Damascus. They were near it, ver. 3. ¶ And it shall be told thee. It is remarkable that he was thus directed. But we may learn from it, (1) That even in the most striking and remarkable cases of conversion, there is not at once a clear view of duty. What course of life should be followed; what should be done; nay, what should be believed, is not at once apparent. (2) The aid of others, and especially ministers, and of experienced Christians, is often very desirable to aid even those who are converted in the most remarkable manner. Saul was converted by a miracle; the Saviour appeared to him in his glory; of the truth of his Messiahship he had no doubt, but still he was dependent on an humble disciple in Damascus to be instructed in what he should do. (3) Those who are converted, in however striking a manner it may be, should be willing to seek the counsel of those who are in the church before them. The most striking evidence of their conversion will not prevent their deriving important direction and benefit from the aged, the experienced, and the wise in the Christian church. (4) Such remarkable conversions are fitted to induce the subjects of the change to seek counsel and direction. They produce humility; a deep sense of sin and of unworthiness; and a willingness to be taught and directed by any one who can point out the way of duty and of life.

7. And the men which journeyed with him. Why these men attended him is unknown. They might have been appointed to aid him, or they may have been travellers with whom Saul had accidentally fallen in. ¶ Stood speechless. In Ac. xxvi. 14, it is said that they all fell to the earth at the appearance of the light. But there is no contradiction. The narrative in that place refers to the immediate effect of the appearance of the light. They were immediately smitten to the ground together. This was before the voice spake to Saul, Ac. xxvi. 14. In this place (ix. 7) the historian is speaking of what occurred after the first alarm. There is no improbability that they rose from the ground immediately, and surveyed the scene with silent amazement and alarm. The word speechless (ινειλοι) properly denotes those who are so astonished or stupefied as to be unable to speak. In the Greek writers it means those who are deaf and dumb. ¶ Hearing a voice. Hearing a sound or noise. The word here rendered voice is thus frequently used, as in Ge. iii. 8; 1 Sa. xii. 18; Ps. xxix. 3, 4; Mat. xxiv. 31 (Greek); 1 Th. iv. 16. In Ac. xxii. 9, it is said, "They which were with me (Paul) saw indeed the light, and were afraid, but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." In this place, the words "heard not the voice" must be understood in the sense of understanding the words, of hearing the address, the distinct articulation, which Paul heard. They heard a noise; they were amazed and alarmed, but they did not hear the distinct words addressed to Saul. A similar instance occurs in Jn. xii. 28, 29, when the voice of God came from heaven to Jesus, "The people who stood by and heard it said it thundered." They heard the sound, the noise; they did not distinguish the words addressed to him. See also Da. x. 7, and 1 Ki. xix. 11-13.

8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

8. When his eyes were opened. He naturally closed them at the appearance of the light, and in his fright kept them closed for some time. ¶ He saw no man. This darkness continued three days, ver. 9. There is no reason to suppose that there was a miracle in this blindness, for in ch. xxii. 11, it is expressly said to have been caused by the intense light. "And when I could not see for the glory of that light," &c. The intense, sudden light had so affected the optic nerve of the eye as to cause a temporary blindness. This effect is not uncommon. The disease of the eye which is thus produced is called amaurosis, or more commonly gutta serena. It consists in a loss of sight without any apparent defect of the eye. Sometimes the disease is periodical, coming on suddenly, continuing for three or four days, and then disappearing (Webster). A disease of this kind is often caused by excessive light. When we look at the sun, into a furnace, or into a crucible with fused metal, we are conscious of a temporary pain in the eye, and of a momentary blindness. "In northern and tropical climates, from the glare of the sun or snow, a variety of amaurosis (gutta serena) occurs, which, if it produces blindness during the day, is named nyctalopia; if during the night, hemeralopia. Another variety exists in which the individual is blind all day, until a certain hour, when he sees distinctly, or he sees and is blind every alternate day, or is only blind one day in the week, fortnight, or month" (Edinb. Encyc., art. "Surgery"). A total loss of sight has been the consequence of looking at the sun during an eclipse, or of watching it as it sets in the west. This effect is caused by the intense action of the light on the optic nerve, or sometimes from a disorder of the brain. A case is mentioned by Michaelis (Kuinoel in loco) of a man who was made blind by a bright flash of lightning, and who continued so for four weeks, who was again restored to 9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10 And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias;

sight in a tempest by a similar flash of lightning. Electricity has been found one of the best remedies for restoring sight in such cases.

9. And neither did eat nor drink. Probably because he was overwhelmed with a view of his sins, and was thus indisposed to eat. All the circumstances would contribute to this. His past life; his great sins; the sudden change in his views; his total absorption in the vision; perhaps also his grief at the loss of his sight, would all fill his mind, and indispose him to partake of food. Great grief always produces this effect. And it is not uncommon now for an awakened and convicted sinner, in view of his past sins and danger, to be so pained as to destroy his inclination for food, and to produce involuntary fasting. We are to remember also that Paul had yet no assurance of forgiveness. He was arrested, alarmed, convinced that Jesus was the Messiah, and humbled, but he had not found comfort. He was brought to the dust, and left to three painful days of darkness and suspense, before it was told him what he was to do. In this painful and perplexing state, it was natural that he should abstain from food. This case should not be brought now, however, to prove that convicted sinners must remain in darkness and under conviction. Saul's case was extraordinary. His blindness was literal. This state of darkness was necessary to humble him and fit him for his work. But the moment a sinner will give his heart to Christ, he may find peace. If he resists, and rebels longer, it will be his own fault. By the nature of the case, as well as by the promises of the Bible, if a sinner will yield himself at once to the Lord Jesus, he will obtain peace. That sinners do not sooner obtain peace is because they do not sooner submit themselves to God.

10. A certain disciple. A Christian. Many have supposed that he was one of the seventy disciples. But nothing more is certainly known of him than is related here. He had very probably been some time a Christian (ver. 13), and had heard of Saul, but was personally a stranger to him. In ch. xxii. 12, and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

it is said that he was a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there. There was wisdom in sending such a Christian to Saul, as it might do much to conciliate the minds of the Jews there toward him. ¶ Said the Lord. The Lord Jesus is alone mentioned in all this transaction. And as he had commenced the work of converting Saul, it is evident that he is intended here. See Notes on ch. i. 24. ¶ In a vision. Perhaps by a dream. The main idea is, that he revealed his will to him in the case. The word vision is often used in speaking of the communications made to the prophets, and commonly means that future events were made to pass in review before the mind, as we look upon a landscape. See Notes on Is. i. 1; comp. Ge. xv. 1; Nu. xii. 6; Eze. xi. 24; Ac. x. 3; xi. 5; xvi. 9; Da. ii. 19; vii. 2; viii. 1, 2, 26; x. 7. Notes on Mat. xvii. 9.

11. Into the street which is called Straight. This street extends now from the eastern to the western gate, about three miles, crossing the whole city and suburbs in a direct line. Near the eastern gate is a house, said to be that of Judah, in which Paul lodged. There is in it a very small closet, where tradition reports that the apostle passed three days without food, till Ananias restored him to sight. Tradition also says that he had here the vision recorded in 2 Co. xii. 2. There is also in this street a fountain whose water is drunk by Christians, in remembrance of that which, they suppose, the same fountain produced for the baptism of Paul (Rob. Calmet). ¶ Of Tarsus. This city was the capital of Cilicia, a province of Asia Minor. It was situated on the banks of the river Cydnus. It was distinguished for the culture of Greek philosophy and literature, so that at one time in its schools, and in the number of its learned men, it was the rival of Athens and Alexandria. In allusion to this, perhaps, Paul says that he was "born in Tarsus, a citizen of no mean city," Ac. xxi. 39. In reward for its exertions and sacrifices during the civil wars of Rome, Tarsus was made a free city by Augustus. See Notes on Ac. xvi. 37; xxi. 39; xxii. 28. It still exists as Tarsous, with a population of about 20,000, but is described as filthy and ruinous. ¶ Behold, he prayeth. This gives us a full indication of the manner in which Saul passed the three days mentioned in ver. 9. It is plain, from what follows, that Ananias regarded Saul as an enemy to Christianity, and that he would have been apprehensive of danger if he were with him, ver. 13, 14. This remark, "Behold, he prayeth," is made to him to silence his fears, and to indicate the change in the feelings and views of Saul. Before, he was a persecutor; now, his change is indicated by his giving himself to prayer. That Saul did not pray before is not implied by this; for he fully accorded with the customs of the Jews, Phi. iii. 4-6. But his prayers were not the prayers of a saint. They were the prayers of a Pharisee (comp. Lu. xviii. 10, &c.), now they were the prayers of a broken-hearted sinner; then he prayed depending on his own righteousness, now depending on the mercy of God in the Messiah. We may learn here, (1) That one indication of conversion to God is real prayer. A Christian may as well be characterized by that as by any single appellation—"a man of prayer." (2) It is always the attendant of true conviction for sin that we pray. The convicted sinner feels his danger, and his need of forgiveness. Conscious that he has no righteousness himself, he now seeks that of another, and depends on the mercy of God. Before, he was too proud to pray; now, he is willing to humble himself and to ask for mercy. (3) It is a sufficient indication of the character of any man to say, "Behold, he prays." It at once tells us, better than volumes would without this, what is his real character. Knowing this, we know all about him. We at once confide in his piety, his honesty, his humility, his willingness to do good. It is at the same time the indication of his state with God, and the pledge that he will do his duty to men. We mean, of course, real prayer. Knowing that a man is sincere, and humble, and faithful in his private devotions, and in the devotions of his family, we confide in him; and are willing to trust to his readiness to do all that he is convinced that he ought to do. Ananias, apprised the house of Judas for one called Saul of Tarsus; for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in

of this in Saul, had full evidence of the change of his character, and was convinced that he ought to lay aside all his former prejudices, and to seek him, and to acknowledge him as a brother.

12. And he hath seen in a vision, &c. When this was shown to Saul, or how, is not recorded. The vision was shown to Saul to assure him when Ananias came that he was no impostor. He was thus prepared to receive consolation from this disciple. He was even apprised of his name, that he might be the more confirmed.

13, 14. I have heard by many, &c. This was in the vision, ver. 10. The passage of such a train of thoughts through the mind was perfectly natural at the command to go and search out Saul. There would instantly occur all that had been heard of his fury in persecution; and the expression here may indicate the state of a mind amazed that such a one should need his counsel, and afraid, perhaps, of intrusting himself to one thus bent on persecution. All this evidently passed in the dream or vision of Ananias, and perhaps cannot be considered as any deliberate unwillingness to go to him. It is clear, however, that such thoughts should have been banished, and that he should have gone at once to the praying Saul. When Christ commands, we should suffer no suggestion of our own thoughts, and no apprehension of our own danger, to interfere. ¶ By many. Probably many who had fled from persecution, and had taken refuge in Damascus. It is also evident (ver. 14) that Ananias had been apprised, perhaps by letters from the Christians at Jerusalem, of the purpose which Saul had in view in now going to Damascus. ¶ To thy saints. Christians; called saints (εὐσέβοις) because they are holy, or consecrated to God.

14 And here 'he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name.'

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for 'he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel.'

15. Go thy way. This is often the only answer that we obtain to the suggestion of our doubts and hesitations about duty. God tells us still to do what he requires, with an assurance only that his commands are just, and that there are good reasons for them.

¶ A chosen vessel. The usual meaning of the word vessel is well known. It commonly denotes a cup or basin, such as is used in a house. It then denotes any instrument which may be used to accomplish a purpose, perhaps particularly with the notion of conveying or communicating. In the Scriptures it is used to denote the instrument or agent which God employs to convey his favours to mankind, and is thus employed to represent the ministers of the gospel, 2 Co. iv. 7; 1 Th. iv. 4. Comp. Is. x. 5-7. Paul is called chosen because Christ had selected him, as he did his other apostles, for this service. See Notes on Jn. xv. 16.

¶ To bear my name. To communicate the knowledge of me.

¶ Before the Gentiles. The nations; all who were not Jews. This was the principal employment of Paul. He spent his life in this, and regarded himself as peculiarly called to be the apostle of the Gentiles, Ro. xi. 13; xv. 16; Ga. ii. 8.

¶ And kings. This was fulfilled, Ac. xxv. 23, &c.; xxvi. 32; xxvii. 24.

¶ And the children of Israel. The Jews. This was done. He immediately began to preach to them, ver. 20-22.

Wherever he went, he preached the gospel first to them, and then to the Gentiles, Ac. xiii. 46; xxviii. 17.

16. For I will show him, &c. This seems to be added to encourage Ananias. He had feared Saul. The Lord now informs him that Saul, hitherto his enemy, would ever after be his friend. He would not merely profess repentance, but would manifest the sincerity of it by encountering trials great things he must suffer for my name's sake.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that

and reproaches for his sake. The prediction here was fully accomplished, ch. xx. 23; 2 Co. xi. 23-27; 2 Ti. i. 11, 12.

17. Putting his hands on him. This was not ordination, but was the usual mode of imparting or communicating blessings. See Notes on Mat. xix. 13; ix. 18. ¶ Brother Saul. An expression recognizing him as a fellow-Christian. ¶ Be filled with the Holy Ghost. See Notes on Ac. ii. 4.

18. As it had been scales—ωστὶ λεπίδες. The word ωστὶ, “as it had been,” is designed to qualify the following word. It is not said that scales literally fell from his eyes, but that an effect followed as if scales had been suddenly taken off. Evidently the expression is designed to mean no more than this. The effect was such as would take place if some dark, impervious substance had been placed before the eyes, and had been suddenly removed. The cure was as sudden, the restoration to sight was as immediate, as if such an interposing substance had been suddenly removed. This is all that the expression fairly implies, and this is all that the nature of the case demands. As the blindness had been caused by the natural effect of the light, probably on the optic nerve (ver. 8, 9, Note), it is manifest that no literal removing of scales would restore the vision. We are therefore to lay aside the idea of literal scales falling to the earth. No such thing is affirmed, and no such thing would have met the case. The word translated scales is used nowhere else in the New Testament. It means properly the small crust or layer which composes a part of the covering of a fish, and also any thin layer or leaf exfoliated or separated, as scales of iron, bone, or a piece of bark, &c. (Webster). An effect similar to this is described in Tobit xi. 8, 13. It is evident that there was a miracle in the healing of Saul. The blindness was the natural effect of the light. The cure was by miraculous power. This is evident, (1) Because there were no means used that would naturally restore the sight. It may be remarked here that gutta serena has been regarded by physicians as one of the most incurable of diseases. Few cases are restored, and few remedies are efficacious. (See Edinb. Encyc., art. “Surgery,” on Amiaurosis.) (2) Ananias was sent for this very purpose to heal him, ver. 17. (3) The immediate effect shows that this was miraculous. Had it been a slow recovery, it might have been doubtful; but here it was instantaneous, and it was thus put beyond a question that it was a miracle. ¶ And was baptized. In this he followed the example of all the early converts to Christianity. They were baptized immediately. See Ac. ii. 41; viii. 12, 36-39.

19. Had received meat. Food. The word meat has undergone a change since our translation was made. It then meant, as the original does, food of all kinds. ¶ With the disciples. With Christians, comp. Ac. ii. 42. ¶ Certain days. How long is not known. It was long enough, however, to preach the gospel, ver. 22; ch. xxvi. 20. It might have been for some months, as he did not go to Jerusalem under three years from that time. He remained some time at Damascus, and then went to Arabia, and returned again to Damascus, and then went to Jerusalem, Ga. i. 17. This visit to Arabia Luke has omitted, but there is no contradiction. He does not affirm that he did not go to Arabia.

We have now passed through the account of one of the most remarkable conversions to Christianity that has ever occurred—that of the apostle Paul. His conversion has always been justly considered as a strong proof of the Christian religion. For, (1) This change could not have occurred by any want of fair prospects of honour. He was distinguished already as a Jew. He was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

had had the best opportunities for education that the nation afforded. He had every prospect of rising to distinction and office. (2) It could not have been produced by any prospect of wealth or fame by becoming a Christian. Christians were poor; and to be a Christian then was to be exposed to contempt, to persecution, and to death. Saul had no reason to suppose that he would escape the common lot of Christians. (3) He was as firmly opposed to Christianity before his conversion as possible. He had already distinguished himself for his hostility. Infidels often say that Christians are prejudiced in favour of their religion. But here was a man, at first a bitter infidel, and a deadly foe to Christianity. All the prejudices of his education, all his prospects, all his former views and feelings, were opposed to the gospel of Christ. He became, however, one of its most firm advocates and friends, and it is for infidels to account for this change. There must have been some cause, some motive for it; and is there anything more rational than the supposition that Saul was convinced in a most striking and wonderful manner of the truth of Christianity? (4) His subsequent life showed that the change was sincere and real. He encountered danger and persecution to evince his attachment to Christ; he went from land to land, and exposed himself to every peril and every form of obloquy and scorn, always rejoicing that he was a Christian, and was permitted to suffer as a Christian, and has thus given the highest proofs of his sincerity. If such sufferings and such a life were not evidences of sincerity, then it would be impossible to fix on any circumstances of a man's life that would furnish proof that he was not a deceiver. (5) If Paul was sincere; if his conversion was genuine, the Christian religion is true. Nothing else but a religion from heaven could produce this change. There is here, therefore, the independent testimony of a man who was once a persecutor; converted in a wonderful manner; his whole life, views, and feelings revolutionized, and all his subsequent career evincing the sincerity of his feelings and the reality of the change. He is just such a witness as infidels ought to be satisfied with; a man once an enemy; a man whose testimony cannot be impeached; a man who had no interested motives, and who was willing to stand forth anywhere, and avow his change of feeling and purpose. We adduce him as such a witness; and infidels are bound to dispose of his testimony, or to embrace the religion which he embraced. (6) The example of Saul does not stand alone. Hundreds and thousands of enemies, persecutors, and slanderers have been changed, and every such one becomes a living witness of the power and truth of the Christian religion. The scoffer becomes reverent; the profane man learns to speak the praise of God; the sullen, bitter foe of Christ becomes his friend, and lives and dies under the influence of his religion. Could better proof be asked that this religion is from God?

20. And straightway. Immediately. It was an evidence of the genuineness of his conversion that he was willing at once to avow himself to be the friend of the Lord Jesus. ¶ He preached Christ. He proclaimed that Jesus was the Christ. See ver. 22. Many manuscripts read here Jesus instead of Christ. Griesbach has adopted this reading. Such is also the Syriac, the Vulgate, and the Ethiopic. The reading accords much better with the subject than the common reading. That Christ, or the Messiah, was the Son of God, all admitted. In the New Testament the names Christ and Son of God are used as synonymous. But the question was whether Jesus was the Christ, and was therefore the Son of God, and this Paul showed to the Jews. Paul continued the practice of attending the synagogues; and in the synagogues anyone had a right to speak who was invited by the officiating minister. See ch. xiii. 15. ¶ That he is the Son of God. That he is the Messiah.

21. Were amazed. Amazed at his sudden and remarkable change. ¶ That destroyed. That opposed; laid waste; persecuted. Comp. Ga. i. 13. ¶ For that intent. With that design, that he might destroy the church at Damascus.

22. Increased the more in strength. His conviction of the truth of the Christian religion became stronger every day, and hence his moral strength or boldness increased. ¶ And confounded. See Ac. ii. 6. The word here means confuted. It means also occasionally to produce a tumult or excitement, Ac. xix. 32; xxi. 31. Perhaps the idea of producing such a tumult is intended to be conveyed here. Paul confuted the Jews, and by so doing he was the occasion of their tumultuous proceedings, or he so enraged them as to lead to great agitation and excitement—a very common effect of close and conclusive argumentation. ¶ Proving that this. This Jesus. ¶ Is very Christ. Greek, ὅτι Χριστός. It means that Paul showed by strong and satisfactory arguments that Jesus of Nazareth was the true Messiah. The arguments which he would use may be easily conceived, but the evangelist has not seen fit to record them.

23. And after that many days, &c. How long a time elapsed before this is not recorded in this place, but it is evident that the writer means to signify that a considerable time intervened. There is, therefore, an interval here which Luke has not filled up; and if this were the only narrative which we had, we should be at a loss how to understand this. From all that we know now of the usual conduct of the Jews toward the apostles, and especially toward Paul, it would seem highly improbable that this interval would be passed peaceably or quietly. Nay, it would be highly improbable that he would be allowed to remain in Damascus many days without violent persecution. Now it so happens that by turning to another part of the New Testament, we are enabled to ascertain the manner in which this interval was filled up. Turn then to Ga. i. 17, and we learn from Paul himself that he went into Arabia, and spent some time there, and then returned again to Damascus.

Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.

The precise time which would be occupied in such a journey is not specified, but it would not be performed under a period of some months. In Ga. i. 18, we are informed that he did not go to Jerusalem until three years after his conversion; and as there is reason to believe that he went up to Jerusalem directly after escaping from Damascus the second time (Ac. ix. 25, 26), it seems probable that the three years were spent chiefly in Arabia. We have thus an account of the "many days" here referred to by Luke. And in this instance we have a striking example of the truth and honesty of the sacred writers. By comparing these two accounts together, we arrive at the whole state of the case. Neither seems to be complete without the other. Luke has left a chasm which he has nowhere else supplied. But that chasm we are enabled to fill up from the apostle himself, in a letter written long after, and without any design to amend or complete the history of Luke—for the introduction of this history into the epistle to the Galatians was for a very different purpose—to show that he received his commission directly from the Lord Jesus, and in a manner independent of the other apostles. The two accounts, therefore, are like the two parts of a tally; neither is complete without the other; and yet, being brought together, they so exactly fit as to show that the one is precisely adjusted to the other. And as the two parts were made by different individuals, and without design of adapting them to each other, they show that the writers had formed no collusion or agreement to impose on the world; that they are separate and independent witnesses; that they are honest men; that their narratives are true records of what actually occurred; and the two narratives constitute, therefore, a strong and very valuable proof of the correctness of the sacred narrative. If asked why Luke has not recorded a full account of this in the Acts, it may be replied that there are many circumstances and facts omitted in all histories from the necessity of the case. Comp. Jn. xxi. 25. It is remarkable here, not that he has not recorded this, but that he has left a chasm in his own history which can be so readily filled up. ¶ Were fulfilled. Had elapsed. ¶ Took counsel, &c. Laid a scheme, or designed to kill him. Comp. ch. xxiii. 12; xxv. 3. His zeal and success would enrage them, and they knew of no other way in which they could free themselves from the effects of his arguments and influence.

24. But their laying await. Their counsel; their design. ¶ Was known of Saul. Was made known to him. In what way this was communicated we do not know. This design of the Jews against Saul is referred to in 2 Co. xi. 32, 33, where it is said, "In Damascus, the governor under Aretas the king kept the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me; and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands." ¶ And they watched the gates. Cities were surrounded by high walls, and of course the gates were presumed to be the only places of escape. As they supposed that Saul, apprised of their designs, would make an attempt to escape, they stationed guards at the gates to intercept him. In 2 Co. xi. 32, it is said that the governor kept the city for the purpose of apprehending him. It is possible that the governor might have been a Jew, and one, therefore, who would enter into their views. Or if not a Jew, the Jews who were there might easily represent Saul as an offender, and demand his being secured, and thus a garrison or guard might be furnished them for their purpose. See a similar attempt made by the Jews recorded in Mat. xxviii. 14.

25. Took him by night, &c. This was done through a window in the wall, 2 Co. xi. 33. ¶ In a basket. This word is used to denote commonly the basket in which food was carried, Mat. xv. 37; Mar. viii. 8, 20. It was in this way that Rahab let down the spies (Jos. ii. 15), and so David escaped from Saul, 1 Sa. xix. 12. Probably this occurred in an unguarded part of the wall, where some overhanging houses, as is usual in Eastern cities, opened into the outer country. This conduct of Saul was in accordance with the direction of the Lord Jesus (Mat. x. 23), "When they persecute you in one city, flee ye into another," &c. Saul was certain of death if he remained; and as he could secure his life by flight without abandoning any principle of religion, or denying his Lord, it was his duty to do so. Christianity requires us to sacrifice our lives only when we cannot avoid it without denying the Saviour, or abandoning the principles of our religion.

26. Was come to Jerusalem. He did not go to Jerusalem immediately after he escaped from Damascus. He first went into Arabia, where he spent a considerable part, or the whole of three years. For the reasons why he went there, and why this fact is omitted by Luke in the Acts, see Notes on Ga. i. 18. ¶ He assayed. He attempted; he endeavoured. ¶ To join himself. To become connected with them as a fellow-Christian. ¶ But they were all afraid of him. Their fear, or suspicion, was excited probably on these grounds: (1) They remembered his former violence against Christians. They had an instinctive shrinking from him, and suspicion of the man that had been so violent a persecutor. (2) He had been absent three years. If they had not heard of him during that time, they would naturally retain much of their old feelings toward him. If they had, they might suspect the man who had not returned to Jerusalem; who had not before sought the society of other Christians; and who had spent that time in a distant country, and among strangers. It would seem remarkable that he had not at once returned to Jerusalem and connected himself with the apostles. But the sacred writer does not justify the fears of the apostles. He simply records the fact of their apprehension. It is not unnatural, however, to have doubts respecting an open and virulent enemy of the gospel who suddenly professes a change in favour of it. The human mind does not easily cast off suspicion of some unworthy motive, and open itself at once to entire himself to the disciples; but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But <sup>b</sup>Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had <sup>c</sup>preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

confidence. When great and notorious sinners profess to be converted—men who have been violent, artful, or malignant—it is natural to ask whether they have not some unworthy motive still in their professed change. Confidence is a plant of slow growth, and starts up, not by a sudden profession, but is the result of a course of life which is worthy of affection and of trust. ¶ A disciple. A sincere Christian.

27. But Barnabas. See Notes on ch. iv. 36. Barnabas was of Cyprus, not far from Tarsus, and it is not improbable that he had been before acquainted with Saul. ¶ To the apostles. To Peter and James, Ga. i. 18, 19. Probably the other apostles were at that time absent from Jerusalem. ¶ And declared unto them, &c. It may seem remarkable that the apostles at Jerusalem had not before heard of the conversion of Saul. The following considerations may serve in some degree to explain this. (1) It is certain that intercourse between different countries was then much more difficult than it is now. There were no posts; no public conveyances; no mails; no telegraphs; nothing that corresponded with our modes of intercourse between one part of the world and another. (2) There was at this time a state of animosity amounting to hostility subsisting between Herod and Aretas. Herod the tetrarch had married the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia, and had put her away (Josephus, Antiq., b. xviii. ch. v. § 1, 2). The result of this was a long misunderstanding between them, and a war; and the effects of that war might have been to interrupt the communication very much throughout all that country. (3) Though the Jews at Jerusalem might have heard of the conversion of Saul, yet it was for their interest to keep it a secret, and not to mention it to Christians. But,

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: <sup>d</sup>but they went about to slay him.

(4) Though the Christians who were there had heard of it, yet it is probable that they were not fully informed on the subject; that they had not had all the evidence of his conversion which they desired; and that they looked with suspicion on him. It was therefore proper that they should have a full statement of the evidence of his conversion; and this was made by Barnabas.

28. And he was with them, &c. That is, he was admitted to their friendship, and recognized as a Christian and an apostle. The time during which he then remained at Jerusalem was, however, only fifteen days, Ga. i. 18.

29. And spake boldly. He openly defended the doctrine that Jesus was the Messiah. ¶ In the name, &c. By the authority of the Lord Jesus. ¶ Against the Grecians. See the word Grecians explained in the Notes on Ac. vi. 1. It means that he not only maintained that Jesus was the Christ in the presence of those Jews who resided at Jerusalem, and who spoke the Hebrew language, but also before those foreign Jews who spoke the Greek language, and who had come up to Jerusalem. They would be as much opposed to the doctrine that Jesus was the Christ as those who resided in Jerusalem. ¶ They went about. They sought to slay him; or they formed a purpose to put him to death as an apostate. See ver. 23.

30. To Cesarea. See Notes on ch. viii.

40. ¶ And sent him forth to Tarsus. This was his native city. See Notes on ver. 11. It was in Cilicia, where Paul doubtless preached the gospel, Ga. i. 21, "Afterward I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia."

31. Then had the churches rest. That is, the persecutions against Christians ceased. Those persecutions had been excited by the opposition made to Stephen (Ac. xi. 19); they had been greatly promoted by Saul (Ac. viii. 3); and they had extended doubtless throughout the whole land of Palestine. The precise causes of this cessation of the persecution are not known. Probably they were the following: (1) It is not improbable that the great mass of Christians had been driven into other regions by these persecutions. (2) He who had been most active in exciting the persecution; who was, in a sort, its leader, and who was best adapted to carry it on, had been converted. He had ceased his opposition; and even he was now removed from Judea. All this would have some effect in causing the persecution to subside. (3) But it is not improbable that the state of things in Judea contributed much to turn the attention of the Jews to other matters. Dr. Lardner accounts for this in the following manner: "Soon after Caligula's accession, the Jews at Alexandria suffered very much from the Egyptians in that city, and at length their oratories there were all destroyed. In the third year of Caligula, A.D. 39, Petronius was sent into Syria, with orders to set up the emperor's statue in the temple at Jerusalem. This order from Caligula was, to the Jews, a thunderstroke. The Jews must have been too much engaged after this to mind anything else, as may appear from the accounts which Philo and Josephus have given us of this affair. Josephus says 'that Caligula ordered Petronius to go with an army to Jerusalem, to set up his statue in the temple there; enjoining him, if the Jews opposed it, to put to death all who made any resistance, and to make all the rest of the nation slaves. Petronius therefore marched from Antioch into Judea with three legions and a large body of auxiliaries raised in Syria. All were hereupon filled with consternation, the army being come as far as Ptolemais.'" See Lardner's Works, vol. i. p. 101, 102, London edit. 1829. Philo gives the same account of the consternation as Josephus (Philo, De Legat. ad Cai., p. 1024, 1025). He describes the Jews "as abandoning their cities, villages, and open country; as going to Petronius in Phenicia, both men and women, the old, the young, the middle-aged; as throwing themselves on the ground before Petronius with weeping and lamentation," &c. The effect of this consternation in diverting their minds from the Christians can be easily conceived. The prospect that the images of the Roman emperor were about to be set up by violence in the temple, or, that in case of resistance, death or slavery was to be their portion, and the advance of a large army to execute that purpose, all tended to throw the nation into alarm. By the providence of God, therefore, this event was permitted to occur to divert the attention of bloody-minded persecutors from a feeble and bleeding church. Anxious for their own safety, the Jews would cease to persecute the Christians, and thus, by the conversion of the main instrument in persecution, and by the universal alarm for the welfare of the nation, the trembling and enfeebled church was permitted to obtain repose. Thus ended the first general persecution against Christians, and thus effectually did God show that he had power to guard and protect his chosen people.

The formation of churches in Galilee is not expressly mentioned before this; but there is no improbability in supposing that Christians had travelled there, and had preached the gospel. Comp. It was about 10 or 12 miles south-east from Joppa, and belonged to the tribe of Ephraim. It was called by the Greeks Diospolis, or city of Jupiter, probably because a temple was at some period erected to Jupiter in that city. It is now so entirely ruined as to be a miserable village. Since the Crusades, it has been called by the Christians St. George, on account of its having been the scene of the martyrdom of a saint of that name. Tradition says that in this city the Emperor Justinian erected a church.

36. At Joppa. This was a seaport town situated on the Mediterranean, in the tribe of Dan, about 30 miles south of Cesarea, and 45 north-west of Jerusalem. It was the principal seaport of Palestine; and hence, though the harbour was poor, it had considerable celebrity. It was occupied by Solomon to receive the timber brought for the building of the temple from Tyre (2 Ch. ii. 16), and was used for a similar purpose in the time of Ezra, Ezr. iii. 7. The present name of the town is Jaffa. It is situated on a promontory jutting out into the sea, rising to the height of about 150 feet above its level, and offering on all sides picturesque and varied prospects. "It owes its existence to the low ledge of rocks which extends into the sea from the extremity of the little cape on which the city stands, and forms a small harbour. Insignificant as it is, and insecure, yet there being no other on all this coast, it was sufficient to cause a city to spring up around it even in the earliest times, and to sustain its life through numberless changes of dynasties, races, and religions down to the present hour. It was, in fact, the only harbour of any notoriety possessed by the Jews throughout the greater part of their national existence. To it the timber for both the temples of Jerusalem was brought from Lebanon, and no doubt a lucrative trade in cedar and pine was always carried on through it with the nations who had possession of the forests of Lebanon. Through it also nearly all the foreign commerce of the Jews was conducted until the artificial port of Cesarea was built by Herod. Hither Jonah came to find a ship in which to flee from the presence of the Lord, and from it he sailed for Tarshish. "Twenty-five years ago the inhabitants of city and gardens were about 6000; now there must be 15,000 at least, and commerce has increased at even a greater ratio. Several sources of prosperity account for the existence and rapid increase of Jaffa. It is the natural landing-place of pilgrims to Jerusalem, both Christians and Jews, and they have created a considerable trade. The Holy City itself has also been constantly rising in importance during the present generation. Then there are extensive soap factories, not only here, but in Ramleh, Lydd, Nablus, and Jerusalem, much of which is exported from this port to all the cities along the coast, to Egypt, and even to Asia Minor through Tarsus. The fruit trade from Jaffa is likewise quite considerable, and lately there have been large shipments of corn to Europe. Add to this that silk is now being cultivated extensively along the river 'Aujeh, and in the gardens about the city, and the present prosperity of Jaffa is fully explained.

"Jaffa is celebrated in modern times for her gardens and orchards of delicious fruit more than for anything else. They are very extensive, flourishing, and profitable, but their very existence depends upon the fact that water to any amount can be procured in every garden, and at a moderate depth. The entire plain seems to cover a river of vast breadth, percolating through the sand en route to the sea. A thousand Persian wheels working night and day produce no sensible diminution, and this inexhaustible source of wealth underlies the whole territory of the Philistines down to Gaza at least, and probably much farther south.

"The fruits of Jaffa are the same as those of Sidon, but with certain variations in their character. Sidon has the best bananas, Jaffa furnishes the best pomegranates. The oranges of Sidon are more juicy and of a richer flavour than those of Jaffa; but the latter hang on the trees much later, and will bear to be shipped to distant regions. They are therefore more valuable to the producer. It is here only that you see in perfection fragrant blossoms encircling golden fruit. In March and April these Jaffa gardens are indeed enchanting.

The air is overloaded with the mingled spicery of orange, lemon, apple, apricot, quince, plum, and china trees in blossom. The people then frequent the groves, sit on mats beneath their grateful shade, sip coffee, smoke the argela, sing, converse, or sleep, as best suits their individual idiosyncrasies, till evening, when they slowly return to their homes in the city. To us of the restless West, this way of making kuif soon wearies by its slumberous monotony, but it is Elysium to the Arabs.

"I have been strolling along the streets, or rather street of Jaffa, for there seems to be but one, and a more crowded thoroughfare I never saw. I had to force my way through the motley crowd of busy citizens, wild Arabs, foreign pilgrims, camels, mules, horses, and donkeys. Then what a strange rabble outside the gate, noisy, quarrelsome, ragged, and filthy! Many are blind, or at least have some painful defect about their eyes, and some are leprosy. The peasants hereabout must be very poor, to judge by their rags and squalid appearance. I was reminded of Dorcas and the widows around Peter exhibiting the coats and garments which that benevolent lady had made, and I devoutly hoped she might be raised again, at least in spirit, for there is need of a dozen Dorcas societies in Jaffa at the present time."—The Land and the Book (Thomson), vol. ii. p. 271-281. ¶ Tabitha. It is probable that they desired his presence to comfort and sustain them in their affliction. It is certainly possible that they expected he would restore her to life; but as this is not mentioned; as the apostles had as yet raised up no one from the dead; as even Stephen had not been restored to life, we have no authority for assuming, or supposing, that they had formed any such expectation.

Each one would therefore naturally dwell on the kindness which had been shown to herself.

If done in the presence of many persons, it might seem like ostentation. Others suppose it was that he might offer more fervent prayer to God than he would be willing they should witness. Comp. 1 Ki. xvii. 23.

42. And many believed, &c. A similar effect followed when Jesus raised up Lazarus. See Jn. xii. 11.

This was the first miracle of this kind that was performed by the apostles. The effect was that many believed. It was not merely a work of benevolence, in restoring to life one who contributed largely to the comfort of the poor, but it was a means of extending and establishing, as it was designed doubtless to do, the kingdom of the Saviour.

CHAPTER X.

This chapter commences a very important part of the history of the transactions of the apostles. Before this, they had preached the gospel to the Jews only. They seemed to have retained the feelings of their countrymen on this subject, that the Jews were to be regarded as the peculiarly favoured people, and that salvation was not to be offered beyond the limits of their nation. It was important, indeed, that the gospel should be offered to them first; but the whole tendency of the Christian religion was to enlarge and liberalize the mind; to overcome the narrow policy and prejudices of the Jewish people; and to diffuse itself over all the nations of the earth. In various ways, and by various parables, the Saviour had taught the apostles, indeed, that his gospel should be spread among the Gentiles. He had commanded them to go and preach it to every creature, Mar. xvi. 15. But he had told them to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, Lu. xxiv. 49. It was natural, therefore, that they should receive special instructions and divine revelation on a point so important as this; and God selected the case of Cornelius as the instance by which he would fully establish his purpose of conveying the gospel to the Gentile world. It is worthy of observation, also, that he selected Peter for the purpose of conveying the gospel first to the Gentiles. The Saviour had told him that on him he would build his church; that he would give to him first the keys of the kingdom of heaven; that is, that he should be the agent in opening the doors of the church to both Jews and Gentiles. See Notes on Mat. xvi. 18, 19. Peter had, in accordance with these predictions, been the agent in first presenting the gospel to the Jews (Ac. ii.); and the prediction was now to be completely fulfilled in extending the same gospel to the Gentile world. The transaction recorded in this chapter is one, therefore, that is exceedingly important in the history of the church, and we are not to be surprised that it is recorded at length. It should be remembered, also, that this point became afterward the source of incessant controversy in the early church. The converts from Judaism insisted on the observance of the whole of the rites of their religion; the converts from among the Gentiles claimed exemption from them all. To settle these disputes; to secure the reception of the gospel among the Gentiles, and to introduce them to the church with all the privileges of the Jews, required all the wisdom, talent, and address of the apostles. See Ac. xi. 1-18; xv.; Ro. xiv., xv.; Ga. ii.11-16.

1. In Cesarea. See Notes on ch. viii. 40. ¶ Cornelius. This is a Latin name, and shows that the man was doubtless a Roman. It has been supposed by many interpreters that he was "a proselyte of the gate;" that is, one who had renounced idolatry, and who observed some of the Jewish rites, though not circumcised, and not called a Jew. But there is no sufficient evidence of this. The reception of the narrative of Peter (ch. xi. 1-3) shows that the other apostles regarded him as a Gentile. In ch. x. 28, Peter evidently regards him as a foreigner—one who did not in any sense esteem himself to be a Jew. In ch. xi. 1, it is expressly said that "the Gentiles" had received the word of God, evidently alluding to Cornelius and to those who were with him. ¶ A centurion. One who was the commander of a division in the Roman army, consisting of a hundred men. A captain of a hundred. See Notes on Mat. viii. 5. ¶ Of the band. A division of the Roman army, consisting of from four hundred to six hundred men. See Notes on Mat. xxvii. 27. ¶ The Italian band. Probably a band or regiment that was composed of soldiers from Italy, in distinction from those which were composed of soldiers born in provinces. It is evident that many of the soldiers in the Roman army would be those who were born in other parts of the world; and it is altogether probable that those who were born in Rome or Italy would claim pre-eminence over those enlisted in other places.

2. A devout man. Pious, or one who maintained the worship of God. See Notes on Lu. ii. 25. Comp. Ac. ii. 5; viii. 2. ¶ And one that feared God. This is often a designation of piety. See Notes on ch. ix. 31. It has been supposed by many that the expressions here used denote that Cornelius was a Jew, or was instructed in the Jewish religion, and was a proselyte. But this by no means follows. It is probable that there might have been among the Gentiles a few at least who were fearers of God, and who maintained his worship according to the light which they had. So there may be now persons found in pagan lands who in some unknown way have been taught the evils of idolatry and the necessity of a purer religion, and who may be prepared to receive the gospel. The Sandwich Islands were very much in this state when the American missionaries first visited them. They had thrown away their idols, and seemed to be waiting for the message of mercy and the word of eternal life, as Cornelius was. A few other instances have been found by missionaries in heathen lands of those who have thus been prepared by a train of providential events, or by the teaching of the Spirit, for the gospel of Christ. ¶ With all his house. With all his family. It is evident here that Cornelius instructed his family, and exerted his influence to train them in the fear of God. True piety will always lead a man to seek the salvation of his family. ¶ Much alms. Large and liberal charity. This is always an effect of piety. See Ja. i. 27; Ps. xli. 1. ¶ Prayed to God always. Constantly; meaning that he was in the regular habit of prayer. Comp. Ro. xii. 12; Lu. xviii. 1; Ps. cxix. 2; Pr. ii. 2-5. As no particular kind of prayer is mentioned except secret prayer, we are not authorized to affirm that he offered prayer in any other manner. It may be observed, however, that he who prays in secret will usually pray in his family; and as the family of Cornelius is mentioned as being also under the influence of religion, it is, perhaps, not a forced inference that he observed family worship.

3. He saw in a vision. See Notes on ch. ix. 10. ¶ Evidently. Openly; manifestly. ¶ About the ninth hour. About 3 o'clock P.M. This was the usual hour of evening worship among the Jews. ¶ An angel of God. See Notes on Mat. i. 20. Comp. He. i. 14. This angel was sent to signify to Cornelius that his alms were accepted by God as an evidence of his piety, and to direct him to send for Peter to instruct him in the way of salvation. The importance of the occasion—the introduction of the gospel to a Gentile, and hence to the entire Gentile world—was probably the chief reason why an angel was commissioned to visit the Roman centurion. Comp. ch. xvi. 9, 10.

4. And when he looked on him. Greek, Having fixed his eyes attentively on him. ¶ He was afraid. At the suddenness and unexpected character of the vision. ¶ What is it, Lord? This is the expression of surprise and alarm. The word Lord should have been translated sir, as there is no evidence that this is an address to God, and still less that he regarded the personage present as the Lord. Comp. Notes on ch. ix. 5. It is such language as a man would naturally use who was suddenly surprised; who should witness a strange form appearing unexpectedly before him; and who should exclaim, "Sir, what is the matter?" ¶ Are come up for a memorial. Are remembered before God. Comp. Is. xlvi. 19. They were an evidence of piety toward God, and were accepted as such. Though he had not offered sacrifice according to the Jewish laws; though he had not been circumcised; yet, having acted according to the light which he had, his prayers were heard, and his alms were accepted. This was done in accordance with the general principle of the divine administration, that God prefers the offering of the heart to external forms; the expressions of love to sacrifice without it. This he had often declared, Is. i. 11-15; Am. v. 21, 22; 1 Sa. xv. 22, "To obey is better than sacrifice," Ho. vi. 6; Ec. v. 1. It should be remembered, however, that Cornelius was not depending on external morality. His heart was in the work of religion. It should be remembered, further, that he was ready to receive the gospel when it was offered to him, and to become a Christian. In this there was an important difference between him and those who are depending for salvation on their morality in Christian lands. Such men are inclined to defend themselves by the example of Cornelius, and to suppose that as he was accepted before he embraced the gospel, so they may be without embracing it. But there is an important difference in the two cases. For, (1) There is no evidence that Cornelius was depending on external morality for salvation. His offering was that of the heart, and not merely an external offering. (2) Cornelius did not rely on his morality at all. His was a work of religion. He feared God; he prayed to him; he exerted his influence to bring his family to the same state.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter.

6 He lodgeth with one "Simon, a tanner, whose house is by the sea-side: 'he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.'

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed,

Moral men do neither. "All their works they do to be seen of men;" and in their heart there is "no good thing toward the Lord God of Israel." Comp. 1 Ki. xiv. 13; 2 Ch. xix. 3. Who ever hears of a man that "fears God," and that prays, and that instructs his household in religion, that depends on morality for salvation? (3) Cornelius was disposed to do the will of God as far as it was made known to him. Where this exists there is religion. The moral man is not. (4) Cornelius was willing to embrace a Saviour when he was made known to him. The moral man is not. He hears of a Saviour with unconcern; he listens to the message of God's mercy from year to year without embracing it. In all this there is an important difference between him and the Roman centurion; and while we hope that there may be many in pagan lands who are in the same state of mind that he was—disposed to do the will of God as far as made known, and therefore accepted and saved by his mercy in the Lord Jesus, yet this cannot be adduced to encourage the hope of salvation in those who do know his will, and yet will not do it.

6. He lodgeth. He remains as a guest at his house. See ch. ix. 43. ¶ By the sea-side. Joppa was a seaport on the Mediterranean. Tanneries are erected on the margin of streams, or of any body of water, to convey away the filth produced in the operation of dressing skins.

7. A devout soldier. A pious man. This is an instance of the effect of piety in a military officer. Few men have more influence; and in this case the effect was seen not only in the piety of his family, but of this attending soldier. Such men have usually been supposed to be far from the influence of religion; but this instance shows that even the disadvantages of a camp are not neces-

8. And when, &c. "It has been remarked that from Joppa, Jonah was sent to preach to the Gentiles at Nineveh, and that from the same place Peter was sent to preach to the Gentiles at Cesarea" (Clarke).

9. Peter went up, &c. The small room in the second story, or on the roof of the house, was the usual place for retirement and prayer. See Notes on Mat. vi. 6; ix. 2. Even when there was no room constructed on the roof, the roof was a common resort for retirement and prayer. Around the edge a battlement or parapet was commonly made, within which a person could be quite retired from public view. "At Jaffa, the ancient Joppa," says Prof. Hackett (Illustrations of Scripture, p. 81), "where Peter was residing at the time of his vision on the house-top, I observed houses furnished with a wall around the roof, within which a person could sit or kneel without any exposure to the view of others, whether on the adjacent houses or in the streets. At Jerusalem I entered the house of a Jew early one morning, and found a member of the family, sitting secluded and alone on one of the lower roofs, engaged in reading the Scriptures and offering his prayers."

Dr. Thomson (Land and the Book, vol. i. p. 52) says of these roofs, "When surrounded with battlements, and shaded by vines trained over them, they afford a very agreeable retreat, even at the sixth hour of the day—the time when Peter was favoured with that singular vision, by which the kingdom of heaven was thrown open to the Gentile world." ¶ About the sixth hour. About twelve o'clock, or at noon. The Jews had two stated seasons of prayer, morning and evening. But it is evident that the more pious of the Jews frequently added a third season of devotion, probably at noon. Thus David says (Ps. lv.

unto the city, <sup>k</sup>Peter went up upon the house-top to pray, about the sixth hour:

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten; but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

17), “Evening and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud.” Thus Daniel “kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed,” Da. vi. 10, 13. It was also customary in the early Christian church to offer prayer at the third, sixth, and ninth hours (Clem. Alex. as quoted by Doddridge). Christians will, however, have not merely stated seasons for prayer, but they will seize upon moments of leisure, and when their feelings strongly incline them to it, to pray.

10. And he became very hungry. From the connection, where it is said that they were making ready, that is, preparing a meal, it would seem that this was the customary hour of dining. The Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, however, had but two meals, and the first was usually taken about ten or eleven o’clock. This meal usually consisted of fruit, milk, cheese, &c. Their principal meal was about six or seven in the afternoon, at which time they observed their feasts. See Jahn’s Bibl. Archæol. § 145. ¶ He fell into a trance. Greek, an ecstasy, ἱεραις, fell upon him. In ch. xi. 5, Peter says that in a trance he saw a vision. The word trance, or ecstasy, denotes a state of mind when the attention is absorbed in a particular train of thought, so that the external senses are partially or entirely suspended. It is a high species of abstraction from external objects, when the mind becomes forgetful of surrounding things, and is fixed solely on its own thoughts, so that appeals to the external senses do not readily rouse it. The soul seems to have passed out of the body, and to be conversant only with spiritual essences. Thus Balaam is said to have seen the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance (Nu. xxiv. 4, 16); thus Paul, in praying in the temple, fell into a trance (Ac. xxii. 17); and perhaps a similar state is described in 2 Co. xii. 2. This effect seems to be caused by so intense unto him, as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth;

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord;

and absorbing a train of thought as to overcome the senses of the body, or wholly to withdraw the mind from their influence, and to fix it on the unseen object that engrosses it. It is often a high state of reverie, or absence of mind, which Dr. Rush describes as “induced by the stimulus of ideas of absent subjects, being so powerful as to destroy the perception of present objects” (Discourses of the Mind, p. 310, ed. Philada. 1812). In the case of Peter, however, there was a supernatural influence that drew his attention away from present objects.

11. And saw heaven opened. Ch. vii. 56. See Notes on Mat. iii. 16. This language is derived from a common mode of speaking in the Hebrew Scriptures, as if the sky above us was a solid, vast expanse, and as if it were opened to present an opportunity for anything to descend. It is language that is highly figurative. ¶ And a certain vessel. See Notes on ch. ix. 15. ¶ As it had been. It is important to mark this expression. The sacred writer does not say that Peter literally saw such an object descending; but he uses this as an imperfect description of the vision. It was not a literal descent of a vessel, but it was such a kind of representation to him, producing the same impression, and the same effect, as if such a vessel had descended. ¶ Knit at the four corners. Bound, united, or tied. The corners were collected, as would be natural in putting anything into a great sheet.

12. Wherein, &c. This particular vision was suggested by Peter’s hunger, ver. 10. It was designed, however, to teach him an important lesson in regard to the introduction of all nations to the gospel. Its descending from heaven may have been an intimation that that religion which was about to abolish the distinction between the Jews and other nations was of divine origin. See Re. xxi. 2.

for I have never eaten "any thing that is common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

14. I have never eaten, &c. In the Old Testament God had made a distinction between clean and unclean animals. See Le. xi. 2-27; De. xiv. 3-20. This law remained in the Scriptures, and Peter pled that he had never violated it, implying that he could not now violate it, as it was a law of God, and that, as it was unrepealed, he did not dare to act in a different manner from what it required. Between that law and the command which he now received in the vision there was an apparent variation, and Peter naturally referred to the well-known and admitted written law. One design of the vision was to show him that that law was now to pass away. ¶ That is common. This word properly denotes that which pertains to all, but among the Jews, who were bound by special laws, and who were prohibited from many things that were freely indulged in by other nations, the word common came to be opposed to the word sacred, and to denote that which was in common use among the heathens, hence that which was profane, or polluted. Here it means the same as profane, or forbidden. ¶ Unclean. Ceremonially unclean; that is, that which is forbidden by the ceremonial law of Moses.

15. What God hath cleansed. What God has pronounced or declared pure. If God has commanded you to do a thing, it is not impure or wrong. Perhaps Peter would suppose that the design of this vision was to instruct him that the distinction between clean and unclean food, as recognized by the Jews, was about to be abolished, ver. 17. But the result showed that it had a higher and more important design. It was to show him that they who had been esteemed by the Jews as unclean or profane—the entire Gentile world—might now be admitted to similar privileges with the Jews. That barrier was to be broken down, and the whole world was to be admitted to the same fellowship and privileges in the gospel. See

Ep. ii. 14; Ga. iii. 28. It was also true that the ceremonial laws of the Jews in regard to clean and unclean beasts was to pass away, though this was not directly taught in this vision. But when once the barrier was removed that separated the Jews and Gentiles, all the laws which were founded on such a distinction, and which were framed to keep up such a distinction, passed away of course. The ceremonial laws of the Jews were designed solely to keep up the distinction between them and other nations. When the distinction was abolished; when other nations were to be admitted to the same privileges, the laws which were made to keep up such a difference received their death-blow, and expired of course. For it is a maxim of all law, that when the reason why a law was made ceases to exist, the law becomes obsolete. Yet it was not easy to convince the Jews that their laws ceased to be binding. This point the apostles laboured to establish; and from this point arose most of the difficulties between the Jewish and Gentile converts to Christianity. See Ac. xv., and Ro. xiv., xv.

16. This was done thrice. Three times, doubtless to impress the mind of Peter with the certainty and importance of the vision. Comp. Ge. xli. 32.

17. Doubted in himself. Doubted in his own mind. He was perplexed, and did not know how to understand it. ¶ Behold, the men, &c. We see here an admirable arrangement of the events of Providence to fit each other. Every part of this transaction is made to harmonize with every other part; and it was so arranged that just in the moment when the mind of Peter was filled with perplexity, the very event should occur which would relieve him of his embarrassment. Such a coincidence is not uncommon. An event of divine Providence may be as clear an expression of his will, and may as certainly serve to indicate our duty, as the most

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius, and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek; what is the cause wherefore ye are come?

22 And they said, <sup>t</sup>Cornelius, the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and <sup>t</sup>of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, <sup>t</sup>and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

24 And the morrow after they entered into Cesarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.

25 And as Peter was coming in Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet and worshipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, saying, "Stand up; I myself also am a man.

manifest revelation would do, and a state of mind may, by an arrangement of circumstances, be produced that will be extremely perplexing until some event shall occur, or some field of usefulness shall open, that will exactly correspond to it, and indicate to us the will of God. We should then carefully mark the events of God's providence. We should observe and record the train of our own thoughts, and should watch with interest any event that occurs, when we are perplexed and embarrassed, to obtain, if possible, an expression of the will of God. ¶ Before the gate. The word here rendered "gate," πύλη, refers properly to the porch or principal entrance to an Eastern house. See Notes on Mat. ix. 2; xxvi. 71. It does not mean, as with us, a gate, but rather a door. See Ac. xii. 13.

19. The Spirit. See Notes on Ac. viii. 29. Comp. Is. lxv. 24, "And it shall come to pass, that before they call I will answer," &c.

22. To hear words of thee. To be instructed by thee.

23. And lodged them. They remained with him through the night. Four days were occupied before Peter met Cornelius at Cesarea. On the first the angel appeared to Cornelius. On the second the messengers arrived at Joppa, ver. 9. On the third, Peter returned with them, ver. 23; and on the fourth they arrived at Cesarea, ver. 24, 30. ¶ And certain brethren. Some Christians. They were six in number, ch. xi. 12. It was usual for the early Christians to accompany the apostles in their journeys. See Ro. xv. 24; Ac. xv. 3; 3 Jn. 6; 1 Co. xvi. 6, 11. As this was an important event in the history of the church—the bearing of the gospel to a Gentile—it was more natural and proper that Peter should be attended with others.

24. His kinsmen. His relatives, or the connections of his family. A man may often do vast good by calling his kindred and friends to hear the gospel.

25. Fell down at his feet. This was an act of profound regard for him as an ambassador of God. In Oriental countries it was usual for persons to prostrate themselves at length on the ground before men of rank and honour. ¶ Worshipped him. This does not mean religious homage, but civil respect—the homage, or profound regard which was due to one in honour. See Notes on Mat. ii. 2.

26. Stand up, &c. This does not imply that Peter supposed that Cornelius intended to do him religious reverence. It was practically saying to him, "I am nothing more than a man as thou art, and pretend to no right to such profound respects as these, but am ready in civil life to show thee all the respect that is due" (Doddridge).

27. And as he talked with him. He probably met him at the door, or at a small distance from the house. It was he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that 'it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but "God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for. I ask, therefore, for what intent ye have sent for me?

30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house; and, behold, a man **stood* before me in bright clothing,

an expression of joy thus to go out to meet him.

28. It is an unlawful thing. This was not explicitly enjoined by Moses, but it seemed to be implied in his institutions, and was, at anyrate, the common understanding of the Jews. The design was to keep them a separate people. To do this, Moses forbade alliances by contract, or marriage, with the surrounding nations, which were idolatrous. See Le. xviii. 24-30; De. vii. 3-12; comp. Ezr. ix. 11, 12. This command the Jews perverted, and explained it as referring to intercourse of all kinds, even to the exercise of friendly offices and commercial transactions. Comp. Jn. iv. 9. ¶ Of another nation. Greek, another tribe. It refers here to all who were not Jews. ¶ God hath showed me. Comp. ch. xv. 8, 9. He had showed him by the vision, ver. 11, 12. ¶ Any man common or unclean. See Notes on ver. 14. That no man was to be regarded as excluded from the opportunity of salvation, or was to be despised and abhorred. The gospel was to be preached to all; the barrier between Jews and Gentiles was broken down, and all were to be regarded as capable of being saved.

29. Without gainsaying. Without saying anything against it; without hesitation or reluctance. ¶ I ask, therefore, &c. The main design for which Cornelius had sent for him had been mentioned to Peter by the messenger, ver.

31 And said, Cornelius, 'thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter: he is lodged in the house of one Simon, a tanner, by the seaside; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth, I perceive y ver. 4,&c.; Da. 10.12; He. 6.10. z De. 5.27.

22. But Peter now desired from his own lips a more particular statement of the considerations which had induced him to send for him. ¶ For what intent. For what purpose or design.

30. Four days ago. See Notes on ver. 23. ¶ Until this hour. The ninth hour, or three o'clock, P.M. See ver. 3. ¶ A man. Called, in ver. 3, an angel. He had the appearance of a man. Comp. Mar. xvi. 5. ¶ In bright clothing. See Notes on Mat. xxviii. 3.

33. Thou hast well done. This is an expression of grateful feeling. ¶ Before God. In the presence of God. It is implied that they believed that God saw them; that they were assembled at his command, and that they were disposed to listen to his instructions.

34. Then Peter opened his mouth. Began to speak, Mat. v. 2. ¶ Of a truth. Truly, evidently. That is, I have evidence here that God is no respecter of persons. ¶ Is no respecter of persons. The word used here denotes the act of showing favour to one on account of rank, family, wealth, or partiality arising from any cause. It is explained in Ja. ii. 1-4. A judge is a respecter of persons when he favours one of the parties on account of private friendship, or because he is a man of rank, influence, or power, or because he belongs to the same political party, &c. The Jews supposed that they were peculiarly favoured by God, and that salvation was not extended to other nations, and that the fact of being a Jew entitled

them to this favour. Peter here says that he had learned the error of this doctrine, and that a man is not to be accepted because he is a Jew, nor to be excluded because he is a Gentile. The barrier is broken down ; the offer is made to all ; God will save all on the same principle ; not by external privileges or rank, but according to their character. The same doctrine is elsewhere explicitly stated in the New Testament, Ro. ii. 11; Ep. vi. 9; Col. iii. 25. It may be observed here that this does not refer to the doctrine of divine sovereignty or election. It simply affirms that God will not save a man because he is a Jew, or because he is rich, or learned, or of elevated rank, or on account of external privileges ; nor will he exclude a man because he is destitute of these privileges. But this does not affirm that he will not make a difference in their character, and then treat them according to their character, nor that he will not pardon whom he pleases. That is a different question. The interpretation of this passage should be limited strictly to the case in hand—to mean that God will not accept and save a man on account of external national rank and privileges. That he will not make a difference on other grounds is not affirmed here, nor anywhere in the Bible. Comp. 1 Co. iv. 7; Ro. xii. 6. It is worthy of remark further, that the most strenuous advocate for the doctrines of sovereignty and election—the apostle Paul—is also the one that laboured most to establish the doctrine that God is no respecter of persons—that is, that there is no difference between the Jews and Gentiles in regard to the way of salvation ; that God would not save a man because he was a Jew, nor destroy a man because he was a Gentile. Yet in regard to the whole race viewed as lying on a level, he maintained that God has a right to exercise the prerogatives of a sovereign, and to have mercy on whom he will have mercy. The doctrine may be thus stated. (1) The barrier between the Jews and Gentiles was broken down. (2) All men thus were placed on a level—none to be saved by external privileges, none to be lost by the want of them. (3) All were guilty (Ro. i., ii.,

iii.), and none had a claim on God. (4) If any were saved, it would be by God's showing mercy on such of this common mass as he chose. See Ro. iii. 22; x. 12; ii. 11; Ga. ii. 6; comp. with Ro. ix. and Ep. i.

35. But in every nation, &c. This is given as a reason for what Peter had just said, that God was no respecter of persons. The sense is, that he now perceived that the favours of God were not confined to the Jew, but might be extended to all others on the same principle. The remarkable circumstances here—the vision to him, and to Cornelius, and the declaration that the alms of Cornelius were accepted—now convinced him that the favours of God were no longer to be confined to the Jewish people, but might be extended to all. This was what the vision was designed to teach, and to communicate this knowledge to the apostles was an important step in their work of spreading the gospel. ¶ In every nation. Among all people. Jews or Gentiles. Acceptance with God does not depend on the fact of being descended from Abraham, or of possessing external privileges, but on the state of the heart. ¶ He that feareth him. This is put for piety toward God in general. See Notes on ch. ix. 31. It means that he who honours God and keeps his law ; he who is a true worshipper of God, according to the light and privileges which he has, is approved by him, as giving evidence that he is his friend. ¶ And worketh righteousness. Does that which is right and just. This refers to his conduct toward man. He that discharges conscientiously his duty to his fellow-men, and evinces by his conduct that he is a righteous man. These two things comprehend the whole of religion, the sum of all the requirements of God—piety toward God, and justice toward men ; and as Cornelius had showed these, he showed that, though a Gentile, he was actuated by true religion. We may observe here, (1) That it is not said that Cornelius was accepted on account of his good works. Those works were simply an evidence of true piety in the heart ; a proof that he feared and loved God, and not a meritorious ground of acceptance. (2) He improved the light which he had. (3) He embraced the Saviour when he was offered to him. This circumstance makes an essential difference between Cornelius and those who depend on their morality in Christian lands. They do not embrace the Lord Jesus, and they are, therefore, totally unlike the Roman centurion. His example should not be pled, therefore, by those who neglect the Saviour, for it furnishes no evidences that they will be accepted when they are totally unlike him.

36. The word. That is, this is the word, or the doctrine. Few passages in the New Testament have perplexed critics more than this. It has been difficult to ascertain to what the term "word" in the accusative case (τὸν λόγον) here refers. Our translation would lead us to suppose that it is synonymous with what is said in the following verse. But it should be remarked that the term used there, and translated "word," as if it were a repetition of what is said here, is a different term. It is not λόγον, logon, but ῥῆμα, rhēma—a word, a thing; not a doctrine. I understand the first term "word" to be an introduction of the doctrine which Peter set forth, and to be governed by a preposition understood. The whole passage may be thus expressed: Peter had been asked to teach Cornelius and his assembled friends. It was expected, of course, that he would instruct him in regard to the true doctrines of religion—the doctrine which had been communicated to the Jews. He commences, therefore, with a statement respecting the true doctrine of the Messiah, or the way of salvation which was now made known to the Jews. "In regard to the word, or the doctrine which God sent to the children of Israel, proclaiming peace through Jesus Christ (who is Lord of all), you know already that which was done, or the transactions which occurred throughout all Judea, from Galilee, where he commenced his ministry after John had preached, that this was by Jesus Christ, since God had anointed him," &c. Peter here assumes that Cornelius had some knowledge of the principal events of the life of the Saviour, though it was obscure and imperfect; and his discourse professes only to state this more fully and clearly. ¶ Unto the children of Israel. To the Jews. The Messiah was promised to them, and spent his life among them. ¶ Preaching. That is, proclaiming, or announcing. God did this by Jesus Christ. ¶ Peace. This word sometimes refers to the peace or union which was made between Jews and Gentiles, by breaking down the wall of division between them. But it is here used in a wider sense, to denote peace or reconciliation with God. He announced the way by which man might be reconciled to God, and might find peace. ¶ He is Lord of all. That is, Jesus Christ. He is sovereign, or ruler of both Jews and Gentiles, and hence Peter saw the propriety of preaching the gospel to one as to the other. See Jn. xvii. 2; Mat. xxviii. 18; Ep. i. 20-22. The word Lord here used does not necessarily imply divinity, but only that the Lord Jesus, as Mediator, had been constituted or appointed lord or ruler over all nations. It is true, however, that this is a power which we cannot conceive to have been delegated to one that was not divine. Comp. Ro. ix. 5.

37. That word. Greek, ῥῆμα—a different word from that in the previous verse. It may be translated thing as well as word. ¶ Which was published. Greek, which was done. "You know, though it may be imperfectly, what was done or accomplished in Judea," &c. ¶ Throughout all Judea. The miracles of Christ were not confined to any place, but were wrought in every part of the land. For an account of the divisions of Palestine, see Notes on Mat. ii. 22. ¶ And began, &c. Greek, having been begun in Galilee. Galilee was not far from Cesarea. There was, therefore, the more probability that Cornelius had heard of what had occurred there. Indeed, the gospels themselves furnish the highest evidence that the fame of the miracles of Christ spread into all the surrounding regions.

38. How God anointed, &c. That is, set him apart to this work, and was with him, acknowledging him as the Messiah. See Notes on Mat. i. 1. ¶ With the Holy Ghost. See Notes on Lu. iv. 19. The act of anointing kings and priests seems to have been emblematic of the influences of the Holy Ghost. Here it means that God imparted to him the influences of the Holy Spirit, thus consecrating him for the work of the Messiah. See Mat. iii. 16, 17; Jn. iii. 34, "God giveth not the Holy Spirit by measure unto him." ¶ And with power. The power of healing the sick, raising the dead, &c. ¶ Who went about doing good. Whose main business it was to travel from place to place to do good. He did not go for applause, or wealth, or comfort, or ease, but to diffuse happiness as far as possible. This is the simple but sublime record of his life. It gives us a distinct portrait of his character, as he is distinguished from conquerors and kings, from false prophets and from the mass of men. ¶ And healing, &c. Restoring to health. ¶ All that were oppressed of the devil. All that were possessed by him. See Notes on Mat. iv. 23, 24. ¶ God was with him. God appointed him, and furnished by his miracles the highest evidence that he had sent him. His miracles were such that they could be wrought only by God.

39. And we are witnesses. We who are apostles. See Notes on Lu. xxiv. 48. ¶ In the land of the Jews. In the country of Judea. ¶ Whom they slew, &c. Our translation would seem to imply that there were two separate acts—first slaying him, and then suspending him. But this is neither according to truth nor to the Greek text. The original is simply, "whom they put to death, suspending him on a tree." ¶ On a tree. On a cross. See Notes on ch. v. 30.

40. Showed him openly. Manifestly; so that there could be no deception, no doubt of his resurrection.

41. Not to all the people. Not to the nation at large, for this was not necessary in order to establish the truth of his resurrection. He, however, showed himself to many persons. See the Harmony of the Accounts of the Resurrection of Jesus at the close of the Notes on Matthew. ¶ Chosen of God. Appointed by God, or set apart by his authority through Jesus Christ. ¶ Who did eat and drink, &c. And by doing this he furnished the clearest possible proof that he was truly risen; that they were not deceived by an illusion of the imagination or by a phantasm. Comp. the references in the margin. ¶ Of quick. The living. The doctrine of the New Testament is, that those who are alive when the Lord Jesus shall return to judge the world, will be caught up in vast numbers like clouds, to meet him in the air, without seeing death, 1 Th. iv. 16, 17. Yet before this they will experience such a change in their bodies as shall fit them for the judgment and for their eternal residence—a change which will liken them to those who have died, and have risen from the dead. What this change will be, speculation may fancy, but the Bible has not revealed. See 1 Co. xv.

43. To him give, &c. See Notes on Lu. xxiv. 27, 44. ¶ That through his name, &c. This was implied in what the prophets said. See Ro. x. 11. It was not, indeed, expressly affirmed that they who believed in him should be pardoned, but this was implied in what they said. They promised a Messiah, and their religion consisted mainly in believing in a Messiah to come. See the reasoning of the apostle Paul in Ro. iv.

44. The Holy Ghost fell, &c. Endowing them with the power of speaking with other tongues, ver. 46. Of this the apostle Peter makes much in his argument in ch. xi. 17. By this, God showed that the Gentiles were to be admitted to the same privileges with the Jews, and to the blessings of salvation in the same manner. Comp. ch. ii. 1-4. ¶ Which heard the word. The word of God; the message of the gospel.

45. And they of the circumcision. Who had been Jews. ¶ Were astonished. Were amazed that Gentiles should be admitted to the same favour as themselves.

46. Speak with tongues. In other languages than their own native tongue, ch. ii. 4. ¶ And magnify God. And praise God.

47. Can any man forbid water, &c. They have shown that they are favoured in the same way as the Jewish converts. God has manifested himself to them as he did to the Jews on the day of Pentecost. Is it not clear, therefore, that they are entitled to the privilege of Christian baptism? The expression here

47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

used is one that would naturally refer to water as being brought; that is, to a small quantity; and would seem to imply that they were baptized, not by immersion, but by pouring or sprinkling.

48. And he commanded them, &c. Why Peter did not himself baptize them is unknown. It might be, perhaps, because he chose to make use of the ministry of the brethren who were with him, to prevent the possibility of future cavil. If they did it themselves, they could not so easily be led by the Jews to find fault with it. It may be added, also, that it seems not to have been the practice of the apostles themselves to baptize very extensively. See 1 Co. i. 14-17, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel."

CHAPTER XI.

1. And the apostles and brethren. The Christians who were in Judea. ¶ Heard, &c. So extraordinary an occurrence as that at Cesarea, the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Gentiles, and their reception into the church, would excite attention, and be likely to produce much sensitiveness in regard to the conduct of Peter and those with him. It was so contrary to all the ideas of the Jews, that it is not to be wondered at that it led to contention.

2. They that were of the circumcision. The Christians who had been converted from among the Jews. ¶ Contended with him. Disputed; reproved him; charged him with being in fault. This is one of the circumstances which show conclusively that the apostles and early Christians did not regard Peter as having any particular supremacy over the church, or to Jerusalem, "they that were of the circumcision contended with him,

3 Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying,

5 I<sup>b</sup> was in the city of Joppa, praying; and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me:

6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay, and eat.

8 But I said, Not so, Lord; for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cesarea unto me.

12 And<sup>c</sup> the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover, these six brethren accompanied me; and we entered into the man's house:

13 And he showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14 Who shall tell thee<sup>d</sup> words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak, the as being in any peculiar sense the vicar of Christ upon earth. If he had been regarded as having the authority which the Roman Catholics claim for him, they would have submitted at once to what he had thought proper to do. But the primitive Christians had no such idea of his authority. This claim for Peter is not only opposed to this place, but to every part of the New Testament.

3. And didst eat with them. See Notes on ch. x. 13, 14.

4. But Peter rehearsed. Greek, Peter beginning, explained it to them in order; that is, he began with the vision which he saw, and gave a narrative of the various events in order, as they actually occurred. A simple and unvarnished statement of facts is usually the best way of disarming prejudice and silencing opposition. Opposition most commonly arises from prejudice, or from false and exaggerated statements, and such opposition can be best removed, not by angry contention, but by an unvarnished relation of facts. In most cases prejudice will thus be disarmed, and opposition will die away, as was the case in regard to the admission of the Gentiles to the church. ¶ And expounded it. Explained it; stated it as it actually occurred. ¶ In order. One event after another, as they happened. He thus showed that his own mind had been as much biased as theirs, and stated in what manner his prejudices had been removed. It often happens that those who become most zealous and devoted in any new measures for the advancement of religion were as much opposed to them at first as others. They are led from one circumstance to another, until their prejudices die away, and the providence and Spirit of God indicate clearly their duty.

5-14. See ch. x. 9-33.

14. And all thy house. Thy family. This is a circumstance which is omitted in the account in ch. x. It is said, however, in ch. x. 2, that Cornelius feared God with all his house. It is evident from ch. x. 48 that the family also received the ordinance of baptism, and was received into the church.

15. And as I began to speak. Or, while I was speaking. ¶ The Holy Ghost, &c. Ch. x. 44.

17. What was I. What power or right had I to oppose the manifest will of God that the Gentiles should be received into the Christian church. ¶ Withstand God. Oppose or resist God. He had indicated his will; he had showed his intention to save the Gentiles; and the prejudices of Peter were all overcome. One of the best means of destroying prejudice and false opinions is a powerful revival of religion. More erroneous doctrines and unholy feelings are overcome in such scenes than in all the bigoted and fierce contentions that have ever taken place. If men wish to root error out of the church, they should strive by all means to promote everywhere revivals of pure and undefiled religion. The Holy Spirit more easily and effectually silences false doctrine, and destroys heresy, than all the denunciations of fierce theologians; all the alarms of heated zealots for orthodoxy; and all the anathemas which professed love for the purity of the church ever utters from the icebergs on which such champions usually seek their repose and their home.

18. They held their peace. They were convinced, as Peter had been, by the manifest indications of the will of God. ¶ Then hath God, &c. The great truth is in this manner established that the doors of the church are opened to the entire Gentile world—a truth that was worthy of this remarkable interposition. It at once changed the views of the apostles and of the early Christians; gave them new, large, and liberal conceptions of the gospel; broke down their long-cherished prejudices; taught them to look upon all men as their brethren; impressed their hearts with the truth, never after to be eradicated, that the Christian church was founded for the wide world, and that it opened the same glorious pathway to life wher-

Christ, 'what was I, that I could withstand God?

18 When they heard these things they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, **Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.*

19 Now<sup>j</sup> they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and ever man might be found, whether with the narrow prejudice of the Jew, or amidst the degradations of the pagan world. To this truth we owe our hopes; for this, we should thank the God of heaven; and, impressed with it, we should seek to invite the entire world to partake with us of the rich provisions of the gospel of the blessed God.

19. Now they, &c. This verse introduces a new train of historical remark; and from this point the course of the history of the Acts of the Apostles takes a new direction. Thus far, the history had recorded chiefly the preaching of the gospel to the Jews. From this point the history records the efforts made to convert the Gentiles. It begins with the labours put forth in the important city of Antioch (ver. 19, 20); and as, during the work of grace that occurred in that city, the labours of the apostle Paul were especially sought (ver. 25, 26), the sacred writer thenceforth confines the history mainly to his travels and labours. ¶ Which were scattered abroad. See ch. viii. 1. ¶ As far as Phenice. Phœnix, or Phœnicia, was a province of Syria, which in its largest sense comprehended a narrow strip of country lying on the eastern coast of the Mediterranean, and extending from Antioch to the borders of Egypt. But Phenice Proper extended only from the cities of Laodicea to Tyre, and included only the territories of Tyre and Sidon. This country was called sometimes simply Canaan. See Notes on Mat. xv. 22. ¶ And Cyprus. An island off the coast of Asia Minor, in the Mediterranean Sea. See Notes on Ac. iv. 36. ¶ And Antioch. There were two cities of this name, one situated in Pisidia in Asia Minor (see ch. xiii. 14); the other, referred to here, was situated on the river Orontes, and was long the capital of Syria. It was built by Seleucus Nicanor, and was called Antioch in honour of his father Antiochus. It was founded three hundred and one years before Christ. It is not mentioned in the Old Testament, but is several times mentioned in the Apocrypha and in the New Testament. It was long the most powerful city of the East, and was inferior only to Seleucia and Alexandria. It was famous for the fact that the right of citizenship was conferred by Seleucus on the Jews as well as the Greeks and Macedonians, so that here they had the privilege of worship in their own way without molestation. It is probable that the Christians would be regarded merely as a sect of Jews, and would be here suffered to celebrate their worship without interruption. On this account it may have been that the early Christians regarded this city as of such particular importance, because here they could find a refuge from persecution, and be permitted to worship God without molestation. This city was honoured as a Roman colony, a metropolis, and an asylum. It was large; was almost square; had many gates; was adorned with fine fountains; and was a city of great opulence. It was, however, subject to earthquakes, and was several times nearly destroyed. In the year 588 it experienced an earthquake in which 60,000 persons were destroyed. It was conquered by the Saracens in A.D. 638, and, after some changes and revolutions, was taken during the Crusades, after a long and bloody siege, by Godfrey of Bouillon, June 3, A.D. 1098. In 1268 it was taken by the Sultan of Egypt, who demolished it, and placed it under the dominion of the Turk. Antioch is now called Antakia, and contains about 10,000 inhabitants (Robinson's Calmet). "There was everything in the situation and circumstances of the city," say Conybeare and Howson (Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 121), "to make it a place of concourse for all classes and kinds of people. By its harbour of Seleucia it was in communication with all the trade of the Mediterranean; and, through the open country behind the Lebanon, it was conveniently approached by the caravans from Mesopotamia and Arabia. It united the inland advantages of Aleppo with the maritime opportunities of Smyrna. It was almost an Oriental Rome, in which all the forms of the civilized life of the empire found some representative. Through the first two centuries of the Christian era it was what Constantinople became afterward, 'the Gate of the East.'"

"If any city in the first century was worthy to be called the Heathen Queen and Metropolis of the East, that city was Antioch. She was represented, in a famous allegorical statue, as a female figure, seated on a rock and crowned, with the river Orontes at her feet" (Conybeare and Howson, vol. i. p. 125).

¶ Preaching the word. The word of God, the gospel.

¶ To none but unto the Jews only. They had the common prejudices of the Jews, that the offers of salvation were to be made only to Jews.

20. W're men of Cyprus and Cyrene. Were natives of Cyprus and Cyrene. Cyrene was a province and city of Libya in Africa. It is at present called Cairoan, and is situated in the kingdom of Barca. In Cyprus the Greek language was spoken; and from the vicinity of Cyrene to Alexandria, it is probable that the Greek language was spoken there also. From this circumstance it might have happened that they were led more particularly to address the Grecians who were in Antioch. It is possible, however, that they might have heard of the vision which Peter saw, and felt themselves called on to preach the gospel to the Gentiles.

¶ Spake unto the Grecians —πέρηστοι Ἑλληνοτάτες. To the Hellenists. This word usually denotes in the New Testament those Jews residing in foreign lands, who spoke the Greek language. See Notes on ch. vi. 1. But to them the gospel had been already preached; and yet in this place it is evidently the intention of Luke to affirm that the men of Cyprus and Cyrene preached to those who were not Jews, and that thus their conduct was distinguished from those (ver. 19) who preached to the Jews only. It is thus manifest that we are here required to understand the Gentiles as those who were addressed by the men of Cyprus and Cyrene. In many MSS. the word used here is 'Ερνηται, Greeks, instead unto the "Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.

21 And° the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, "and turned unto the Lord.

22 Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem; and they of Hellenists. This reading has been adopted by Griesbach, and is found in the Syriac, the Arabic, the Vulgate, and in many of the fathers. The Aethiopic version reads "to the Gentiles." There is no doubt that this is the true reading; and that the sacred writer means to say that the gospel was here preached to those who were not Jews, for all were called Greeks by them who were not Jews, Ro. i. 16. The connection would lead us to suppose that they had heard of what had been done by Peter, and that, imitating his example, they preached the gospel now to the Gentiles also.

21. And the hand of the Lord. See Notes on Lu. i. 66. Comp. Ps. lxxx. 17. The meaning is, that God showed them favour, and evinced his power in the conversion of their hearers.

22. Then tidings, &c. The church at Jerusalem heard of this. It was natural that so remarkable an occurrence as the conversion of the Gentiles, and the extraordinary success of the gospel in a splendid and mighty city, should be reported at Jerusalem, and excite deep interest there. ¶ And they sent forth. To aid the disciples there, and to give them their sanction. They had done a similar thing in the revival which occurred in Samaria. See Notes on ch. viii. 14. ¶ Barnabas. See ch. iv. 36, 37. He was a native of Cyprus, and was probably well acquainted with Antioch. He was, therefore, peculiarly qualified for the work on which they sent him.

23. Had seen the grace of God. The favour, or mercy of God, in converting sinners to himself. ¶ Was glad. Approved of what had been done in preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, and rejoiced that God had poured down his Spirit on them. The effect of a revival is to produce joy in the hearts of all those who love the Saviour. ¶ And exhorted them all. Entreated them. They would be exposed to many trials and temptations, and he sought to secure their firm adherence to the cause of religion. ¶ That with purpose of heart. With a firm mind; with a fixed, settled resolution that they would make this their settled plan of life, their main object. A purpose, πρόθεσμός, is a resolution of the mind, a plan, or intention, Ro. viii. 28; Ep. i. 11; iii. 11; 2 Ti. i. 9; iii. 10. It is especially a resolution of the mind in regard to future conduct, and the doctrine of Barnabas here was, undoubtedly, that it should be a regular, fixed, determined plan or design in their minds that they would henceforward adhere to God. Such a plan should be formed by all Christians in the beginning of their Christian life, and without such a plan there can be no evidence of piety. We may also remark that such a plan is one of the heart. It is not simply of the understanding, but is of the entire mind, including the will and affections. It is the leading principle; the strongest affection; the guiding purpose of the will to adhere to God, and, unless this is the prevalent, governing desire of the heart, there can be no evidence of conversion. ¶ That they would cleave. Greek, that they would remain; that is, that they would adhere constantly and faithfully attached to the Lord.

24. For he was a good man. This is given as a reason why he was so eminently successful. It is not said that he was a man of distinguished talents or learning; that he was a splendid or an imposing preacher; but simply that he was a man of an amiable, kind, and benevolent disposition—a pious, humble man of God. We should not undervalue talent, eloquence, or learning in the ministry, but we may remark that humble piety will often do more in the conversion of souls than the most splendid talents. No endowments can be a substitute for this. The real power of

a minister is concentrated in this, and without this his ministry will be barrenness and a curse. There is nothing on the earth so mighty as goodness. If a man wished to make the most of his powers, the true secret would be found in employing them for a good object, and suffering them to be wholly under the direction of benevolence. John Howard's purpose to do good has made a more permanent impression on the interests of the world than the talents of Alexander or Cæsar. ¶ Full of the Holy Ghost. Was entirely under the influence of the Holy Spirit. This is the second qualification here mentioned of a good minister. He was not merely exemplary for mildness and kindness of temper, but he was eminently a man of God. He was filled with the influences of the sacred Spirit, producing zeal, love, peace, joy, &c. See Ga. v. 22, 23. Comp. Notes on Ac. ii. 4. ¶ And of faith. Confidence in the truth and promises of God. This is the third qualification mentioned; and this was another cause of his success. He confided in God. He depended, not on his own strength, but on the strength of the arm of God. With these qualifications he engaged in his work, and he was successful. These qualifications should be sought by the ministry of the gospel. Others should not indeed be neglected, but a man's ministry will usually be successful only as he seeks to possess those endowments which distinguished Barnabas—a kind, tender, benevolent heart; devoted piety; the fulness of the Spirit's influence; and strong, unwavering confidence in the promises and power of God. ¶ And much people. Many people. Was added unto the Lord. Became Christians.

25. Then departed, &c. Why Barnabas sought Saul is not known. It is probable, however, that it was owing to the remarkable success which he had in Antioch. There was a great revival of religion, and there was need of additional labour. In such times the ministers of the gospel need additional help, as men in harvest-time need the aid of others. Saul was in this vicinity 'ch. ix. 30), and he was eminently fitted

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves to assist in this work. With him Barnabas was well acquainted (Ac. ix. 27), and probably there was no other one in that vicinity whose help he could obtain. ¶ To Tarsus. See Notes on Ac. ix. 11.

26. That a whole year. Antioch was a city exceedingly important in its numbers, wealth, and influence. It was for this reason, probably, that they spent so long a time there, instead of travelling in other places. The attention of the apostles was early and chiefly directed to cities, as being places of influence and centres of power. Thus Paul passed three years in the city of Ephesus, Ac. xx. 31. And thus he continued a year and a half at Corinth, Ac. xviii. 11. It may be added that the first churches were founded in cities; and the most remarkable success attended the preaching of the gospel in large towns. ¶ They assembled themselves, &c. They came together for worship. ¶ With the church. Margin, in the church. The Greek (ιν) will bear this construction; but there is no instance in the New Testament where the word church refers to the edifice in which a congregation worships. It evidently here means that Barnabas and Saul convened with the Christian assembly at proper times, through the space of a year, for the purposes of public worship. ¶ And the disciples were called Christians, &c. As this became the distinguishing name of the followers of Christ, it was worthy of record. The name was evidently given because they were the followers of Christ. But by whom, or with what views it was given, is not certainly known. Whether it was given by their enemies in derision, as the names Puritan, Quaker, Methodist, &c., have been; or whether the disciples assumed it themselves, or whether it was given by divine intimation, has been a matter of debate. That it was given in derision is not probable, for in the name Christian there was nothing dishonourable. To be the professed friends of the Messiah, or the Christ, was not with Jews a matter of reproach, for they all professed to be the friends of the Messiah. The cause of reproach with the disciples was that they regarded Jesus of Nazar-

eth as the Messiah; and hence, when their enemies wished to speak of them with contempt, they would speak of them as Galileans (Ac. ii. 7), or as Nazarenes (Ac. xxiv. 5), “And a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes.” It is possible that the name might have been given to them as a mere appellation, without intending to convey by it any reproach. The Gentiles would probably use this name to distinguish them, and it might have become thus the common appellation. It is evident from the New Testament, I think, that it was not designed as a term of reproach. It occurs but twice elsewhere: Ac. xxvi. 28, “Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian;” 1 Pe. iv. 16, “Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed.” No certain argument can be drawn in regard to the source of the name from the word which is used here. The word used here, and translated were called—xenouariw—means, (1) To transact any business; to be employed in accomplishing anything, &c. This is its usual signification in the Greek writers. (2) To be divinely admonished, to be instructed by a divine communication, &c., Mat. ii. 12; Lu. ii. 26; Ac. x. 22; He. viii. 5; xi. 7; xii. 25. (3) To be named, or called, in any way, without a divine communication, Ro. vii. 3, “She shall be called an adulteress.” It cannot be denied, however, that the most usual signification in the New Testament is that of a divine monition, or communication; and it is certainly possible that the name was given by Barnabas and Saul. I incline to the opinion, however, that it was given to them by the Gentiles who were there, simply as an appellation, without intending it as a name of reproach; and that it was readily assumed by the disciples as a name that would fitly designate them. If it had been assumed by them, or if Barnabas and Saul had conferred the name, the record would probably have been to this effect; not simply that they “were called,” but that they took this name, or that it was given by the apostles. It is, however, of little consequence whence the name originated. It soon became a name of reproach, and has usually been in all ages since, by the wicked, the gay, the licentious, and the ungodly. It is, however, an honoured name—the most honourable appellation that can be conferred on a mortal. It suggests at once to a Christian the name of his great Redeemer; the idea of our intimate relation to him; and the thought that we receive him as our chosen Leader, the source of our blessings, the author of our salvation, the fountain of our joys. It is the distinguishing name of all the redeemed. It is not that we belong to this or that denomination; it is not that our names are connected with high and illustrious ancestors; it is not that they are recorded in the books of heraldry; it is not that they stand high in courts, and among the gay, the fashionable, and the rich, that true honour is conferred on men. These are not the things that give distinction and peculiarity to the followers of the Redeemer. It is that they are Christians. This is their peculiar name; by this they are known; this at once suggests their character, their feelings, their doctrines, their hopes, their joys. This binds them all together—a name which rises above every other appellation; which unites in one the inhabitants of distant nations and tribes of men; which connects the extremes of society, and places them in most important respects on a common level; and which is a bond to unite in one family all those who love the Lord Jesus, though dwelling in different climes, speaking different languages, engaged in different pursuits of life, and occupying distant graves at death. He who lives according to the import of this name is the most blessed and eminent of mortals. This name shall be had in remembrance when the names of royalty shall be remembered no more, and when the appellations of nobility shall cease to amuse or to dazzle the world.

27. And in those days. While Barnabas and Saul were at Antioch. ¶ Came prophets. The word prophet denotes properly one who foretells future events. See Notes on Mat. vii. 15. It is sometimes used in the New Testament to denote simply religious teachers, instructors.

28 And there stood up one of them, named "Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should

ors sent from God, without particular reference to future events. To teach the people in the doctrines of religion was a part of the prophetic office, and this idea was only sometimes denoted by the use of the word. See Ro. xii. 6; 1 Co. xii. 10, 28; xiii. 2, 8; xiv. 3, 5, 24. These prophets seem to have been endowed in a remarkable manner with the knowledge of future events; with the power of explaining mysteries; and in some cases with the power of speaking foreign languages. In this case, it seems that one of them at least had the power of foretelling future events.

28. Named Agabus. This man is mentioned but in one other place in the New Testament. In Ac. xxi. 10, 11, he is referred to as having foretold that Paul would be delivered into the hands of the Gentiles. It is not expressly said that he was a Christian, but the connection seems to imply that he was. ¶ And signified. See Jn. xii. 33. The word usually denotes to indicate by signs, or with a degree of obscurity and uncertainty, not to declare in explicit language. But here it seems to denote simply to foretell, to predict. ¶ By the Spirit. Under the influence of the Spirit. He was inspired. ¶ A great dearth. A great famine. ¶ Throughout all the world. The word here used (sixouairiv) usually denotes the inhabitable world, the parts of the earth which are cultivated and occupied. It is sometimes used, however, to denote an entire land or country, in contradistinction from the parts of it: thus, to denote the whole of the land of Palestine in distinction from its parts; or to denote that an event would have reference to all the land, and not be confined to one or more parts, as Galilee, Samaria, &c. See Notes on Lu. ii. 1. The meaning of this prophecy evidently is, that the famine would be extensive; that it would not be confined to a single province or region, but that it would extend so far as that it might be called general. In fact, though the famine was particularly severe in Judea, it extended much farther. This prediction was uttered not long after the conversion of Saul, and probably, therefore, about the year be great dearth throughout all the world; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

29 Then the disciples, every

A.D. 38 or A.D. 40. Dr. Lardner has attempted to show that the prophecy had reference only to the land of Judea, though in fact there were famines in other places (Lardner's Works, vol. i. p. 253, 254, edit. London, 1829). ¶ Which came to pass, &c. This is one of the few instances in which the sacred writers in the New Testament affirm the fulfilment of a prophecy. The history having been written after the event, it was natural to give a passing notice of the fulfilment. ¶ In the days of Claudius Cæsar. The Roman emperor. He began his reign A.D. 41, and reigned thirteen years. He was at last poisoned by one of his wives, Agrippina, who wished to raise her son Nero to the throne. During his reign no less than four different famines are mentioned by ancient writers, one of which was particularly severe in Judea, and was the one, doubtless, to which the sacred writer here refers. (1) The first happened at Rome, and occurred in the first or second year of the reign of Claudius. It arose from the difficulties of importing provisions from abroad. It is mentioned by Dio, whose words are these: "There being a great famine, he (Claudius) not only took care for a present supply, but provided also for the time to come." He then proceeds to state the great expense which Claudius was at in making a good port at the mouth of the Tiber, and a convenient passage from thence up to the city (Dio, lib. lx. p. 671, 672; see also Suetonius, Claudius, cap. 20). (2) A second famine is mentioned as having been particularly severe in Greece. Of this famine Eusebius speaks in his Chronicon, p. 204: "There was a great famine in Greece, in which a modius of wheat (about half a bushel) was sold for six drachms." This famine is said by Eusebius to have occurred in the ninth year of the reign of Claudius. (3) In the latter part of his reign, A.D. 51, there was another famine at Rome, mentioned by Suetonius (Claud., cap. 18), and by Tacitus (Ann., xii. 43). Of this Tacitus says that it was so severe that it was deemed to be a divine judgment. (4) A fourth famine is mentioned as having occurred particularly in Judea. This is described by Josephus man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea:

(Antiq., b. xx. ch. 2, § 5). "A famine," says he, "did oppress them at the time (in the time of Claudius); and many people died for the want of what was necessary to procure food withal. Queen Helena sent some of her servants to Alexandria with money to buy a great quantity of corn, and others of them to Cyprus to bring a cargo of dried figs." This famine is described as having continued under the two procurators of Judea, Tiberius Alexander and Cassius Fadus. Fadus was sent into Judea, on the death of Agrippa, about the fourth year of the reign of Claudius, and the famine, therefore, continued probably during the fifth, sixth, and seventh years of the reign of Claudius. See Note in Whiston's Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. 2, § 5; also Lardner as quoted above. Of this famine, or of the want consequent on the famine, repeated mention is made in the New Testament.

29. Then the disciples. The Christians at Antioch. <sup>a</sup> According to his ability. According as they had prospered. It does not imply that they were rich, but that they rendered such aid as they could afford. <sup>b</sup> Determined to send relief. This arose not merely from their general sense of obligation to aid the poor, but they felt themselves particularly bound to assist their Jewish brethren. The obligation to relieve the temporal wants of those from whom important spiritual mercies are received is repeatedly enforced in the New Testament. Comp. Ro. xv. 25-27; 1 Co. xvi. 1, 2; 2 Cor. ix. 1, 2; Ga. ii. 10.

30. Sent it to the elders. Greek, to the presbyters. This is the first mention which we have in the New Testament of elders, or presbyters, in the Christian church. The word literally denotes aged men, but in the Jewish synagogue it was a name of office merely. It is clear, however, I think, that the elders of the Jewish synagogue here are not included, for the relief was intended for the "brethren" (ver. 29); that is, the Christians who were at Jerusalem, and it is not probable that a charity like this would have been intrusted to the hands of Jewish elders. The connection here does not enable us to determine anything about the sense in which the word was used. I think it probable that it does not refer to officers in the church, but that it means simply that the charity was intrusted to the aged, prudent, and experienced men in the church, for distribution among the members. Calvin supposes that the apostles were particularly intended. But this is not probable. It is possible that the deacons, who were probably aged men, may be here particularly referred to, but it seems more probable that the charity was sent to the aged members of the church without respect to their office, to be distributed according to their discretion.

CHAPTER XII.

1. Now about that time. That is, during the time that the famine existed, or the time when Barnabas and Saul went up to Jerusalem. This was probably about the fifth or sixth year of the reign of Claudius, not far from A.D. 47.

<sup>a</sup> Herod the king. This was Herod Agrippa. The Syriac so renders it expressly, and the chronology requires us so to understand it. He was a grandson of Herod the Great, and one of the sons of Aristobulus, whom Herod put to death (Josephus, Antiq., b. xviii. 5). Herod the Great left three sons, between whom his kingdom was divided—Archelaus, Philip, and Antipas. See Notes on Mat. ii. 19. To Philip was left Iturea and Trachonitis. See Lu. iii. 1. To Antipas, Galilee and Perea; and to Archelaus, Judea, Idumea, and Samaria. Archelaus, being accused of cruelty, was banished by Augustus to Vienna in Gaul, and Judea was reduced to a province, and united with Syria. When Philip died, this region was granted by the Emperor Caligula to Herod Agrippa. Herod Antipas was driven as an exile also into Gaul, and then into Spain, and Herod Agrippa received also his tetrarchy. In the reign of Claudius also, the dominions of Herod Agrippa were still farther enlarged. When Caligula was slain, he was at Rome, and having ingratiated himself into the favour of Claudius, he conferred on him also Judea and Samaria, so that his dominions were equal in extent to those of his grandfather, Herod the Great. See Josephus, Antiq., b. xix. ch. 5, § 1. ¶ Stretched forth his hands. A figurative expression, denoting that he laid his hands on them, or that he endeavoured violently to oppress the church. ¶ To vex. To injure, to do evil to— κακῶσαι. ¶ Certain. Some of the church. Who they were the writer immediately specifies.

2. And he killed, &c. He caused to be put to death with a sword, either by beheading, or piercing him through. The Roman procurators were intrusted with authority over life, though in the time of Pilate the Jews had not this authority. ¶ James, the brother of John. This was the son of Zebedee, Mat. iv. 21. He is commonly called James the Greater, in contradistinction from James, the son of Alpheus, who is called James the Less, Mat. x. 3. In this manner were the predictions of our Saviour respecting him fulfilled, Mat. xx. 23, “Ye shall indeed drink of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with.”

3. And because he saw that it pleased the Jews. This was the principle on which he acted. It was not from a sense of right; it was not to do justice, and to protect the innocent; it was not to discharge the appropriate duties of a magistrate and a king, but it was to promote his own popularity. It is probable that Agrippa would have acted in this way in any circumstances. He was ambitious, vain, and fawning; he sought, as his great principle, popularity, and he was willing to sacrifice, like many others, truth and justice to obtain this end. But there was also a particular reason for this in his case. He held his appointment under the Roman emperor. This foreign rule was always unpopular among the Jews. In order, therefore, to secure a peaceful reign, and to prevent insurrection and tumult, it was necessary for him to court their favour; to indulge their wishes, and to fall in with their prejudices. Alas! how many monarchs and rulers there have been who were governed by no better principle, and whose sole aim has been to secure popularity, even at the expense of law, truth, and justice. That this was the character of Herod is attested by Josephus (Antiq., xix. ch. 8, § 3): “This king (Herod Agrippa) was by nature very beneficent, and liberal in his gifts, and very ambitious to please the people with such large donations; and he made himself very illustrious by the many expensive presents he made them. He took delight in giving, and rejoiced in living with good reputation.”

¶ To take Peter also. Peter was one of the most conspicuous men in the church. He had made himself particularly obnoxious by his severe and pungent discourses, and by his success in winning men to Christ. It was natural, therefore, that he should be the next object of attack. ¶ The days of unleavened bread. The Passover, or the seven days immediately succeeding the Passover, during which the Jews were required to eat bread without leaven, Ex. xii. 15-18. It was some time during this period that Herod chose to apprehend Peter. Why this time was selected is not known. As it was, however, a season of religious solemnity, and as Herod was desirous of showing his attachment to the religious rites of the nation (Jos. Antiq., xix. 7, 3), it is probable that he chose this period to show to them more impressively his purpose to oppose all false religions, and to maintain the existing establishments of the nation.

4. And when he had apprehended him. When he had taken or arrested him. ¶ He put him in prison. During the solemnities of this religious festival, it would have been deemed improper to have engaged in the trial of a supposed criminal. The minds of the people were expected to be devoted solely to the services of religion; and hence Herod chose to retain him in custody until the Passover had ended. ¶ To four quaternions of soldiers. A quaternion was a company of four; consequently the whole number employed here was sixteen. The Romans divided the night delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers, to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

into four watches so that the guards could be relieved; those who were on guard occupying three hours, and being then relieved. Of the four who were on guard, two were with Peter in the prison (ver. 6), and two kept watch before the door of the prison. The utmost precaution was taken that he should not escape; and Herod thus gave the most ample assurance to the Jews of his intention to secure Peter, and to bring him to trial. ¶ Intending after Easter. There never was a more absurd or unhappy translation than this. The original is simply after the Passover (μετὰ τὸ πάσχα). The word Easter now denotes the festival observed by many Christian churches in honour of the resurrection of the Saviour. But the original has no reference to that, nor is there the slightest evidence that any such festival was observed at the time when this book was written. The translation is not only unhappy, as it does not convey at all the meaning of the original, but because it may contribute to foster an opinion that such a festival was observed in the time of the apostles. The word Easter is of Saxon origin, and is supposed to be derived from Eostre, the goddess of Love, or the Venus of the North, in honour of whom a festival was celebrated by our pagan ancestors in the month of April (Webster). As this festival coincided with the Passover of the Jews, and with the feast observed by Christians in honour of the resurrection of Christ, the name came to be used to denote the latter. In the old Anglo-Saxon service-books the term Easter is used frequently to translate the word Passover. In the translation by Wickliffe, the word paske, that is, passover, is used. But Tindal and Coverdale used the word Easter, and hence it has very improperly crept into our translation. ¶ To bring him forth to the people. That is, evidently, to put him publicly to death to gratify them. The providence of God in regard to Peter is thus remarkable. Instead of his being put suddenly to death, as without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

was James, he was reserved for future trial; and thus an opportunity was given for the prayers of the church, and for his consequent release.

5. But prayer was made. The church was apprised of his imprisonment and danger, and had no resource but to apply to God by prayer. In scenes of danger there is no other refuge; and the result shows that even in most discouraging circumstances God can hear prayer. Nothing scarcely could appear more hopeless than the idea of rescuing Peter out of the hands of Herod, and out of the prison, and out of the custody of sixteen men, by prayer. But the prayer of faith was prevalent with God. ¶ Without ceasing. Intense, steady, ardent prayer. The word here used (ιερῶς) is found in but one other place in the New Testament, 1 Pe. iv. 8, "Have fervent charity among yourselves." The word has rather the idea that their prayer was earnest and fervent than that it was constant. ¶ Of the church. By the church.

6. And when Herod would have brought him forth. When he was about to bring him to be put to death. ¶ The same night. That is, the night preceding. The intention of Herod was to bring him out as soon as the Passover was over; but during the night which immediately preceded the day in which he intended to bring him to punishment, Peter was rescued. ¶ Peter was sleeping. Here is an instance of remarkable composure, and an illustration of the effects of peace of conscience and of confidence in God. It was doubtless known to Peter what the intention of Herod was. James had just been put to death, and Peter had no reason to expect a better fate. And yet in this state he slept as quietly as if there had been no danger, and it was necessary that he should be roused even by an angel to contemplate his condition and to make his escape. There is nothing that will give quiet rest and gentle sleep so certainly as a conscience void of offence; and in the midst of imminent dangers, he who confides in God may rest securely and calmly. Comp. Ps. iii. 5; iv. 8. ¶ Between two soldiers. See Notes on ver. 4. Peter was bound to the two. His left hand was chained to the right hand of one of the soldiers, and his right hand to the left hand of the other. This was a common mode of securing prisoners among the Romans. See abundant authorities for this quoted in Lardner's Credibility, part i. ch. x. § 9, Lond. edit. 1829, vol. i. p. 242, 243, &c. ¶ And the keeper, &c. See ver. 4. Two soldiers were stationed at the door. We may see now that every possible precaution was used to ensure the safe custody of Peter. (1) He was in prison. (2) He was under the charge of sixteen men, who could relieve each other when weary, and thus every security was given that he could not escape by inattention on their part. (3) He was bound fast between two men. And (4) He was further guarded by two others, whose business it was to watch the door of the prison. It is to be remembered, also, that it was death for a Roman soldier to be found sleeping at his post. But God can deliver in spite of all the precautions of men; and it is easy for him to overcome the most cunning devices of his enemies.

7. And, behold, the angel of the Lord. See Notes on ch. v. 19. ¶ Came upon him. Greek, was present with him; stood near him (ἰνίοντος). ¶ And a light shined in the prison. Many have supposed that this was lightning. But light, and splendour, and shining apparel are commonly represented as the accompaniments of the heavenly beings when they visit the earth, Lu. ii. 9; xxiv. 4; comp. Mar. ix. 3. It is highly probable that this light was discerned only by Peter; and it would be to him an undoubted proof of the divine interposition in his behalf. ¶ And he smote unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9 And he went out, and followed him; <sup>d</sup>and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but <sup>e</sup>thought he saw a vision.

Peter on the side. This was, doubtless, a gentle blow or stroke to arouse him from sleep. ¶ And his chains, &c. This could have been only by divine power. No natural means were used, or could have been used without arousing the guard. It is a sublime expression of the ease with which God can deliver from danger, and rescue his friends. Comp. ch. xvi. 26.

8. Gird thyself. When they slept the outer garment was thrown off, and the girdle with which they bound their inner garment, or tunic, was loosed. He was directed now to gird up that inner garment as they usually wore it; that is, to dress himself, and prepare to follow him. ¶ Bind on thy sandals. Put on thy sandals; prepare to walk. See Notes on Mat. iii. 11. ¶ Cast thy garment about thee. The outer garment, that was thrown loosely around the shoulders. It was nearly square, and was laid aside when they slept, or worked, or ran. The direction was that he should dress himself in his usual apparel. See Notes on Mat. v. 38-42.

9. And wist not. Knew not. ¶ That it was true. That it was real. ¶ But thought he saw a vision. He supposed that it was a representation made to his mind similar to that which he had seen before. Comp. ch. x. 11, 12. It was so astonishing, so unexpected, so wonderful, that he could not realize that it was true.

10. The first and second ward. The word which is here rendered ward (φυλακήν) properly denotes the act of guarding; but it is most commonly used to denote a prison, or place of confinement. In this place it seems to denote the guard itself—the soldiers stationed at intervals in the entrance into the prison. These were passed silently, probably a deep sleep having been sent on them to facilitate the escape of Peter. ¶ The iron gate. The outer gate, secured

11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and *hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from with iron, as the doors of prisons are now. ¶ That leadeth unto the city. Or rather into (i.e.) the city. The precise situation of the prison is unknown. It is supposed by some (comp. Lightfoot on this place) that the prison was between two walls of the city, and that the entrance to the prison was immediately from the inner wall, so that the gate opened directly into the city. ¶ Of his own accord. Itself. It opened spontaneously, without the application of any force or key, thus showing conclusively that Peter was delivered by miraculous interposition. ¶ And passed on through one street. Till Peter was entirely safe from any danger of pursuit, and then the angel left him. God had effected his complete rescue, and now left him to his own efforts as usual.

11. And when Peter was come to himself. This expression naturally means, when he had overcome his amazement and astonishment at the unexpected deliverance, so as to be capable of reflection. He had been amazed by the whole transaction. He thought it was a vision; and in the suddenness and rapidity with which it was done, he had no time for cool reflection. The events of divine providence often overwhelm and confound us; and such are their suddenness, and rapidity, and unexpected character in their development as to prevent calm and collected reflection. ¶ Of a surety. Certainly, surely. He considered all the circumstances; he saw that he was actually at liberty, and he was satisfied that it could have been effected only by divine interposition. ¶ The expectation of the people. From this it appears that the people earnestly desired his death; and it was to gratify that desire that Herod had imprisoned him.

12. And when he had considered, &c. Thinking on the subject; considering what he should do in these circumstances. ¶ He came to the house of Mary,

all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary, the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together, praying.

&c. Probably this house was near him; and he would naturally seek the dwelling of a Christian friend. ¶ The mother of John, &c. Probably this was the John Mark who wrote the gospel. But this is not certain. ¶ Whose surname. Greek, who was called Mark. It does not mean that he had two names conferred, as with us, both of which were used at the same time, but he was called by either, the Greeks probably using the name Mark, and the Jews the name John. He is frequently mentioned afterward as having been the attendant of Paul and Barnabas in their travels, ver. 25; xv. 39; 2 Ti. iv. 11. He was a nephew of Barnabas, Col. iv. 10. ¶ Where many were gathered together, praying. This was in the night, and it shows the propriety of observing extraordinary seasons of prayer, even in the night. Peter was to have been put to death the next day; and they assembled to pray for his release, and did not intermit their prayers. When dangers increase around us and our friends, we should become more fervent in prayer. While life remains we may pray; and even when there is no human hope, and we have no power to heal or deliver, still God may interpose, as he did here, in answer to prayer.

13. At the door of the gate. Rather the door of the vestibule, or principal entrance into the house. The house was entered through such a porch or vestibule, and it was the door opening into this which is here intended. See Notes on Mat. ix. 2. ¶ A damsel. A girl. ¶ Came to hearken. To hear who was there. ¶ Named Rhoda. This is a Greek name signifying a rose. It was not unusual for the Hebrews to give the names of flowers, &c., to their daughters. Thus Susanna, a lily; Hadessa, a myrtle; Tamar, a palm-tree, &c. (Grotius).

14. She opened not the gate. At this time of night, and in these circumstances, the door would be fastened. Christians were doubtless alarmed by the death of James and the imprisonment of Peter, and they would take all possible precautions for their own safety. ¶ For gladness. In her joy she hastened to inform those who were assembled of the safety of Peter.

15. Thou art mad. Thou art insane. They seemed to have regarded his rescue as so difficult and so hopeless, that they deemed it proof of derangement that she now affirmed it. And yet this was the very thing for which they had been so earnestly praying. When it was now announced to them that the object of their prayers was granted, they deemed the messenger that announced it insane. Christians are often surprised even when their prayers are answered. They are overwhelmed and amazed at the success of their own petitions, and are slow to believe that the very thing for which they have sought could be granted. It shows, perhaps, with how little faith, after all, they pray, and how slow they are to believe that God can hear and answer prayer. In a revival of religion in answer to prayer, Christians are often overwhelmed and astonished when even their own petitions are granted, and when God manifests his own power in his own way and time. Prayer should be persevered in, and we should place ourselves in a waiting posture to catch the first indications that God has heard us. ¶ But she constantly affirmed it. She insisted on it. How much better it would have been to have hastened at once to the gate, than thus to have engaged in a controversy on the subject. Peter was suffered to remain knocking while they debated the matter. Christians are often engaged in some unprofitable controversy when they should hasten to catch the first tokens of divine favour, and open their arms to welcome the proofs that God has heard their prayers. ¶ Then said they. Still resolved not to be convinced. ¶ It is his angel. Any way of accounting for it rather than to admit the simple fact, or to ascertain the simple truth. All this was caused by the little hope which they had of his release, and their earnest desire that it should be so. It was just such a state of mind as is indicated when we say, "The news is too good to be believed." The expression It is his angel may mean that they supposed that the tutelary guardian, or angel appointed to attend Peter, had come to announce something respecting him, and that he had assumed the voice and form of Peter in order to make them certain that he came from him. This notion arose from the common belief of the Jews that each individual had assigned to him, at birth, a celestial spirit, whose office it was to guard and defend him through life. See Notes on Mat. xviii. 10. That the Jews entertained this opinion is clear from their writings. See Kuinoel. Lightfoot thinks that they who were assembled supposed that the angel had assumed the voice and manner of Peter in order to intimate to them that he was about to die, and to excite them to earnest prayer that he might die with constancy and firmness. Whatever their opinions were, however, it proves nothing on these points. There is no evidence that they were inspired in these opinions, nor are their notions countenanced by the Scriptures. They were the mere common traditions of the Jews, and prove nothing in regard to the truth of the opinion one way or the other.

16. Were astonished. They were now convinced that it was Peter, and they were amazed that he had been rescued. As yet they were of course ignorant of the manner in which it was done.

17. But he, beckoning, &c. To prevent the noise, and tumult, and transport which was likely to be produced. His wish was, not that there should be clamorous joy, but that they should listen in silence to what God had done. It was sufficient to awe the soul, and produce deep, grateful feeling. A noise might excite the neighbouring Jews, and produce danger. Religion is calm and peaceful; and its great scenes and surprising deliverances are rather fitted to awe the soul, to produce calm, sober, and grateful contemplation, than the noise of rejoicing, and the shoutings of exultation. The consciousness of the presence of God, and of his mighty power, does not produce rapturous disorder and tumult, but holy, solemn, calm, grateful emotion. ¶ Go, show these things, &c. Acquaint them that their prayer is heard, and that they may rejoice also at the mercy of God. ¶ Unto James. James, the son of Alpheus, commonly called the Less. See Notes on ver. 2; Ac. i. 13; Mat. x. 2. ¶ And to the brethren. Particularly to the other apostles. ¶ And went into another place. Probably a place of greater safety. Where he went is not known. The Papists pretend that he went to Rome. But of this there is no evidence. He is mentioned as in Jerusalem again in ch. xv. The meaning is evidently that he went into some place of retirement till the danger was past.

18. No small stir. Amazement that he had escaped, and apprehension of the consequences. The punishment which they had reason to expect, for having suffered his escape, was death.

19. He examined the keepers. The soldiers who were intrusted with his custody. Probably only those who had the special care of him at that watch of the night. The word examine here means to inquire diligently, to make investigation. He subjected them to a rigid scrutiny to ascertain the manner of his escape; for it is evident that Herod did not mean to admit the possibility of a miraculous interposition. ¶ Should be put to death. For having failed to keep Peter. This punishment manded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Cesarea, and there abode.

they had a right to expect for having suffered his escape. ¶ And he went down, &c. How soon after the escape of Peter he went down to Cesarea, or how long he abode there, is not known. Cesarea was rising into magnificence, and the Roman governors made it often their abode. See Notes on Ac. viii. 40. Comp. Ac. xxv. 1, 4. This journey of Herod is related by Josephus (Antiq., b. xix. ch. viii. § 2). He says that it was after he had reigned over all Judea three years. ¶ And there abode. That is, till his death, which occurred shortly after. We do not learn that he made any further inquiry after Peter, or that he attempted any further persecutions of the Christians. The men on guard were undoubtedly put to death; and thus Herod used all his power to create the impression that Peter had escaped by their negligence; and this would undoubtedly be believed by the Jews. See Mat. xxviii. 15. He might himself, perhaps, have been convinced, however, that the escape was by miracle, and afraid to attempt any further persecutions; or the affairs of his government might have called off his attention to other things; and thus, as in the case of the "persecution that arose about Stephen," the political changes and dangers might divert the attention from putting Christians to death. See Notes on ch. ix. 31. Thus, by the providence of God, this persecution, that had been commenced, not by popular tumult, but by royal authority and power, and that was aimed at the very pillars of the church, ceased. The prayers of the church prevailed; and the monarch was overcome, disappointed, humbled, and, by divine judgment, soon put to death.

20. And Herod was highly displeased, &c. Greek, bare an hostile mind, intending war. See the margin. The Greek word (Συμπεχω) does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. It means to meditate war; to purpose war in the mind; or here, probably, to be

enraged or angry at them. What was the cause of this hostility to the people of Tyre and Sidon is not mentioned, and conjecture is useless. It is not at all inconsistent, however, with the well-known character of Herod. It was probably from some cause relating to commerce. Tyre and Sidon were under the Roman power, and had some shadow of liberty (Grotius), and it is probable that they might have embarrassed Herod in some of his regulations respecting commerce. ¶ Tyre and Sidon. See Notes on Mat. xi. 21. They were north of Cesarea. ¶ They came with one accord. Fearing the effects of his anger, they united in sending an embassage to him to make peace. ¶ Blastus, the king's chamberlain. See Ro. xvi. 23. The word chamberlain denotes an officer who is charged with the direction and management of a chamber or chambers, particularly a bed-chamber. It denotes here a man who had charge of the bed-chamber of Herod. ¶ Because their country was nourished, &c. Was supplied by the territories of Herod. The country of Tyre and Sidon included a narrow strip of land on the coast of the Mediterranean. Of course they were dependent for provisions, and for articles of commerce, on the interior country; but this belonged to the kingdom of Herod; and as they were entirely dependent on his country, as he had power to dry up the sources of their support and commerce, they were the more urgent to secure his favour.

21. And upon a set day. An appointed, public day. This was the second day of the sports and games which Herod celebrated in Cesarea in honour of Claudius Caesar. Josephus has given an account of this occurrence, which coincides remarkably with the narrative here. The account is contained in his Antiquities of the Jews, b. xix. ch. viii. § 2, and is as follows: "Now when Agrippa had reigned three years over all Judea, he came to the city Cesarea, which was formerly called Strato's Tower; and there he exhibited shows in honour of Cæsar, upon his being informed that there was a certain festival celebrated to make vows for his safety. At which festival a great multitude was gotten together of the principal persons, and such as were of dignity throughout his province. On the second day of which shows he put on a garment made wholly of silver," &c. ¶ Arrayed in royal apparel. In the apparel of a king. Josephus thus describes the dress which Herod wore on that occasion. "He put on a garment made wholly of silver, and of wonderful contexture, and early in the morning came into the theatre [place of the shows and games], at which time the silver of his garment, being illuminated by the first reflection of the sun's rays upon it, shone after a surprising manner, and was so resplendent as to spread a horror over those that looked intently on him." ¶ Sat upon his throne. This does not denote a throne in the usual sense of that word, but a high seat in the theatre, where he sat, and from whence he could have a full view of the games and sports. From this place he made his speech. ¶ Made an oration. Addressed the people. What was the subject of this speech is not intimated by Luke or Josephus.

21 And upon a set day, Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them.

22 And the people gave a shout,

22. And the people gave a shout. A loud applause. ¶ It is the voice of a god, &c. It is not probable that the Jews joined in this acclamation, but that it was made by the idolatrous Gentiles. Josephus gives a similar account of their feelings and conduct. He says, "And presently his flatterers cried out, one from one place, and another from another (though not for his good), that he was a god; and they added, 'Be thou merciful unto us; for although we have hitherto reverenced thee only as a king, yet shall we henceforth own thee as a superior to mortal nature.'" It is true that Josephus says that this was done when they saw his splendid apparel, and that he gives no account of his addressing the people, while Luke describes it as the effect of his speech. But the discrepancy is of no consequence. Luke is as credible an historian as Josephus, and his account is more consistent than that of the Jewish

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he historian. It is far more probable that this applause and adoration would be excited by a speech than simply by beholding his apparel.

23. And immediately the angel of the Lord. Diseases and death are in the Scriptures often attributed to an angel. See 2 Sa. xxiv. 16; 1 Ch. xxi. 12, 15, 20, 27; 2 Ch. xxxii. 21. It is not intended that there was a miracle in this case, but it certainly is intended by the sacred writer that his death was a divine judgment on him for his receiving homage as a god. Josephus says of him that he "did neither rebuke them [the people] nor reject their impious flattery. A severe pain arose in his belly, and began in a most violent manner. And when he was quite worn out by the pain in his belly for five days, he departed this life, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and the seventh of his reign." Josephus does not mention that it was done by an angel, but says that when he looked up, he saw an owl sitting on a rope over his head, and judging it to be an evil omen, he immediately became melancholy, and was seized with the pain. ¶ Because he gave not God the glory. Because he was willing to receive the worship due to God. It was the more sinful in him as he was a Jew, and was acquainted with the true God, and with the evils of idolatry. He was proud, and willing to be flattered, and even adored. He had sought their applause; he had arrayed himself in this splendid manner to excite admiration; and when they carried it even so far as to offer divine homage, he did not reject the impious flattery, but listened still to their praises. Hence he was judged; and God vindicated his own insulted honour by inflicting severe pains on him, and by a most awful death. ¶ And he was eaten of worms. The word used here is not elsewhere found in the New Testament. A similar disease is recorded of Antiochus Epiphanes, in the Apocrypha, 2 Mac. ix. 5, "But the Lord Almighty, the God of Israel, smote him with an invisible and incurable plague; for a pain in the bowels that was remediless came upon him, and sore torments of the inner parts (ver. 9), so that worms rose up out of the body of this wicked man," &c. Probably this was the disease known as morbus pedicularis. It is loathsome, offensive, and most painful. See the death of Antiochus Epiphanes described in 2 Mac. ix. With this disease also Herod the Great, grandfather of Herod Agrippa, died (Josephus, Antiq., b. xvii. ch. vi. § 5). Such a death, so painful, so sudden, and so loathsome, was an appropriate judgment on the pride of Herod. We may here learn, (1) That sudden and violent deaths are often acts of direct divine judgment on wicked men. (2) That men, when they seek praise and flattery, expose themselves to the displeasure of God. His glory he will not give to another, Is. xlvi. 8. (3) That the most proud, and mighty, and magnificent princes have no security of their lives. God can in a moment — even when they are surrounded by their worshippers and flatterers — touch the seat of life, and turn them to loathsomeness and putrefaction. What a pitiable being is a man of pride receiving from his fellow-men that homage which is due to God alone! See Is. xiv. (4) Pride and vanity, in any station of life, are hateful in the sight of God. Nothing is more inappropriate to our situation as lost, dying sinners, and nothing will more certainly meet the wrath of heaven. (5) We have here a strong confirmation of the truth of the sacred narrative. In all essential particulars Luke coincides in his account of the death of Herod with Josephus. This is one of the many circumstances which show that the sacred Scriptures were written at the time when they professed to be, and that they accord with the truth. See Lardner's Credibility, part i. ch. i. § 6.

24. But the word of God grew, &c. Great success attended it. The persecutions had now ceased; and notwithstanding all the attempts which had been made to crush it, still the church increased and flourished. The liberation of Peter and the death of Herod would contribute to extend it. It was a new evidence of divine interposition in behalf of the church; it would augment the zeal of Christians; it would humble their enemies, and would fill those with fear who had attempted to oppose and crush the church of God.

25. Returned from Jerusalem. They had gone to Jerusalem to carry alms, and they now returned to Antioch, ch. xi. 30. ¶ When they had fulfilled their ministry. When they had accomplished the purpose for which they had been sent there; that is, to deposit the alms of the church at Antioch in the hands of the elders of the churches, ch. xi. 30. ¶ John, whose surname was Mark. See Notes on ver. 12. From this period the sacred historian records chiefly the labours of Paul. The labours of the other apostles are, after this, seldom referred to in this book, and the attention is fixed almost entirely on the trials and travels of the great apostle of the Gentiles. His important services, his unwearied efforts, his eminent success, and the fact that Luke was his companion, may be the reasons why his labours are made so prominent in the history. Through the previous chapters we have seen the church rise from small beginnings, until it was even now spreading into surrounding regions. We have seen it survive two persecutions, commenced and conducted with all the power and malice of Jewish rulers. We have seen the most zealous of the persecutors converted to the faith which he once destroyed, and the royal persecutor put to death by the divine judgment. And we have thus seen that God was the protector of the church; that no weapon formed against it could prosper; that, according to the promise of the Redeemer, the gates of hell could not prevail against it. In that God and Saviour who then defended the church, we may still confide, and may be assured that he who was then its friend has it still "engraved on the palms of his hands," and designs that it shall extend until it fills the earth with light and salvation.

CHAPTER XIII.

1. The church that was at Antioch. See Notes on ch. xi. 20. ¶ Certain prophets. See Notes on ch. xi. 27. ¶ And teachers. Teachers are several times mentioned in the New Testament as an order of ministers, 1 Co. xii. 28, 29; Ep. iv. 11; 2 Pe. ii. 1. Their precise rank and duty are not known. It is probable that those here mentioned as prophets were the same persons as the teachers. They might discharge both offices, predicting future events, and instructing the people. ¶ As Barnabas. Barnabas was a preacher (ch. iv. 35, 36; ix. 27; xi. 22, 26); and it is not improbable that the names "prophets and teachers" here simply designate the preachers of the gospel. ¶ Simeon that was called Niger. Niger is a Latin name meaning black. Why the name was given is not known. Nothing more is known of him than is here mentioned.

¶ Lucius of Cyrene. Cyrene was in Africa. See Notes on Mat. xxvii. 32. Lucius is afterward mentioned as with the apostle Paul when he wrote the Epistle to the Romans, Ro. xvi. 21.

¶ And Manaen. He is not elsewhere mentioned in the New Testament. ¶ Which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch. Herod Antipas, not Herod Agrippa. Herod was tetrarch of Galilee, Lu. iii. 1. The word here translated "which had been brought up," οὐρανος, denotes one who is educated or nourished at the same time with another. It is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. He might have been connected with the royal family, and, being nearly of the same age, was educated by the father of Herod Antipas with him. He was, therefore, a man of rank and education, and his conversion shows that the gospel was not confined entirely in its influence to the poor. ¶ And Saul. Saul was an apostle; and yet he is here mentioned among the “prophets and teachers,” showing that these words denote ministers of the gospel in general, without reference to any particular order or rank.

2. As they ministered to the Lord. It is probable that this took place on some day set apart for fasting and prayer. The expression “ministered to the Lord” means as they were engaged in prayer to the Lord, or as they were engaged in divine service. The Syriac thus renders the passage. ¶ The Holy Ghost said. Evidently by direct revelation. ¶ Separate me. Set apart to me, or for my service. It does not mean to ordain, but simply to designate, or appoint to this specific work. ¶ For the work whereunto I have called them. Not the apostolic office, for Saul was called to that by the express revelation of Jesus Christ (Ga. i. 12), and Barnabas was not an apostle. The “work” to which they were now set apart was that of preaching the gospel in the regions round about Antioch. It was not any permanent office in the church, but was a temporary designation to a missionary enterprise in extending the gospel, especially through Asia Minor, and the adjacent regions. Accordingly, when, in the fulfilment of this appointment, they had travelled through Seleucia, Cyprus, Paphos, Pamphylia, Pisidia, &c., they returned to Antioch, having fulfilled the work to which they were separated. See Ac. xiv. 28, 27. ¶ Whereunto I have called them. This proves that they received their commission to this work directly from God the Holy Spirit. Paul and Barnabas had been influenced by the Spirit to engage in this work, but they were to be sent forth by the concurrence and designation of the church.

3. And when they had fasted. They were fasting when they were commanded to set them apart. Yet this probably refers to an appointed day of prayer, with reference to this very purpose. The first formal mission to the Gentiles was an important event in the church, and they engaged in this appointment with deep solemnity and with humbling themselves before God. ¶ And prayed. This enterprise was a new one. The gospel had been preached to the Jews, to Cornelius, and to the Gentiles at Antioch. But there had been no solemn, public, and concerted plan of sending it to the Gentiles, or of appointing a mission to the heathen. It was a new event, and was full of danger and hardships. The primitive church felt the need of divine direction and aid in the great work. Two missionaries were to be sent forth among strangers, to be exposed to perils by sea and land; and the commencement of the enterprise demanded prayer. The church humbled itself, and this primitive missionary society sought, as all others should do, the divine blessing to attend the labours of those employed in this work. The result showed that the prayer was heard. ¶ And laid their hands on them. That is, those who are mentioned in ver. 1. This was not to set them apart to the apostolic office. Saul was chosen by Christ himself, and there is no evidence that any of the apostles were ordained by the imposition of hands (see Notes on Ac. i. 26; Mat. x. 1-5; Lu. vi. 12-16), and Barnabas was not an apostle in the original and peculiar sense of the word. Nor is it meant that this was an ordination to the ministry, to the office of preaching the gospel, for both had been engaged in this before. Saul received his commission directly from the Saviour, and began at once to preach, Ac. ix. 20; Ga. i. 11-17. Barnabas had preached at Antioch, and was evidently recognized as a preacher by the apostles, Ac. ix. 27; xi. 22, 23. It follows, therefore, that this was not an ordination in the doctrinal sense of this term, either Episcopal or Presbyterian, but was a designation to a particular work—a work of vast importance; strictly a missionary appointment by the church, under the authority of the Holy Ghost. The act of laying hands on any person was practised not only in ordination, but in conferring a favour, and in setting apart for any purpose. See Le. iii. 2, 8, 13; iv. 4, 29; xvi. 21; Nu. viii. 12; Mar. v. 23; xvi. 18; Mat. xxi. 46. It means in this case that they appointed them to a particular field of labour, and by laying hands on them they implored the blessing of God to attend them. ¶ They sent them away. The church by its teachers

4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, sent them forth under the direction of the Holy Ghost. All missionaries are thus sent by the church; and the church should not forget its ambassadors in their great and perilous work.

4. Being sent forth by the Holy Ghost. Having been called to this work by the Holy Spirit, and being under his direction. ¶ Departed unto Seleucia. This city was situated at the mouth of the river Orontes, where it falls into the Mediterranean. Antioch was connected with the sea by the river Orontes. Strabo says that in his time they sailed up the river in one day. The distance from Antioch to Seleucia by water is about 41 miles, while the journey by land is only 16½ miles (Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 135). “Seleucia united the two characters of a fortress and a seaport. It was situated on a rocky eminence, which is the southern extremity of an elevated range of hills projecting from Mount Amanus. From the south-east, where the ruins of the Antioch gate are still conspicuous, the ground rose toward the north-east into high and craggy summits; and round the greater part of the circumference of 4 miles the city was protected by its natural position. The harbour and mercantile suburb were on level ground toward the west; but here, as on the only weak point at Gibraltar, strong artificial defences had made compensation for the weakness of nature. Seleucus, who had named his metropolis in his father's honour (p. 122), gave his own name to this maritime fortress; and here, around his tomb, his successors contended for the key of Syria. ‘Seleucia by the sea’ was a place of great importance under the Seleucidæ and the Ptolemies, and so it remained under the sway of the Romans. In consequence of its bold resistance to Tigranes when he was in possession of all the neighbouring country, Pompey gave it the privileges of a ‘free city,’ and a contemporary of St. Paul speaks of it as having those privileges still. Here, in the midst of unsympathizing sailors, the two missionary apostles, with their younger companion, stepped on board the vessel which was to convey them to they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister.

6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they Salamis. As they cleared the port, the whole sweep of the bay of Antioch opened on their left—the low ground by the mouth of the Orontes; the wild and woody country beyond it; and then the peak of Mount Casius, rising symmetrically from the very edge of the sea to a height of 5000 feet. On the right, in the south-west horizon, if the day was clear, they saw the island of Cyprus from the first. The current sets northerly and north-east between the island and the Syrian coast. But with a fair wind, a few hours would enable them to run down from Seleucia to Salamis, and the land would rapidly rise in forms well known and familiar to Barnabas and Mark” (Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 135, 138). ¶ They sailed to Cyprus. An island in the Mediterranean, not far from Seleucia. See Notes on ch. iv. 36.

5. And when they were at Salamis. This was the principal city and seaport of Cyprus. It was situated on the south-east part of the island, and was afterward called Constantia. ¶ In the synagogues of the Jews. Jews were living in all the countries adjacent to Judea, and in those countries they had synagogues. The apostles uniformly preached first to them. ¶ And they had also John to their minister. John Mark, Ac. xii. 12. He was their attendant, yet not pretending to be equal to them in office. They had been specifically designated to this work. He was with them as their friend and travelling companion; perhaps also employed in making the needful arrangements for their comfort, and for the supply of their wants in their travels.

6. And when they had gone through the isle. The length of the island, according to Strabo, was one thousand and four hundred stadia, or nearly one hundred and seventy miles. ¶ Unto Paphos. Paphos was a city at the western extremity of the island. It was the residence of the proconsul, and was distinguished for a splendid temple erected to Venus, who was worshipped throughout the island. Cyprus was fabled to be the place of the birth of this goddess. It had, besides Paphos found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-jesus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a and Salamis, several towns of note—Citium, the birthplace of Zeno, Amathus, sacred to Venus, &c. Its present capital is Nicosia. Whether Paul preached at any of these places is not recorded. The island is supposed formerly to have had a million of inhabitants. ¶ A certain sorcerer. Greek, magus, or magician. See Notes on ch. viii. 9. ¶ A false prophet. Pretending to be endowed with the gift of prophecy; or a man, probably, who pretended to be inspired. ¶ Bar-jesus. The word Bar is Syriac, and means son. Jesus, or Joshua, was not an uncommon name among the Jews. The name was given from his father—son of Jesus, or Joshua; as Bar-Jonas, son of Jonas.

7. Which was with the deputy. Or with the proconsul. The exact accuracy of Luke in this statement is worthy of special remark. In the time when Augustus united the world under his own power, the provinces were divided into two classes. Augustus found two names which were applied to public officers in existence, one of which was henceforward inseparably blended with the imperial dignity and with military command, and the other with the authority of the senate and its civil administration. The first of these names was "Prætor;" the other was "Consul." What is to be accounted for here is that the latter is the name given by Luke to Sergius Paulus, as if he derived his authority from the senate. The difficulty in the case is this: that Augustus told the senate and the people of Rome that he would resign to them those provinces where soldiers were unnecessary to secure a peaceful administration, and that he would himself take the care and risk of the other provinces where the presence of the Roman legions would be necessary. Hence, in the time of Augustus, and in the subsequent reigns of the emperors, the provinces were divided into these two classes; the one governed by men who went forth from the senate, and who would be styled Proconsul, Architato,—the term used here; and the other those sent forth by the emperor, and who would be styled Procurator, Ex̄̄c̄̄t̄or, or Proprietor, Arti-

prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation)

οργάτης. Both these kind of officers are referred to in the New Testament. Now we are told by Strabo and Dio Cassius that "Asaia" and "Achaia" were assigned to the senate, and the title, therefore, of the governor would be Proconsul, as we find in Ac. xviii. 12; xix. 38. At the same time Dio Cassius informs us that Cyprus was retained by the emperor for himself; and the title of the governor, therefore, would naturally have been, not "Proconsul," as here, but "Procurator." Yet it so happens that Dio Cassius has stated the reason why the title "Proconsul" was given to the governor of Cyprus, in the fact which he mentions that "Augustus restored Cyprus to the senate in exchange for another district of the empire." It is this statement which vindicates the strict accuracy of Luke in the passage before us. See Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 142–144, and also Lardner's Credibility, part i. ch. i. § 11, where he has fully vindicated the accuracy of the appellation which is here given to Sergius by Luke. ¶ Sergius Paulus, a prudent man. The word here rendered prudent means intelligent, wise, learned. It also may have the sense of candid, and may have been given to this man because he was of large and liberal views; of a philosophic and inquiring turn of mind; and was willing to obtain knowledge from any source. Hence he had entertained the Jews; and hence he was willing also to listen to Barnabas and Saul. It is not often that men of rank are thus willing to listen to the instructions of the professed ministers of God. ¶ Who called for Barnabas and Saul. It is probable that they had preached in Paphos, and Sergius was desirous himself of hearing the import of their new doctrine. ¶ And desired to hear, &c. There is no evidence that he then wished to listen to this as divine truth, or that he was anxious about his own salvation, but it was rather as a speculative inquiry. It was a professed characteristic of many ancient philosophers that they were willing to receive instruction from any quarter. Comp. Ac. xvii. 19, 20.

8. But Elymas the sorcerer, for so is his withstood<sup>c</sup> them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then Saul, (who also is called

name by interpretation. Elymas the magician. Elymas is the interpretation, not of the name Bar-jesus, but of the word rendered the sorcerer. It is an Arabic word, and means the same as Magus. It seems that he was better known by this foreign name than by his own. ¶ Withstood them. Resisted them. He was sensible that if the influence of Saul and Barnabas should be extended over the proconsul, that he would be seen to be an impostor, and his power be at an end. His interest, therefore, led him to oppose the gospel. His own popularity was at stake; and being governed by this, he opposed the gospel of God. The love of popularity and power, the desire of retaining some political influence, is often a strong reason why men oppose the gospel. ¶ To turn away the deputy from the faith. To prevent the influence of the truth on his mind; or to prevent his becoming the friend and patron of the Christians.

9. Then Saul (who is also called Paul). This is the last time that this apostle is called Saul. Henceforward he is designated by the title by which he is usually known, as Paul. When, or why, this change occurred in the name, has been a subject on which commentators are not agreed. From the fact that the change in the name is here first intimated, it would seem probable that it was first used in relation to him at this time. By whom the name was given him—whether he assumed it himself, or whether it was first given him by Christians or by Romans—is not intimated. The name is of Roman origin. In the Latin language the name Paulus signifies little, dwarfish; and some have conjectured that it was given by his parents to denote that he was small when born; others, that it was assumed or conferred in subsequent years because he was little in stature. The name is not of the same signification as the name Saul. This signifies one that is asked, or desired. After all the conjectures on this subject, it is probable, (1) That this name was first used here; for before this, even after his conversion, he is uniformly called Saul. (2) That it was given by the Romans, as being a name with which they were more familiar, and one that was more consonant with their language and pronunciation. It was made by the change of a single letter; and probably because the name Paul was common among them, and pronounced, perhaps, with greater facility. (3) Paul suffered himself to be called by this name, as he was employed chiefly among the Gentiles. It was common for names to undergo changes quite as great as this, without our being able to specify any particular cause, in passing from one language to another. Thus the Hebrew name Jochanan among the Greeks and Latins was Johannes, with the French it is Jean, with the Dutch Hans, and with us John (Doddridge). Thus Onias becomes Menelaus; Hillel, Pollio; Jakim, Alcimus; Silas, Silvanus, &c. (Grotius). ¶ Filled with the Holy Ghost. Inspired to detect his sin; to denounce divine judgment; and to inflict punishment on him. See Notes on ch. ii. 4. ¶ Set his eyes on him. Looked at him intently.

Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10 And said, O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the

10. O full of all subtlety and mischief. The word subtlety denotes deceit and fraud, and implies that he was practising an imposition, and that he knew it. The word rendered mischief (ἰερωνυμίας) denotes properly facility of acting, and then sleight of hand; sly, cunning arts, by which one imposes on another, and deceives him with a fraudulent intention. It is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. The art of Elymas consisted probably in sleight of hand, legerdemain, or trick, aided by skill in the abstruse sciences, by which the ignorant might be easily imposed on. See Notes on ch. viii. 9. ¶ Child of the devil. Under his influence; practising his arts; promoting his designs by deceit and imposture, so that he may be called your father. See Notes on Jn. viii. 44. Satan is here represented as the author of deceit and the father of lies. ¶ Enemy of all righteousness. Practising deceit and iniquity, and thus opposed to righteousness and honesty. A man who lives by wickedness will, of course, be the foe of every form of integrity. A man who lives by fraud will be opposed to the truth; a pander to the vices of men will hate the rules of devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun

chastity and purity; a manufacturer or vender of ardent spirits will be the enemy of temperance societies. ¶ Wilt thou not cease to pervert. In what way he had opposed Paul and Barnabas is not known. It may have been either by misrepresenting their doctrines, or by representing them as apostate Jews —thus retarding or hindering the progress of the gospel. The expression “wilt thou not cease” implies that he had been engaged sedulously in doing this, probably from the commencement of their work in the city. ¶ The right ways of the Lord. The straight paths or doctrines of the Christian religion, in opposition to the crooked and perverse arts of deceivers and impostors. Straight paths denote integrity, sincerity, truth, Je. xxxi. 9; He. xii. 13; comp. Is. xl. 3, 4; xlvi. 16; Lu. iii. 5. Crooked ways denote the ways of the sinner, the deceiver, the impostor, De. xxxii. 5; Ps. cxxv.; Pr. ii. 15; Is. lix. 8; Phi. ii. 15.

11. The hand of the Lord is upon thee. God shall punish thee. By this sudden and miraculous punishment he would be awed and humbled, and the proconsul and others would be convinced that he was an impostor, and that the gospel was true. His wickedness deserved such a punishment; and at the same time that due punishment was inflicted, it was designed that the gospel should be extended by this means. In all this there was the highest evidence that Paul was under the inspiration of God. He was full of the Holy Ghost; he detected the secret feelings and desires of the heart of Elymas; and he inflicted on him a punishment that could have proceeded from none but God. That the apostles had the power of inflicting punishment is apparent from various places in the New Testament, 1 Co. v. 5; 1 Ti. i. 20. The punishment inflicted on Elymas, also, would be highly emblematic of the darkness and pervereness of his conduct. ¶ Not seeing the sun for a season. For how long a time this blindness was to continue is nowhere specified. It was, for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about, seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being however, in mercy ordained that the blindness should not be permanent and final; and though it was a punishment, it was at the same time benevolent, for nothing would be more likely to lead him to reflection and repentance than such a state of blindness. It was such a manifest proof that God was opposed to him; it was such a sudden divine judgment; it so completely cut him off from all possibility of practising his arts of deception, that it was adapted to bring him to repentance. Accordingly there is a tradition in the early church that he became a Christian. Origen says that “Paul, by a word striking him blind, by anguish converted him to godliness” (Clark). ¶ A mist. The word here used properly denotes a darkness or obscurity of the air; a cloud, &c. But it also denotes an extinction of sight by the drying up or disturbance of the humours of the eye (Hippocrates, as quoted by Schleusner). ¶ And darkness. Blindness, night. What was the precise cause or character of this miracle is not specified. ¶ And he went about, &c. This is a striking account of the effect of the miracle. The change was so sudden that he knew not where to go. He sought some one to guide him in the paths with which he had before been familiar. How soon can God bring down the pride of man, and make him helpless as an infant! How easily can he touch our senses, the organs of our most exquisite pleasures, and wither all our enjoyments! How dependent are we on him for the inestimable blessing of sight! And how easily can he annihilate all the sinner's pleasures, break up all his plans, and humble him in the dust! Sight is his gift; and it is a mercy unspeakably great that he does not whelm us in thick darkness, and destroy for ever all the pleasure that through this organ is conveyed to the soul.

12. Then the deputy . . . believed. Was convinced that Elymas was an impostor, and that the doctrine of Paul was true. There seems no reason to doubt that his faith was that which is connected

with eternal life; and if so, it is an evidence that the gospel was not always confined to the poor, and to those in obscure ranks of life. ¶ At the doctrine of the Lord. The word doctrine here seems to denote, not the teaching or instruction, but the wonderful effects which were connected with the doctrine. It was particularly the miracle with which he was astonished; but he might have been also deeply impressed and amazed at the purity and sublimity of the truths which were now expanded to his view. We learn nothing further respecting him in the New Testament.

13. Paul and his company. Those with him—Barnabas and John—and perhaps others who had been converted at Paphos; for it was common for many of the converts to Christianity to attend on the apostles in their travels. See ch. ix. 30. ¶ Loosed from Paphos. Departed from Paphos. See Notes on ver. 6. ¶ They came to Perga in Pamphylia. Pamphylia was a province of Asia Minor, lying over against Cyprus, having Cilicia east, Lycia west, Pisidia north, and the Mediterranean south. Perga was the metropolis of Pamphylia, and was situated, not on the sea-coast, but on the river Cestus, at some distance from its mouth. There was on a mountain near it a celebrated temple of Diana. ¶ And John, departing from them, &c. Why he departed from them is unknown. It might have been from fear of danger; or from alarm in travelling so far into unknown regions. But it is plain from ch. xv. 38, that it was from some cause which was deemed blameworthy, and that his conduct now was such as to make Paul unwilling again to have him as a companion.

14. They came to Antioch in Pisidia. Pisidia was a province of Asia Minor, and was situated north of Pamphylia. Antioch was not in Pisidia, but within the limits of Phrygia; but it belonged to Pisidia, and was called Antioch of dia, and went into "the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and sat down.

15 And after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

Pisidia to distinguish it from Antioch in Syria.—Pliny, Nat. Hist., 5, 27; Strabo, 12, p. 577 (Kuinol; Robinson's Calmet). The city was built by Seleucus, the founder of the Antioch in Syria, and was called after the name of his father, Antiochus. He is said to have built sixteen cities of that name (Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 122). ¶ Went into the synagogue. Though Paul and Barnabas were on a special mission to the Gentiles, yet they availed themselves of every opportunity to offer the gospel to the Jews first.

15. And after the reading of the law and the prophets. See Notes on Lu. iv.

16. ¶ The rulers of the synagogue. Those were persons who had the general charge of the synagogue and its service, to keep everything in order, and to direct the affairs of public worship. They designated the individuals who were to read the law; and called on those whom they pleased to address the people, and had the power also of inflicting punishment, and of excommunicating, &c. (Schleusner), Mar. v. 22, 35, 36, 38; Lu. viii. 49; xiii. 14; Ac. xviii. 8, 17. Seeing that Paul and Barnabas were Jews, though strangers, they sent to them, supposing it probable that they would wish to address their brethren. ¶ Men and brethren. An affectionate manner of commencing a discourse, recognizing them as their own countrymen, and as originally of the same religion. ¶ Say on. Greek, speak.

16. Men of Israel. Jews. The design of this discourse of Paul was to introduce to them the doctrine that Jesus was the Messiah. To do this, he evinced his usual wisdom and address. To have commenced at once on this would have probably excited their prejudice and rage. He therefore pursued a train of argument which showed that he was a firm believer in the Scriptures; that he was acquainted with the history and promises of the Old Testament; and that he was not disposed to call in question the doctrines of their fathers. The passage which had been read had probably given occasion for him to pursue this train of thought. By going over, in a summary way, their history, and recounting the former dealings of God with them, he showed them that he believed the Scriptures; that a promise had been given of a Messiah; and that he had actually come according to the promise. ¶ Ye that fear God. 17. The God of this people. Who has manifested himself as the peculiar friend and protector of this nation. This implied a belief that he had been particularly their God; a favourite doctrine of the Jews, and one that would conciliate their favour toward Paul. ¶ Of Israel. The Jews. ¶ Chose our fathers. Selected the nation to be a chosen and peculiar people to himself, De. vii. 6, 7. ¶ And exalted the people. Raised them up from a low and depressed state of bondage, to freedom, and to peculiar privileges as a nation. ¶ When they dwelt as strangers in Egypt—in ῥῆ ταξονίᾳ. This properly refers to their dwelling there as foreigners. They were always strangers there in a strange land. It was not their home. They never mingled with the people; never became constituent parts of the government; never used their language; never united with their usages and laws. They were a strange, separate, depressed people there; not less so than Africans are strangers and foreigners—a depressed and degraded people in this land (America), Ge. xxxvi. 7; Ex. vi. 4; xxii. 21; xxiii. 9; Le. xix. 34; De. x. 19. ¶ And with an high arm. This expression denotes great power. The arm denotes strength, as that by which we perform anything. A high arm, an arm lifted up, or stretched out, denotes that strength exerted to the utmost. The children of Israel are represented as having been delivered with an “out-stretched arm,” De. xxvi. 8; Ex. vi. 6. “With a strong hand,” Ex. vi. 1. Reference is made in these places to the plagues inflicted on Egypt, by which the Israelites were delivered; to their passage through the Red Sea; to their victories over their enemies, &c.

18. And about the time of forty years. They were this time going from Egypt to the land of Canaan, Ex. xvi. 35; Nu. xxxiii. 38. ¶ Suffered he their manners. This passage has been very variously rendered. See the margin. Syriac, “He nourished them,” &c. Arabic, “He blessed them, and nourished them,” &c. The Greek word is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. It properly means to tolerate, or endure the conduct of any one, implying that that conduct is evil, and tends to provoke to punishment. This is doubtless its meaning here. Probably Paul referred to the passage in De. i. 31, “The Lord thy God bare thee.” But instead of this word, ἤτασθε, to bear with, many MSS. read ἤτασθε, he sustained or nourished. This reading was followed by the Syriac, Arabic, and has been admitted by Griesbach into the text. This is also found in the Septuagint, in De. i. 31, which place Paul doubtless referred to. This would well suit the connection of the passage; and a change of a single letter might easily have occurred in a MS. It adds to the probability that this is the true reading, that it accords with De. i. 31; Nu. xi. 12; De. xxxii. 10. It is furthermore not probable that Paul would have commenced a discourse by reminding them of the obstinacy and wickedness of the nation. Such a course would rather tend to exasperate than to conciliate; but by reminding them of the mercies of God to them, and showing them that He had been their protector, he was better fitting them for his main purpose —that of showing them the kindness of the God of their fathers in sending to them a Saviour. ¶ In the wilderness. The desert through which they passed in going from Egypt to Canaan.

19. And when he had destroyed. Subdued, cast out, or extirpated them as nations. It does not mean that all were put to death, for many of them were left in the land; but that they were subdued as nations, they were broken up and overcome, De. vii. 1, “And hath cast out many nations before them,” &c. ¶ Seven nations. The Hittites, the Girgashites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, De. vii. 1; Jos. iii. 10; Ne. ix. 8. ¶ In the land of Canaan. The whole land was called by the name of one of the principal nations. This was the promised land; the holy land, &c. ¶ He divided, &c. See an account of this in Jos. xiv., xv. The lot was often used among the Jews to determine important questions. See Note on ch. i. 26.

20. He gave unto them judges. Men who were raised up in an extraordinary manner to administer the affairs of the nation, to defend it from enemies, &c. See Ju. ii. 16. ¶ About the space of four hundred and fifty years. This is a most difficult passage, and has exercised all the ingenuity of chronologists. The ancient versions agree with the present Greek text. The difficulty has been to reconcile it with what is said in 1 Ki. vi. 1, “And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon’s reign over Israel . . . he began to build the house of the Lord.” Now if to the forty years that the children of Israel were in the wilderness there be added the four hundred and fifty said in Acts to have been passed under the administration of the judges, and about seventeen years of the time of Joshua, forty for Samuel and the reign of Saul together, and forty for the reign of David, and three of Solomon before he began to build the temple, the sum will be five hundred and ninety years, a period greater by one hundred and ten years than that mentioned in 1 Ki. vi. 1. Various ways have been proposed to meet the difficulty. Doddridge renders it, “After these transactions, [which lasted] four hundred and fifty years, he gave them a series of judges,” &c., reckoning from the birth of Isaac, and supposing that Paul meant to refer to this whole time. But to this there are serious objections. (1) It is a forced and constrained interpretation, and one manifestly made to meet a difficulty. (2) There is no propriety in commencing this period at the birth of Isaac. That was in no manner remarkable, so far as Paul’s narrative was concerned; and Paul had not even referred to it. This same solution is offered also by Calovius, Mill, and De Dieu. Luther and Beza think it should be read three hundred instead of four hundred. But this is a mere conjecture, without any authority from MSS. Vitringa and some others suppose that the text has been corrupted by some transcriber, who has inserted this without authority. But there is no evidence of this; and the MSS. and ancient versions are uniform. None of these explanations are satisfactory. In the solution of the difficulty we may remark, (1) That nothing is more perplexing than the chronology of ancient facts. The difficulty is found in all writings; in profane as well as sacred. Mistakes are so easily made in transcribing numbers, where letters are used instead of writing the words at length, that we are not to wonder at such errors. (2) Paul would naturally use the chronology which was in current, common use among the Jews. It was not his business to settle such points; but he would speak of them as they were usually spoken of, and refer to them as others did. (3) There is reason to believe that that which is here mentioned was the common chronology of his time. It accords remarkably with that which is used by Josephus. Thus (Antiq., b. vii. ch. iii. § 1), Josephus says expressly that Solomon “began to build the temple in the fourth year of his reign, five hundred and ninety-two years after the exodus out of Egypt,” &c. This would allow forty years for their being in the wilderness, seventeen for Joshua, forty for Samuel and Saul, forty for the reign of David, and four hundred and fifty-two years for the time of the judges and the times of anarchy that intervened. This remarkable coincidence shows that this was the chronology which was then used, and which Paul had in view. (4) This chronology has the authority, also, of many eminent names. See Lightfoot and Boyle's Lectures, ch. xx. In what way this computation of Josephus and the Jews originated, it is not necessary here to inquire. It is a sufficient solution of the difficulty that Paul spake in their usual manner, without departing from his regular object by settling a point of chronology.

21. And afterward they desired a king. See 1 Sa. viii. 5; Ho. xiii. 10. It was predicted that they would have a king, De. xvii. 14, 15. <sup>t</sup>Saul, the son of Cis, is the Greek mode of writing the Hebrew name Kish. In the Old Testament it is uniformly written Kish, and it is to be regretted that this has not been retained in the New Testament. See 1 Sa. ix. 1. <sup>t</sup>By the space of forty years. During forty years. The Old Testament has not mentioned the time during which Saul reigned. Josephus says (Antiq., b. vi. ch. xiv. § 9) that he reigned eighteen years while Samuel was alive, and twenty-two years after his death. But Dr. Doddridge (note in loco) has shown that this cannot be correct, and that he probably reigned, as some copies of Josephus have it, but two years after the death of Samuel. Many critics suppose that the term of forty years here mentioned includes also the time in which Samuel judged the people. This supposition does not violate the text in this place, and may be probable. See Doddridge and Grotius on the place.

22. And when he had removed him. This was done because he rebelled against God in sparing the sheep and oxen and valuable property of Amalek, together with Agag the king, when he was commanded to destroy all, 1 Sa. xv. 8-23. He was put to death in a battle with the Philistines, 1 Sa. xxxi. 1-6. The phrase "when he removed him" refers probably to his rejection as a king, and not to his death; for David was anointed king before the death of Saul, and almost immediately after the rejection of Saul on account of his rebellion in the business of Amalek. See 1 Sa. xvi. 12, 13. <sup>t</sup>He gave testimony. He bore witness, 1 Sa. xiii. 14. <sup>t</sup>I have found David, &c. This is not quoted literally, but contains the substance of what is expressed in various places. Comp. 1 Sa. xiii. 14, with Ps. lxxxix. 20, and 1 Sa. xvi. 1, 12. <sup>t</sup>A man after mine own heart. This expression is found in 1 Sa. xiii. 14. The connection shows that it means simply a man who would not be rebellious and disobedient as Saul was, but would do the will of God and keep his commandments. This refers, doubtless, rather to the public than to the private character of David; to his character as a king. It means that he would make the will of God the great rule and law of his reign, in contradistinction from Saul, who, as a king, had disobeyed God. At the same time it is true that the prevailing character of David, as a pious, humble, devoted man, was that he was a man after God's own heart, and was beloved by him as a holy man. He had faults; he committed sin; but who is free from it? He was guilty of great offences; but he also evinced, in a degree equally eminent, repentance (see Ps. li.); and not less in his private than his public character did he evince those traits which were prevailingly such as accorded with the heart, that is, the earnest desires, of God. <sup>t</sup>Which shall fulfil all my will. Saul had not done it. He had disobeyed God in a case where he had received an express command. The characteristic of David would be that he would obey the commands of God. That David did this — that he maintained the worship of God, opposed idolatry, and sought to promote universal obe-

See Notes on Jn. i. 20; Mat. iii. 11.

26. Men and brethren. Paul now exhorts them to embrace the Lord Jesus as the Messiah. He uses, therefore, the most respectful and fraternal language. ¶ Children of the stock of Abraham. Descendants of Abraham; you who regard Abraham as your ancestor. He means here to address particularly the native-born Jews; and this appellation is used because they valued themselves highly on account of their descent from Abraham (see Notes on Mat. iii. 9); and because the promise of the Messiah had been specially given to him. ¶ And whosoever, &c. Proselytes. to that nation (Mat. xv. 24); and the design was to offer to them first the message of life. See Notes on ver. 46.

27. Because they knew him not. The statement in this verse is designed, not to reproach the Jews at Jerusalem, but to introduce the fact that Jesus had died, and had risen again. With great wisdom and tenderness, Paul speaks of the murderers of the Saviour in such a manner as not to exasperate, but, as far as possible, to mitigate their crime. There was sufficient guilt in the murder of the Son of God to fill the nation with alarm, even after all that could be said to mitigate the deed. See Ac. ii. 23, 36, 37. When Paul says, "They knew him not," he means that they did not know him to be the Messiah (see 1 Co. ii. 8); they were ignorant of the true meaning of the prophecies of the Old Testament; they regarded him as an impostor. See Notes on Ac. iii. 17. ¶ Nor yet the voices of the prophets. The meaning of the predictions of the Old Testament respecting the Messiah. They expected a prince and a conqueror, but did not expect a Messiah that was poor and despised; that was a man of sorrows and that was to die on a cross. ¶ Which are read every sabbath-day. In the synagogues. Though the Scriptures were read so constantly, yet they were ignorant of their true meaning. They were blinded by pride, and prejudice, and preconceived opinions. Men may often in this way read the Bible a good part of their lives and never understand it. ¶ They have fulfilled them, &c. By putting him to death they have accomplished what was foretold.

This is conclusively shown by the trial itself. After all their efforts; after the treason of Judas; after their employing false witnesses; still no crime was laid to his charge. The Sanhedrim condemned him for blasphemy; and yet they knew that they could not substantiate the charge before Pilate, and they therefore endeavoured to procure his condemnation on the ground of sedition. Comp. Lu. xxii. 70, 71, with xxiii. 1, 2. ¶ Yet desired they Pilate, &c. Mat. xxvii. 1, 2; Lu. xxiii. 4, 5.

29. They took him down, &c. That is, it was done by the Jews. Not that it was done by those who put him to death, but by Joseph of Arimathea, and by Nicodemus, who were Jews. Paul is speaking of what was done to Jesus by the Jews at Jerusalem; and he does not affirm that the same persons put him to death and laid him in a tomb, but that all this was done by Jews. See Jn. xix. 38, 39.

30. But God raised him, &c. See Notes on ch. ii. 23, 24.

31. And he was seen. See Notes at the end of Matthew. ¶ Many days. Forty days, ch. i. 3. ¶ Of them which came up. By the apostles particularly. He was seen by others; but they are especially mentioned as having been chosen for this object, to bear witness to him, and as having been particularly qualified for it.

32. And we. We who are here present. Paul and Barnabas. ¶ Declare unto you glad tidings. We preach the gospel—the good news. To a Jew, nothing could be more grateful intelligence than that the Messiah had come; to a sinner convinced of his sins nothing can be more cheering than to hear of a Saviour. ¶ The promise, &c. The promise here refers to all that had been spoken in the Old Testament respecting the advent, sufferings, death, and resurrection of Christ.

33. God hath fulfilled. God has completed or carried into effect by the resurrection of Jesus. He does not say that every part of the promise had reference to his resurrection; but his being raised up completed or perfected the fulfilment of the promises which had been made respecting him. ¶ In the second psalm, ver. 7. ¶ Thou art my Son. This psalm has been usually understood as referring to the Messiah. See Notes on ch. iv. 25. ¶ This day have I begotten thee. It is evident that Paul uses the expression here as implying that the Lord Jesus is called the Son of God because he raised him up from the dead, and that he means to imply that it was for this reason that he is so called. This interpretation of an inspired apostle fixes the meaning of this passage in the psalm, and proves that it is not there used with reference to the doctrine of eternal generation, or to his incarnation, but that he is called his Son because he was raised from the dead. And this interpretation accords with the scope of the psalm. In ver. 1-3 the psalmist records the combination of the rulers of the earth against the Messiah, and their efforts to cast off his reign. This was done, and the Messiah was rejected. All this pertains, not to his previous existence, but to the Messiah on the earth. In ver. 4, 5, the psalmist shows that their efforts would not be successful; that God would laugh at their designs; that is, that their plans should not succeed. In ver. 6, 7, he shows that the Messiah would be established as a king; that this was the fixed decree, and that he had been begotten for this. All this is represented as subsequent to the raging of the heathen, and to the counsel of the kings against him, and must, therefore, refer, not to his eternal generation or his incarnation, but to something succeeding his death; that is, to his resurrection, and his establishment as King at the right hand of God. This interpretation by the apostle Paul of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that "the promise which was made unto the fathers, proves, therefore, that this passage is not to be used to establish the doctrine of the eternal generation of Christ. Christ is called the Son of God for various reasons. In Lu. i. 35, because he was begotten by the Holy Ghost. In this place, on account of his resurrection. In Ro. i. 4 it is also said that he was declared to be the Son of God by the resurrection from the dead. See Notes on that place. The resurrection from the dead is represented as in some sense the beginning of life, and it is with reference to this that the terms Son, and begotten from the dead, are used, as the birth of a child is the beginning of life. Thus Christ is said, Col. i. 18, to be "the first-born from the dead;" and thus, in Re. i. 5, he is called "the first-begotten of the dead;" and with reference to this renewal or beginning of life he is called a Son. In whatever other senses he is called a Son in the New Testament, yet it is here proved, (1) That he is called a Son from his resurrection; and (2) That this is the sense in which the expression in the psalm is to be used. ¶ This day. The words "this day" would naturally, in the connection in which they are found, refer to the time when the "decree" was made. The purpose was formed before Christ came into the world; it was executed or carried into effect by the resurrection from the dead. See Notes on Ps. ii. 7. ¶ Have I begotten thee. This evidently cannot be understood in a literal-sense. It literally refers to the relation of an earthly father to his children; but in no such sense can it be applied to the relation of God the Father to the Son. It must, therefore, be figurative. The word sometimes figuratively means to produce, to cause to exist in any way: 2 Ti. ii. 23, "Unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender [beget] strife." It refers also to the labours of the apostles in securing the conversion of sinners to the gospel: 1 Co. iv. 15, "In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel;" Phile. ver. 10, "Whom [Onesimus] I have begotten in my bonds." It is applied to Christians:

no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure <sup>3</sup>mercies of David.

<sup>3</sup> τὸν ἅγιον, holy, or, just things; which word the LXX., both in the place of Is.55.3, and in many others, use for that which is in the Hebrew, mercies.

Jn. i. 13, "Which were born [begotten], not of blood, &c., but of God;" iii. 3, "Except a man be born [begotten] again," &c. In all these places it is used in a figurative sense to denote the commencement of spiritual life by the power of God; so raising up sinners from the death of sin, or so producing spiritual life that they should sustain to him the relation of sons. Thus he raised up Christ from the dead, and imparted life to his body; and hence he is said figuratively to have begotten him from the dead, and thus sustains toward the risen Saviour the relation of father. Comp. Col. i. 18; Re. i. 5; He. i. 5.

34. And as concerning. In further proof of this. To show that he actually did it, he proceeds to quote another passage of Scripture. ¶ No more to return to corruption. The word corruption is usually employed to denote putrefaction, or the mouldering away of a body in the grave; its returning to its native dust. But it is certain (ver. 35. See Notes on ch. ii. 27) that the body of Christ never in this sense saw corruption. The word is therefore used to denote death, or the grave, the cause and place of corruption. The word is thus used in the Septuagint. It means here simply that he should not again die. ¶ He said on this wise. He said thus (εὐτραπέλως). ¶ I will give you. This quotation is made from Is. lv. 3. It is quoted from the Septuagint, with a change of but one word, not affecting the sense. In Isaiah the passage does not refer particularly to the resurrection of the Messiah, nor is it the design of Paul to affirm that it does. His object in this verse is not to prove that he would rise from the dead, but that, being risen, he would not again die. That the passage in Isaiah refers to the Messiah there can be no doubt, ver. 1, 4. The passage here quoted is an address to the people, an assurance to them that the promise made to David would be performed, a solemn declaration that he would make an everlasting covenant with them through the Messiah, the promised descendant of David. ¶ The sure mercies of David. The word mercies here refers to the promise made to David; the mercy or favour shown to him by promising to him a successor that should not fail to sit on his throne, 2 Sa. vii. 16; Ps. lxxxix. 4, 5; cxxxii. 11, 12. These mercies and promises are called "sure," as being true or unfaulting; they would certainly be accomplished. Comp. 2 Co. i. 20. The word David here does not refer, as many have supposed, to the Messiah, but to the King of Israel. God made to David a promise, a certain pledge; he bestowed on him this special mercy, in promising that he should have a successor who should sit for ever on his throne. This promise was understood by the Jews, and is often referred to in the New Testament, as relating to the Messiah. Paul here says that that promise is fulfilled. The only question is how it refers to the subject on which he was dis coursing. The point was not mainly to prove his resurrection, but to show particularly that he would never die again, or that he would for ever live and reign. And the argument is, that as God had promised that David should have a successor who should sit for ever on his throne, and as this prediction now terminated in the Messiah, the Lord Jesus, it followed that, as that promise was sure and certain, he would never die again. He must live if the promise was fulfilled. And though he had been put to death, yet under that general promise there was a certainty that he would live again. It was impossible, the meaning is, that the Messiah, the promised successor of David, the perpetual occupier of his throne, should remain under the power of death. Under this assurance the church now reposes its' hopes. Zion's King now lives, ever able to vindicate and save his people.

thing—that he must rise and live for ever. ¶ He saith. God says by David, or David spake the promises made by God. ¶ In another psalm. Ps. xvi. 10. ¶ Thou will not suffer, &c. See this explained in the Notes on ch. ii. 27.

36. For David, &c. This verse is designed to show that the passage in Ps. xvi. could not refer to David, and must therefore relate to some other person. In ver. 37 it is affirmed that this could refer to no one, in fact, but to the Lord Jesus. ¶ After he had served his generation. See the margin. Syriac, "David in his own generation having served the will of God, and slept," &c. Arabic, "David served in his own age, and saw God." The margin probably most correctly expresses the sense of the passage. To serve a generation, or an age, is an unusual and almost unintelligible expression. ¶ Fell on sleep. Greek, slept, that is, died. This is the usual word to denote the death of saints. It is used of David in 1 Ki. ii. 10. See Notes on Mat. xxvii. 52. ¶ And was laid unto, &c. And was buried with his fathers, &c., 1 Ki. ii. 10. ¶ And saw corruption. Remained in the grave, and returned to his native dust. See this point argued more at length by Peter in Ac. ii. 29–31, and explained in the Notes on that place.

37. But he, whom God raised again. The Lord Jesus. ¶ Saw no corruption. Was raised without undergoing the usual change that succeeds death. As David had returned to corruption, and the Lord Jesus had not, it followed that this passage in Ps. xvi. referred to the Messiah.

38. Be it known, &c. Paul, having proved his resurrection, and shown that he was the Messiah, now states the benefits that were to be derived from his death. ¶ Through this man. See Notes on Lu. xxiv. 47.

39. And by him. By means of him; by his sufferings and death. ¶ All that which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

believe. See Notes on Mar. xvi. 16. ¶ Are justified. Are regarded and treated as if they were righteous. They are pardoned, and admitted to the favour of God, and treated as if they had not offended. See this point explained in the Notes on Ro. i. 17; iii. 24, 25; iv. 1-8. ¶ From all things. From the guilt of all offences. ¶ From which ye could not, &c. The law of Moses commanded what was to be done. It appointed sacrifices and offerings as typical of a greater sacrifice. But those sacrifices could not take away sin. See Notes on He. ix. 7-14; x. 1-4, 11. The design of the law was not to reveal a way of pardon. That was reserved to be the peculiar purpose of the gospel. ¶ The law of Moses. The commands and institutions which he, under the direction of God, established.

40. Beware, therefore. Avoid that which is threatened. It will come on some; and Paul exhorted his hearers to beware lest it should come on them. It was the more important to caution them against this danger, as the Jews held that they were safe. ¶ Lest that come. That calamity; that threatened punishment. ¶ In the prophets. In that part of the Scriptures called "the Prophets." The Jews divided the Old Testament into three parts, of which "the Book of the Prophets" was one. See Notes on Lu. xxiv. 44. The place where this is recorded is Hab. i. 5. It is not taken from the Hebrew, but substantially from the Septuagint. The original design of the threatening was to announce the destruction that would come upon the nation by the Chaldeans. The original threatening was fulfilled. But it was as applicable to the Jews in the time of Paul as in the time of Habakkuk. The principle of the passage is, that if they held in contempt the doings of God, they would perish. The work which God was to do by means of the Chaldeans was so fearful, so unusual, and so remarkable, that they would not believe it in time to avoid the calamity. In the same way, the manner in which God gave the Messiah was so little in accordance with their expectation, that they might see it, yet disbelieve it; that they might have the fullest proof, and yet despise it; that they might wonder, and be amazed and astonished, and yet refuse to believe it, and be destroyed.

41. Behold, ye despisers. Hebrew, "Behold, ye among the heathen." The change from this expression to "ye despisers" was made by the Septuagint translators by a very slight alteration in the Hebrew word—probably from a variation in the copy which they used. It arose from reading בָּגִידִים instead of בָּגִידִים, bogedim instead of baggioim. The Syriac, the Arabic, as well as the LXX., follow this reading. ¶ And wonder. Hebrew, "And regard, and wonder marvellously." ¶ And perish. This is not in the Hebrew, but is in the Septuagint and the Arabic. The word means literally to be removed from the sight; to disappear; and then to corrupt, defile, destroy, Mat. vi. 16, 19. The word, however, may mean to be suffused with shame; to be overwhelmed and confounded (Schleusner); and it may perhaps have this meaning here, answering to the Hebrew. The word used here is not that which is commonly employed to denote eternal perdition, though Paul seems to use it with reference to their destruction for rejecting the gospel. ¶ For I work a work. I do a thing. The thing to which the prophet Habakkuk referred was, that God would bring upon them the Chaldeans, that would destroy the temple and nation. In like manner Paul says that God in that time might bring upon the nation similar calamities. By rejecting the Messiah and his gospel, and by persevering in wickedness, they would bring upon themselves the destruction of the temple, the city, and the nation. It was this threatened destruction doubtless to which the apostle referred. ¶ Which ye shall in no wise believe. Which you will not believe. So remarkable, so unusual, so surpassing anything which had occurred. The original reference in Habakkuk is to the destruction of the temple by the Chaldeans; a thing which the Jews would not suppose could happen. The temple was so splendid; it had been so manifestly built by the direction of God; it had been so long under his protection, that they would suppose that it could not be given into the hands of their enemies to be demolished; and even though it were predicted by a prophet of God, still they would not believe it. The same feelings the Jews would have respecting the temple and city in the time of Paul. Though it was foretold by the Messiah, yet they were so confident that it was protected by God, that they would not believe that it could possibly be destroyed. The same infatuation seems to have possessed them during the siege of the city by the Romans. ¶ Though a man, &c. Though it be plainly predicted. We may learn, (1) That men may be greatly amazed and impressed by the doings or works of God, and yet be destroyed. (2) There may be a prejudice so obstinate that even a divine revelation will not remove it. (3) The fancied security of sinners will not save them. (4) There are men who will not believe in the possibility of their being lost, though it be declared by prophets, by apostles, by the Saviour, and by God. They will still remain in fancied security, and suffer nothing to alarm or rouse them. But, (5) As the fancied security of the Jews furnished no safety against the Babylonians or the Romans, so it is true that the indifference and unconcern of sinners will not furnish any security against the dreadful wrath of God. Yet there are multitudes who live amidst the displays of God's power and mercy in the redemption of sinners, and who witness the effects of his goodness and truth in revivals of religion, who live to despise it all; who are amazed and confounded by it; and who perish.

42. And when the Jews, &c. There is a great variety in the MSS. on this verse, and in the ancient versions. Griesbach and Knapp read it, "And when they were gone out, they besought them that these words might be spoken," &c. The Syriac reads it, "When they departed from them, they sought from them that these words might be spoken to them on another Sabbath." The Arabic, "Some of the synagogue of the Jews asked of them that they would exhort the Gentiles with them," &c. If these readings be correct, then the meaning is, that some of the Jews exhorted the apostles to proclaim these truths at some other time, particularly to the Gentiles. The MSS. greatly vary in regard to the passage, and it is, perhaps, impossible to determine the true reading. If the present reading in the English translation is to be regarded as genuine—of which, however, there is very little evidence—the meaning is, that a part of the Jews, perhaps a majority of them, rejected the message, and went out, though many of them followed Paul and Barnabas, ver. 43. ¶ The Gentiles besought. This expression is wanting in the Vulgate, Coptic, Arabic, and Syriac versions, and in a great many MSS. (Mill). It is omitted by Griesbach, Knapp, and others, and is probably spurious. Among other reasons which may be suggested why it is not genuine, this is one, that it is not probable that the Gentiles were in the habit of attending the synagogue. Those who attended there were called proselytes. The expression, if genuine, might mean either that the Gentiles besought, or that they besought the Gentiles. The latter would be the more probable meaning. ¶ The next sabbath. The margin has probably the correct rendering of the passage. The meaning of the verse is, that a wish was expressed that these doctrines might be repeated to them in the intermediate time before the next Sabbath.

43. When the congregation. Greek, when the synagogue was dissolved. ¶ Broken up. Dismissed. It does not mean that it was broken up by violence or disorder. It was dismissed in the usual way. ¶ Many of the Jews. Probably the majority of them rejected the message. See ver. 45. Still a deep impression was made on many of them. ¶ And religious proselytes. See ver. 16. Comp. Notes on Mat. xxiii. 15. Greek, proselytes worshipping. ¶ Persuaded them to continue, &c. It would appear from to them, persuaded them to 'continue in the grace of God.'

44 And the next sabbath-day came almost the whole city together, to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things

this that they professedly received the truth and embraced the Lord Jesus. This success was remarkable, and shows the power of the gospel when it is preached faithfully to men. ¶ In the grace of God. In his favour—in the faith, and prayer, and obedience which would be connected with his favour. The gospel is called the grace or favour of God, and they were exhorted to persevere in their attachment to it.

44. And the next sabbath-day. This was the regular day for worship, and it was natural that a greater multitude should convene on that day than on the other days of the week. ¶ Came almost the whole city. Whether this was in the synagogue is not affirmed; but it is probable that that was the place where the multitude convened. The news of the presence of the apostles, and of their doctrines, had been circulated, doubtless, by the Gentiles who had heard them, and curiosity attracted the multitude to hear them. Comp. Notes on ver. 7.

45. They were filled with envy. Greek, zeal. The word here denotes wrath, indignation, that such multitudes should be disposed to hear a message which they rejected, and which threatened to overthrow their religion. ¶ Speak against. Opposed the doctrine that Jesus was the Messiah; that the Messiah would be humble, lowly, despised, and put to death. ¶ Contradicting. Contradicting the apostles. This was evidently done in their presence, ver. 46, and would cause great tumult and disorder. ¶ And blaspheming. See Notes on Mat. ix. 3. The sense evidently is, that they reproached and vilified Jesus of Nazareth; they spake of him with contempt and scorn. To speak thus of him is denominated blasphemy, Lu. xxii. 65. When men are enraged they little regard the words which they utter, and little care how they may be estimated by God. When men attached to sect and party, in religion or politics, have no good arguments to employ, they attempt to overwhelm their adversaries by bitter and reproachful words. Men in the heat of strife, and in professed zeal for peculiar doctrines, more frequently utter blasphemy than they are aware. Precious and pure doctrines are often thus vilified because we do not believe them; and the heart of the Saviour is pierced anew, and his cause bleeds, by the wrath and wickedness of his professed friends. Comp. ch. xviii. 6.

46. Waxed bold. Became bold; spake boldly and openly. They were not terrified by their strife, or alarmed by their opposition. The contradictions and blasphemies of sinners often show that their consciences are alarmed; that the truth has taken effect; and then is not the time to shrink, but to declare more fearlessly the truth. ¶ It was necessary. It was so designed; so commanded. They regarded it as their duty to offer the gospel first to their own countrymen. See Notes on Lu. xxiv. 47. ¶ Ye put it from you. You reject it. ¶ And judge yourselves. By your conduct, by your rejecting it, you declare this. The word judge here does not mean they expressed such an opinion, or that they regarded themselves as unworthy of eternal life—for they thought just the reverse; but that by their conduct they CONDEMNED themselves. By such conduct they did, in fact, pass sentence on themselves, and show that they were unworthy of eternal life, and of having the offer of salvation any farther made to them. Sinners by their conduct do, in fact, condemn themselves, and show that they are not only unfit to be saved, but that they have advanced so far in wickedness that there is no hope of their salvation, and no propriety in offering them, any farther, eternal life. See Notes on Mat. vii. 6. ¶ Unworthy, &c. Unfit to be saved. They had deliberately and solemnly rejected the gospel, and thus worthy of everlasting life, lo, "we turn to the Gentiles.

47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, shown that they were not fitted to enter into everlasting life. We may remark here, (1) When men, even but once, deliberately and solemnly reject the offers of God's mercy, it greatly endangers their salvation. The probability is, that they then put the cup of salvation for ever away from themselves. (2) The gospel produces an effect wherever it is preached. (3) When sinners are hardened, and spurn the gospel, it may often be the duty of ministers to turn their efforts toward others where they may have more prospect of success. A man will not long labour on a rocky, barren, sterile soil, when there is near him a rich and fertile valley that will abundantly reward the pains of cultivation. ¶ Lo, we turn, &c. We shall offer the gospel to them, and devote ourselves to seeking their salvation.

47. For so, &c. Paul, as usual, appeals to the Scriptures to justify his course. He here appeals to the Old Testament rather than to the command of the Saviour, because the Jews recognized the authority of their own Scriptures, while they would have turned in scorn from the command of Jesus of Nazareth. ¶ I have set thee, &c. I have constituted or appointed thee. This passage is found in Is. xlix. 6. See Notes on Is. xlix. 1-6. ¶ To be a light. See Notes on Jn. i. 4. ¶ To the Gentiles. This was in accordance with the uniform doctrines of Isaiah, Is. xlvi. 1; liv. 3; lx. 3, 5, 16; lxi. 6, 9; lxii. 2; lxvi. 12; comp. Ro. xv. 9-12. ¶ For salvation. To save sinners. ¶ Unto the ends of the earth. To all lands; in all nations. See Notes on ch. i. 8.

48. When the Gentiles heard this. Heard that the gospel was to be preached to them. The doctrine of the Jews had been that salvation was confined to themselves. The Gentiles rejoiced that from the mouths of Jews themselves they now heard a different doctrine. ¶ They glorified the word of the Lord. They honoured it as a message from God; they recognized and received it as the word of God. The expression conveys the idea of praise on account that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; and as many of it, and of reverence for the message as the word of God. ¶ And as many as were ordained — ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι. Syriac, "Who were destined," or constituted. Vulgate, "As many as were foreordained (quotquot erant praordinati) to eternal life believed." There has been much difference of opinion in regard to this expression. One class of commentators has supposed that it refers to the doctrine of election—to God's ordaining men to eternal life, and another class to their being disposed themselves to embrace the gospel—to those among them who did not reject and despise the gospel, but who were disposed and inclined to embrace it. The main inquiry is, what is the meaning of the word rendered ordained? The word is used but eight times in the New Testament: Mat. xxviii. 16, "Into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them;" that is, previously appointed—before his death; Lu. vii. 8, "For I also am a man set under authority," appointed, or designated as a soldier, to be under the authority of another; Ac. xv. 2, "They determined that Paul and Barnabas, &c., should go to Jerusalem;" Ac. xxii. 10, "It shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do;" Ac. xxviii. 23, "And when they had appointed him a day," &c.; Ro. xiii. 1, "The powers that be are ordained of God;" I Co. xvi. 15, "They have addicted themselves to the ministry of saints." The word τάσσω, tasso, or τάττω, tatto, properly means to place—to place in a certain rank or order. Its meaning is derived from arranging or disposing a body of soldiers in regular military order. In the places which have been mentioned above, the word is used to denote the following things: (1) To command, or to designate, Mat. xxviii. 16; Ac. xxii. 10; xxviii. 23. (2) To institute, constitute, or appoint, Ro. xiii. 1; comp. 2 Sa. vii. 11; 1 Sa. xxii. 7. (3) To determine, to take counsel, to resolve, Ac. xv. 2. (4) To subject to the authority of another, Lu. vii. 8. (5) To addict to; to devote to, 1 Co. xvi. 15. The meaning may be thus expressed: (1) The word is never used to as were ordained to eternal life, believed.

49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, denote an internal disposition or inclination arising from one's own self. It does not mean that they disposed themselves to embrace eternal life. (2) It has uniformly the notion of an ordering, disposing, or arranging from without; that is, from some other source than the individual himself; as of a soldier, who is arranged or classified according to the will of the proper officer. In relation to these persons it means, therefore, that they were disposed or inclined to this from some other source than themselves. (3) It does not properly refer to an eternal decree, or directly to the doctrine of election—though that may be inferred from it; but it refers to their being THEN IN FACT disposed to embrace eternal life. They were then inclined by an influence from without themselves, or so disposed as to embrace eternal life. That this was done by the influence of the Holy Spirit is clear from all parts of the New Testament, Tit. iii. 5, 6; Jn. i. 13. It was not a disposition or arrangement originating with themselves, but with God. (4) This implies the doctrine of election. It was, in fact, that doctrine expressed in an act. It was nothing but God's disposing them to embrace eternal life. And that he does this according to a plan in his own mind—a plan which is unchangeable as he himself is unchangeable—is clear from the Scriptures. Comp. Ac. xviii. 10; Ro. viii. 28–30; ix. 15, 16, 21, 23; Ep. i. 4, 5, 11. The meaning may be expressed in few words—who were THEN disposed, and in good earnest determined, to embrace eternal life, by the operation of the grace of God on their hearts. ¶ Eternal life. Salvation. See Notes on Jn. iii. 36.

50. But the Jews stirred up. Excited opposition. ¶ Honourable women. See Notes on Mar. xv. 43. Women of influence, and connected with families of rank. Perhaps they were proselytes, and were connected with the magistrates of the city. ¶ And raised persecution. Probably on the ground that and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51 But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

they produced disorder. The aid of "chief men" has often been called in to oppose revivals of religion, and to put a period, if possible, to the spread of the gospel. ¶ Out of their coasts. Out of the regions of their country; out of their province.

51. But they shook off the dust, &c. See Notes on Mat. x. 14. ¶ And came unto Iconium. This was the capital of Lycaonia. It is now called Konieh, and is the capital of Caramania. "Konieh extends to the east and south over the plain far beyond the walls, which are about two miles in circumference. . . . Mountains covered with snow rise on every side, excepting toward the east, where a plain, as flat as the desert of Arabia, extends far beyond the reach of the eye" (Capt. Kinneir). "Little, if anything, remains of Greek or Roman Iconium, if we except the ancient inscriptions and the fragments of sculptures which are built into the Turkish walls." "The city wall is said to have been erected by the Seljukian sultans: it seems to have been built from the ruins of more ancient buildings, as broken columns, capitals, pedestals, bas-reliefs, and other pieces of sculpture contribute toward its construction. It has eighty gates, of a square form, each known by a separate name, and, as well as most of the towers, embellished with Arabic inscriptions. . . . I observed a few Greek characters on the walls, but they were in so elevated a situation that I could not decipher them" (Capt. Kinneir). See Colonel Leake's description; and also the work of Col. Chesney (1850) on the Euphrates Expedition, vol. i. p. 348, 349.

52. And the disciples. The disciples in Antioch. ¶ Were filled with joy. This happened even in the midst of persecution, and is one of the many evidences that the gospel is able to fill the soul with joy even in the severest trials.

CHAPTER XIV.

AND it came to pass in Iconium that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake that a great multitude, both of the Jews and also of the Greeks, believed.

3 Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which

CHAPTER XIV.

1. In Iconium. See Notes on ch. xiii. 51. In this place, and in Antioch and Lystra, Timothy became acquainted with Paul and his manner of life, 2 Ti. iii. 10, 11. ¶ So spake. Spake with such power—their preaching was attended so much with the influence of the Spirit. ¶ And of the Greeks. Probably proselytes from the Greeks, who were in the habit of attending the synagogue.

2. But the unbelieving Jews, &c. See Notes on ch. xiii. 50. ¶ And made their minds evil-affected. Irritated, or exasperated them. ¶ Against the brethren. One of the common appellations by which Christians were known.

3. Long time therefore. It seems probable that there were here no forcible or public measures to expel them, as there had been at Antioch (ch. xiii. 50), and they therefore regarded it as their duty to remain. God granted them here also great success, which was the main reason for their continuing a long time. Persecution and opposition may be attended often with signal success to the gospel. ¶ Spake boldly in the Lord. In the cause of the Lord Jesus, or in his name and by his authority. Perhaps, also, the expression includes the idea of their trusting in the Lord. ¶ Which gave testimony. Bore witness to the truth of their message by working miracles, &c. Comp. Mar. xvi. 20. This was evidently the Lord Jesus to whom reference is here made, and it shows that he was still, though bodily absent from them, clothed with power, and still displayed that power in the advancement of his cause. The conversion of sinners accomplished by him is always a testimony as decided as it is cheering to the labours and messages of his servants. ¶ Unto the word of his grace.

“gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But the multitude of the city was divided; and <sup>a</sup>part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles.

5 And when there was an assault made, both of the Gentiles and also of the Jews, with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them,

6 They were ware of it, <sup>a</sup>and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of His gracious word, or message. ¶ And granted signs, &c. Miracles. See Notes on Ac. ii. 22.

4. Was divided. Into parties. Greek, there was a schism—Eσχισθη. ¶ A part held with the Jews. Held to the doctrines of the Jews, in opposition to the apostles. A revival of religion often produces excitement by the bad passions of opposers. The enemies of the truth form parties, and organize opposition. It is no uncommon thing even now for such parties to be formed; but the fault is not in Christianity. It lies with those who form a party against religion, and who confederate themselves, as was done here, to oppose it.

5. An assault made. Greek, a rush—ιρων. It denotes an impetuous excitement and aggression; a rush to put them to death. It rather describes a popular tumult than a calm and deliberate purpose. There was a violent, tumultuous excitement. ¶ Both of the Gentiles, &c. Of that part of them which was opposed to the apostles. ¶ To use them despitefully. See Notes on Mat. v. 44. To reproach them; to bring contempt upon them; to injure them. ¶ And to stone them. To put them to death by stoning; probably as blasphemers, Ac. vii. 57-59.

6. They were ware of it. They were in some way informed of the excitement and of their danger. ¶ And fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycania. Lycania was one of the provinces of Asia Minor. It had Galatia north, Pisidia south, Cappadocia east, and Phrygia west. It was formerly within the limits of Phrygia, but was erected into a separate province by Augustus. “The district of Lycania extends from the ridges of Mount Taurus and the borders of Cilicia on the south,

Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

7 And there they preached the gospel.

8 And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked.

to the Cappadocian hills on the north. It is a bare and dreary region, unwatered by streams, though in parts liable to occasional inundations. Strabo mentions one place where water was even sold for money. Across some portion of this plain Paul and Barnabas travelled both before and after their residence in Iconium. After leaving the high land to the north-west, during a journey of several hours before arriving at the city, the eye ranges freely over a vast expanse of level ground to the south and the east. The two most eminent objects in the view are the snowy summits of Mount Argæus, rising high above all the intervening hills in the direction of Armenia, and the singular mountain mass called the 'Kara-Dagh,' or 'Black Mount,' south-eastward in the direction of Cilicia. And still these features continue to be conspicuous after Iconium is left behind, and the traveller moves on over the plain toward Lystra and Derbe. Mount Argæus still rises far to the north-east, at the distance of 150 miles. The Black Mountain is gradually approached, and discovered to be an isolated mass, with reaches of the plain extending round it like channels of the sea. The cities of Lystra and Derbe were somewhere about the bases of the Black Mountain." The exact position of Lystra and Derbe is still subject to some uncertainty. In 1824 Col. Leake wrote thus: "Nothing can more strongly show the little progress that has hitherto been made in a knowledge of the ancient geography of Asia Minor, than that, of the cities which the journey of St. Paul has made so interesting to us, the site of one only (Iconium) is yet certainly known. Perga, Antioch of Pisidia, Lystra, and Derbe, remain to be discovered." The situation of the first two of these towns has been since that fully identified, and some ruins have been found which have been supposed to mark the place of Lystra and Derbe, though not with entire certainty. ¶ And unto the region, &c. The adjacent country. Though persecuted, they still preached; and though driven from one city, they fled into another. This was the direction of the Saviour, Mat. x. 23.

8. And there sat. There dwelt, Mat. ix. 16; Ac. xviii. 11 (margin). The word sat, however, indicates his usual posture, his helpless condition. Such persons commonly sat by the wayside, or in some public place, to ask for alms, Mar. x. 46. ¶ Impotent in his feet—ἀδύνατος. Without any power. Entirely deprived of the use of his feet. ¶ Being a cripple. Lame. ¶ Who never had walked. The miracle, therefore, would be more remarkable, as the man would be well known. As they were persecuted from place to place, and opposed in every manner, it was desirable that a signal miracle should be performed to carry forward and establish the work of the gospel.

9. Who stedfastly beholding him. Fixing his eyes intently on him. See Notes on Ac. i. 10. ¶ And perceiving. How he perceived this is not said. Perhaps it was indicated by the ardour, humility, and strong desire depicted in his countenance. He had heard Paul, and perhaps the apostle had dwelt particularly on the miracles with which the gospel had been attested. The miracles wrought also in Iconium had doubtless also been heard of in Lystra. ¶ Had faith to be healed. Comp. Mat. ix. 21, 22, 28, 29; Lu. vii. 50; xvii. 19; xviii. 42.

11. They lifted up their voices. They spoke with astonishment, such as might be expected when it was supposed that the gods had come down. ¶ In the speech of Lycaonia. What this language was has much perplexed commentators. It was probably a mixture of the Greek and Syriac. In that region generally the Greek was usually spoken with more or less purity; and from the fact that it was not far from the regions of Syria, it is probable that the Greek language was corrupted with this foreign admixture. ¶ The gods, &c. All the region was idolatrous. The gods which were worshipped there were those which were worshipped throughout Greece. ¶ Are come down. The miracle which Paul had wrought led them to suppose this. It was evidently beyond human ability, and they had no other way of accounting for it than by supposing that their gods had personally appeared. ¶ In the likeness of men. Many of their gods were heroes, whom they worshipped after they were dead. It was a common belief among them that the gods appeared to men in human form. The poems of Homer, of Virgil, &c., are filled with accounts of such appearances, and the only way in which they supposed the gods to take knowledge of human affairs, and to aid men, was by their personally appearing in this form. See Homer's Odyssey, xvii. 485; Catullus, 64, 384; Ovid's Metamorph., i. 212 (Kuinoel). Thus Homer says:

"For in similitude of strangers oft
The gods, who can with ease all shapes assume,
Repair to populous cities, where they mark
Th' outrageous and the righteous deeds of men."

12. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter. Jupiter was the most powerful of all the gods of the ancients. He was represented as the son of Saturn and Ops, and was educated in a cave on Mount Ida, in the island of Crete. The worship of Jupiter was almost universal. He was the Ammon of Africa, the Belus of Babylon, the Osiris of Egypt. His common appellation was, The Father of gods and men. He was usually represented as sitting upon a golden or an ivory throne, holding in one hand a thunderbolt, and in the other a sceptre of cypress. His power was supposed to extend over other gods; and everything was subservient to his will except the Fates. There is the most abundant proof that he was worshipped in the region of Lycaonia and throughout Asia Minor. There was, besides, a fable among the inhabitants of Lycaonia that

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought Jupiter and Mercury had once visited that place, and had been received by Philemon. The whole fable is related by Ovid, Metam., 8, 611, &c. ¶ And Paul, Mercurius. Mercury, called by the Greeks Hermes, was a celebrated god of antiquity. No less than five of this name are mentioned by Cicero. The most celebrated was the son of Jupiter and Maia. He was the messenger of the gods, and of Jupiter in particular; he was the patron of travelers and shepherds; he conducted the souls of the dead into the infernal regions; he presided over orators, and declaimers, and merchants; and he was also the god of thieves, pickpockets, and all dishonest persons. He was regarded as the god of eloquence; and as light, rapid, and quick in his movements. The conjecture of Chrysostom is, that Barnabas was a large, athletic man, and was hence taken for Jupiter; and that Paul was small in his person, and was hence supposed to be Mercury. ¶ Because he was the chief speaker. The office of Mercury was to deliver the messages of the gods; and as Paul only had been discoursing, he was supposed to be Mercury.

13. Then the priest of Jupiter. He whose office it was to conduct the worship of Jupiter by offering sacrifices, &c. ¶ Which was before their city. The word "which" here refers not to the priest, but to Jupiter. The temple or image of Jupiter was in front of their city, or near the gates. Ancient cities were supposed to be under the protection of particular gods; and their image, or a temple for their worship, was placed commonly in a conspicuous place at the entrance of the city. ¶ Brought oxen. Probably brought two—one to be sacrificed to each. It was common to sacrifice bullocks to Jupiter. ¶ And garlands. The victims of sacrifice were usually decorated with ribbons and chaplets of flowers. See Kuinoel. ¶ Unto the gates. The gates of the city, where were the images or temple of the gods. ¶ Would have done sacrifice. Would have offered sacrifice to Barnabas and Paul. This the priest deemed a part of his office. And here we have oxen and garlands unto the gates, and <sup>h</sup>would have done sacrifice with the people.

14 Which, when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, ‘they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

14. Which, when the apostles. Barnabas is called an apostle because he was sent forth by the church on a particular message (ch. xiii. 3; comp. ch. xiv. 26), not because he had been chosen to the peculiar work of the apostleship—to bear witness to the life and resurrection of Christ. See Notes on ch. i. 22. ¶ They rent their clothes. As an expression of their abhorrence of what the people were doing, and of their deep grief that they should thus debase themselves by offering worship to men. See Notes on Mat. xxvi. 65.

15. And saying, Sirs. Greek, Men. ¶ Why do ye these things? This is an expression of solemn remonstrance at the folly of their conduct in worshipping those who were men. The abhorrence which they evinced at this may throw strong light on the rank and character of the Lord Jesus Christ. When an offer was made to worship Paul and Barnabas, they shrank from it with strong expressions of aversion and indignation. Yet when similar worship was offered to the Lord Jesus; when he was addressed by Thomas in the language of worship, “My Lord and my God” (Jn. xx. 28), he uttered not the slightest reproof. Nay, he approved it, and expressed his approbation of others who should also do it, ver. 29. Comp. Jn. v. 23. How can this difference be accounted for except on the supposition that the Lord Jesus was divine? Would he, if a mere man, receive homage as God, when his disciples rejected it with horror? ¶ Of like passions with you. We are men like yourselves. We have no claim, no pretensions to anything more. The word “passions” here means simply that they had the common feelings and propensities of men—the nature of men; the affections of men. It does not mean that they were subject to any improper passions, to ill temper, &c., as some have supposed; but that they did not pretend to be gods. “We need food and drink; we are exposed to pain, and sickness, and death.” The Latin Vulgate renders it, “We are mortal like yourselves.” The expression stands opposed to the proper conception of God, who is not subject to these affections, who is most blessed and immortal. Such a Being only is to be worshipped; and the apostles remonstrated strongly with them on the folly of paying religious homage to beings like themselves. Comp. Ja. v. 17, “Elias [Elijah] was a man subject to like passions as we are,” &c. ¶ That ye should turn from these vanities. That you should cease to worship idols. Idols are often called vanities, or vain things, De. xxxii. 21; 2 Ki. xvii. 15; 1 Ki. xvi. 13, 26; Je. ii. 5; viii. 19; x. 8; Jonah ii. 8. They are called vanities, a lie, or lying vanities, as opposed to the living and true God, because they are unreal; because they have no power to help; because confidence in them is vain. ¶ Unto the living God. 1 Th. i. 9. He is called the living God to distinguish him from idols. See Notes on Mat. xvi. 16. ¶ Which made heaven, &c. Who thus showed that he was the only proper object of worship. This doctrine, that there is one God who has made all things, was new to them. They worshipped multitudes of divinities; and though they regarded Jupiter as the father of gods and men, yet they had no conception that all things had been created by the will of one Infinite Being.

16. Who in times past. Previous to the gospel; in past ages. ¶ Suffered all nations. were permitted to follow their own reason and passions, and their own system of religion. God gave them no written laws, and sent to them no messengers. Why he did this we cannot determine. It might have been, among other reasons, to show to the world conclusively: (1) The insufficiency of reason to guide men in the matters of religion. The experiment was made under the most favourable circumstances. The most enlightened nations, the Greeks and Romans, were left to pursue the inquiry, and failed no less than the most degraded tribes of men. The trial was made for four thousand years, and attended with the same results everywhere. (2) It showed the need of revelation to guide man. (3) It evinced, beyond the possibility of mistake, the depravity of man. In all nations, in all circumstances, men had shown the same alienation from God. By suffering them to walk in their own ways, it was seen that those ways were sin, and that some power more than human was necessary to bring men back to God.

17. Nevertheless. Though he gave them no revelation. ¶ He left not himself without witness. He gave demonstration of his existence and of his moral character. ¶ In that he did good. By doing good. The manner in which he did it, Paul immediately specifies. Idols did not do good; they conferred no favours, and were, therefore, unworthy of confidence. ¶ And gave us rain from heaven. Rain from above—from the clouds, Mar. viii. 11; Lu. ix. 54; xvii. 29; xxi. 11; Jn. vi. 31, 32. Rain is one of the evidences of the goodness of God. Man could not cause it; and without it, regulated at proper intervals of time and in proper quantities, the earth would soon be one wide scene of desolation. There is scarcely anything which more certainly indicates unceasing care and wisdom than the needful and refreshing showers of rain. The sun and stars move by fixed laws, whose operation we can see and anticipate. The falling of rain is regulated by laws which we restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

19 And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and, having stoned Paul, drew cannot trace, and it seems, therefore, to be poured, as it were, directly from God's hollow hand, Ps. cxlvii. 8, "Who covereth the heaven with clouds; who prepareth rain for the earth." ¶ And fruitful seasons. Seasons when the earth produces abundance. It is remarkable, and a striking proof of the divine goodness, that so few seasons are unfruitful. The earth yields her increase; the labours of the husbandman are crowned with success; and the goodness of God demands the expressions of praise. God does not forget his ancient covenant (Ge. viii. 22), though man forgets it, and disregards his great Benefactor. ¶ Filling our hearts with food. The word hearts is here used as a Hebraism, to denote persons themselves; filling us with food, &c. Comp. Mat. xii. 40. ¶ Gladness. Joy; comfort—the comfort arising from the supply of our constantly returning wants. This is proof of ever-watchful goodness. It is a demonstration at once that there is a God, and that he is good. It would be easy for God to withdraw these blessings, and leave us to want. A single word, or a single deviation from the fulness of benevolence, would blast all these comforts, and leave us to lamentation, woe, and death, Ps. civ. 27–29; cxlv. 15, 16.

18. And with these sayings. With these arguments. ¶ Scarce restrained they the people. They were so fully satisfied that the gods had appeared, and were so full of zeal to do them honour.

19. And there came thither certain Jews. Not satisfied with having expelled them from Antioch and Iconium, they still pursued them. Persecutors often exhibit a zeal and perseverance in a bad cause which it would be well if Christians evinced in a holy cause. Bad men will often travel farther to do evil than good men will to do good; and wicked men often show more zeal in opposing the gospel than professed Christians do in advancing it. ¶ Antioch and Iconium. See Notes on ch. xiii. 14, 51. ¶ Who persuaded the people. That they were

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city; and the next impostors; and who excited their rage against them. ¶ And having stoned Paul. Whom they were just before ready to worship as a god! What a striking instance of the fickleness and instability of idolaters! and what a striking instance of the instability and uselessness of mere popularity! Just before they were ready to adore him; now they sought to put him to death. Nothing is more fickle than popular favour. The unbounded admiration of a man may soon be changed into unbounded indignation and contempt. It was well for Paul that he was not seeking this popularity, and that he did not depend on it for happiness. He had a good conscience; he was engaged in a good cause; he was under the protection of God; and his happiness was to be sought from a higher source than the applause of men, fluctuating and uncertain as the waves of the sea. To this transaction Paul referred when he enumerated his trials in 2 Co. xi. 25, "Once was I stoned." ¶ Drew him out of the city. Probably in haste, and in popular rage, as if he was unfit to be in the city, and was unworthy of a decent burial; for it does not appear that they contemplated an interment, but indignantly dragged him beyond the walls of the city to leave him there. Such sufferings and trials it cost to establish that religion in the world which has shed so many blessings on man; which now crowns us with comfort; which saves us from the abominations and degradations of idolatry here, and from the pains of hell hereafter. ¶ Supposing he had been dead. The next verse shows that he was really not dead, though many commentators, as well as the Jews, have supposed that he was, and was miraculously restored to life. It is remarkable that Barnabas was not exposed to this popular fury. But it is to be remembered that Paul was the chief speaker, and it was his peculiar zeal that exposed him to this tumult.

20. Howbeit. Notwithstanding the supposition that he was dead. ¶ As the disciples stood round about him. It would seem that they did not suppose that he was dead; but might be expecting that he would revive. ¶ He rose up, &c. Most commentators have supposed that this was the effect of a miracle. They have maintained that he could not have risen so soon, and entered into the city, without the interposition of miraculous power (Calvin, Doddridge, Clarke, &c.). But the commentators have asserted that which is not intimated by the sacred penman. The probability is that he was stunned by a blow—perhaps a single blow—and after a short time recovered from it. Nothing is more common than thus by a violent blow on the head to be rendered apparently lifeless, the effect of which soon is over, and the person restored to strength. Pricæus and Wetstein suppose that Paul feigned himself to be dead, and when out of danger rose and returned to the city. But this is wholly improbable. ¶ And came into the city. It is remarkable that he should have returned again into the same city. But probably it was only among the new converts that he showed himself. The Jews supposed that he was dead; and it does not appear that he again exposed himself to their rage. ¶ And the next day, &c. The opposition here was such that it was vain to attempt to preach there any longer. Having been seen by the disciples after his supposed death, their faith was confirmed, and he departed to preach in another place. ¶ To Derbe, ver. 6.

21. Had taught many. Or, rather, had made many disciples (margin). ¶ To Lystra, ver. 6. ¶ And to Iconium, ver. 1. We have here a remarkable instance of the courage of the apostles. In these very places they had been persecuted and stoned, and yet in the face of danger they ventured to return. The welfare of the infant churches they deemed of more consequence than their own safety; and they threw themselves again into the midst of danger, to comfort and strengthen those just converted to God. There are times when ministers should not count their own lives dear to them (Ac. xx. 24), but when they should fearlessly throw themselves into the midst of danger, confid-

ing only in the protecting care of their God and Saviour.

22. Confirming, strengthening—ἰατεῖν. The expression "to confirm" has in some churches a technical signification, denoting "to admit to the full privileges of a Christian by the imposition of hands" (Johnson). It is scarcely necessary to say that the word here refers to no such rite. It has no relation to an imposition of hands, or to the thing which is usually supposed to be denoted by the rite of "confirmation." It means simply that they established, strengthened, made firm, or encouraged by the presentation of truth and by the motives of the gospel. Whether the rite of confirmation, as practised by some churches, be founded on the authority of the New Testament or not, it is certain that it can receive no support from this passage. The truth was, that these were young converts; that they were surrounded by enemies, and exposed to temptations and to dangers; that they had as yet but a slight acquaintance with the truths of the gospel, and that it was therefore important that they should be further instructed in the truth, and established in the faith of the gospel. This was what Paul and Barnabas returned to accomplish. There is not the slightest evidence that they had not been admitted to the full privileges of the church before, or that any ceremony was now performed in confirming or strengthening them. ¶ The souls. The minds, the hearts, or the disciples themselves. ¶ Disciples. They were as yet scholars, or learners, and the apostles returned to instruct them further in the doctrines of Christ. ¶ And exhorting them, &c. Ch. xiii. 43. ¶ In the faith. In the belief of the gospel. ¶ And that we must—καὶ ὅμηδοῦ. That it is fit or proper that we should. Not that it is fixed by any fatal necessity, but that we are not to expect that it will be otherwise. We are to calculate on it when we become Christians. Why it is proper, or fit, the apostle did not state. But we may remark that it is continue in the faith, "and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God."

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and proper, (1) Because such is the opposition of the world to pure religion that it cannot be avoided. Of this they had had striking demonstration in Lystra and Iconium. (2) It is necessary to reclaim us from wandering, and to keep us in the path of duty, Ps. cxix. 67, 71. (3) It is necessary to wean us from the world; to keep before our minds the great truth that we have here "no continuing city and no abiding place." Trial here makes us part for a world of rest. The opposition of sinners makes us desire that world where "the wicked shall cease from troubling," and where there shall be eternal friendship and peace. (4) When we are persecuted and afflicted, we may remember that it has been the lot of Christians from the beginning. We tread a path that has been watered by the tears of the saints, and rendered sacred by the shedding of the best blood on the earth. The Saviour trod that path; and it is enough that the "disciple be as his master, and the servant as his lord," Mat. x. 24, 25. ¶ Through much tribulation. Through many afflictions. ¶ Enter into the kingdom of God. Be saved. Enter into heaven. See Notes on Mat. iii. 2.

23. And when they had ordained—χαροφόρωσαν. The word ordain we now use in an ecclesiastical sense, to denote a setting apart to an office by the imposition of hands. But it is evident that the word here is not employed in that sense. That imposition of hands might have occurred in setting apart afterwards to this office is certainly possible, but it is not implied in the word employed here, and did not take place in the transaction to which this word refers. The word occurs but in one other place in the New Testament, 2 Co. viii. 19, where it is applied to Luke, and translated, "who was also chosen of the church (that is, appointed or elected by suffrage by the churches) to travel with us," &c. The verb properly denotes to stretch out the hand; and as it was customary to elect to office, or to vote, by stretching out or elevating the hand, so the word simply means to elect, appoint, or designate to any office. The word here refers simply to an election or appointment of the elders. It is said, indeed, that Paul and Barnabas did this. But probably all that is meant by it is that they presided in the assembly when the choice was made. It does not mean that they appointed them without consulting the church; but it evidently means that they appointed them in the usual way of appointing officers, by the suffrages of the people. See Schleusner, and the notes of Doddridge and Calvin. ¶ Ordained them. Appointed for the disciples, or for the church. It is not meant that the elders were ordained for the apostles. ¶ Elders. Greek, presbyters. Literally this word refers to the aged. See Notes on ch. xi. 30. But it may also be a word relating to office, denoting those who were more experienced than others, and who were chosen to preside over and to instruct the rest. What was the nature of this office, and what was the design of the appointment, is not intimated in this word. All that seems to be implied is, that they were to take the charge of the churches during the absence of the apostles. The apostles were about to leave them. They were just organized into churches; they were inexperienced; they needed counsel and direction; they were exposed to dangers; and it was necessary, therefore, that persons should be designated to watch over the spiritual interests of the brethren. The probability is, that they performed all the functions that were required in the infant and feeble churches; in exhorting, instructing, governing, &c. The more experienced and able would be most likely to be active in exhorting and instructing the brethren; and all would be useful in counselling and guiding the flock. The same thing occurred in the church at Ephesus. See Notes on Ac. xx. 17-28. It is not improbable that the business of instructing, or teaching, would be gradually confined to the more talented and able of the elders, and that the others would be concerned mainly in governing and directing the general affairs of the church. ¶ In every church. It is implied here that there were elders in each church; that is, that in each 24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preach-church there was more than one. See ch. xv. 21, where a similar phraseology occurs, and where it is evident that there was more than one reader of the law of Moses in each city. Comp. Tit. i. 5, "I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldest... ordain elders in every city;" Ac. xx. 17, "And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church." It could not mean, therefore, that they appointed a single minister or pastor to each church, but they committed the whole affairs of the church to a bench of elders. ¶ And had prayed with fasting. With the church. They were about to leave them. They had intrusted the interests of the church to a body of men chosen for this purpose; and they now commended the church and its elders together to God. Probably they had no prospect of seeing them again, and they parted as ministers and people should part, and as Christian friends should part, with humble prayer, commanding themselves to the protecting care of God. ¶ They commended them, &c. They committed the infant church to the guardianship of the Lord. They were feeble, inexperienced, and exposed to dangers; but in his hands they were safe. ¶ To the Lord, &c. The Lord Jesus. The connection shows that he is particularly referred to. In his hands the redeemed are secure. When we part with Christian friends, we may, with confidence, leave them in his holy care and keeping.

24. Throughout Pisidia. Note, ch. xiii. 14. ¶ They came to Pamphylia. See Notes on ch. xiii. 13. These places they had visited before.

25. In Perga. See Notes on ch. xiii. 13. ¶ They went down into Attalia. Attalia had something of the same relation to Perga which Cadiz has to Seville. In each case the latter city is approached by a river voyage, and the former is more conveniently placed on the open sea. Attalus Philadelphus, king of Pergamus, whose dominions extended from the north-western corner of Asia Minor to the Sea of Pamphylia, had built this city in a convenient position for commanding the trade of Syria or Egypt. When Alexander the Great passed this way, no such city was in ed the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

26 And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, existence; but since the days of the kings of Pergamus, who inherited a fragment of his vast empire, Attalia has always existed and flourished, retaining the name of the monarch who built it. Its ancient site is not now certainly known" (Life and Epistles of St. Paul, vol. i. p. 200, 201). It is probable that it is the modern Satalia.

26. And thence sailed to Antioch. Note, ch. xi. 19. ¶ From whence they had been recommended, &c. Where they had been appointed to this missionary tour by the church, ch. xiii. 1-4. ¶ To the grace of God. His favour and protection had been implored for them in their perilous undertaking. ¶ For the work which they fulfilled. This shows conclusively, (1) That they had accomplished fully the work which was originally contemplated. It was strictly a missionary tour among the Gentiles. It was an important and hazardous enterprise, and was the first in which the church formally engaged. Hence so much importance is attached to it, and so faithful a record of it is preserved. (2) It shows that the act by which they were set apart to this (Ac. xiii. 1-3) was not an ordination to the ministerial office. It was an appointment to a missionary tour. (3) It shows that the act was not an appointment to the apostleship. Paul was an apostle before by the express appointment of the Saviour; and Barnabas was never an apostle in the original and proper sense of the term. It was a designation to a temporary work, which was now fulfilled.

We may remark, also, in regard to this missionary tour, (1) That the work of missions is one which early engaged the attention of Christians. (2) It entered into their plans, and was one in which the church was deeply interested. (3) The work of missions is attended with danger. Men are now no less hostile to the gospel than they were in Lystra and Iconium. (4) Missionaries should be sustained by the prayers of the church. And, (5) In the conduct and had gathered the church together, "they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

of Paul and Barnabas we have an example for missionaries in founding churches, and in regard to their own trials and persecutions. If they were persecuted, missionaries may be now; and if the grace of Christ was sufficient to sustain them, it is not the less sufficient to sustain those of our own times amidst all the dangers attending the preaching of the cross in pagan lands.

27. They rehearsed, &c. Ch. xi. 4. They related what had happened; their dangers and their success. This they did because they had been sent out by the church, and it was proper that they should give an account of their work; and because it furnished a suitable occasion of gratitude to God for his mercy. ¶ All that God had done, &c. In protecting, guarding them, &c. All was traced to God. ¶ Had opened the door of faith. Had furnished an opportunity of preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, I Co. xvi. 9; 2 Co. ii. 12.

28. And there they abode. At Antioch. ¶ Long time. How long is not intimated; but we hear no more of them until the council at Jerusalem, mentioned in the next chapter. If the transactions recorded in this chapter occurred, as is supposed, about A.D. 45 or 46, and the council at Jerusalem assembled A.D. 51 or 53, as is supposed, then here is an interval of from five to eight years in which we have no account of them. Where they were, or what was their employment in this interval, the sacred historian has not informed us. It is certain, however, that Paul made several journeys of which we have no particular record in the New Testament, and it is possible that some of those journeys occurred during this interval. Thus he preached the gospel as far as Illyricum, Ro. xv. 19. And in 2 Co. xi. 23-27, there is an account of trials and persecutions, of many of which we have no distinct record, and which might have occurred during this interval. We may be certain that these holy men were not idle. From the example of Paul and Barnabas as recorded in this chapter, we may learn to bear all persecutions and trials without a murmur, and to acknowledge the good hand of God in our preservation in our travels; in our defence when we are persecuted; in all the opportunities which may be open before us to do good; and in all the success which may attend our efforts. Christians should remember that it is God who opens doors of usefulness; and they should regard it as a matter of thanksgiving that such doors are opened, and that they are permitted to spread the gospel, whatever toil it may cost, whatever persecution they may endure, whatever perils they may encounter.

CHAPTER XV.

1. And certain men. These were undoubtedly men who had been Jews, but who were now converted to Christianity. The fact that they were willing to refer the matter in dispute to the apostles and elders (ver. 2) shows that they had professedly embraced the Christian religion. The account which follows is a record of the first internal dissension which occurred in the Christian church. Hitherto the church had been struggling against external foes. Violent persecutions had raged, and had fully occupied the attention of Christians. But now the churches were at peace. They enjoyed great external prosperity in Antioch, and the great enemy of souls took occasion then, as he has often done in similar circumstances since, to excite contentions in the church itself, so that when external violence could not destroy it, an effort was made to secure the same object by internal dissension and strife. This history, therefore, is particularly important, as it is the record of the first unhappy debate which arose in the bosom of the church. It is further important, as it shows the manner in which such controversies were settled in apostolic times, and as it established some very important principles respecting the perpetuity of the religious rites of the Jews. ¶ Came down from Judea. To Antioch, and to the regions adjacent, which had been visited by the apostles, ver. 23. Judea was a high and hilly region, and going from that toward the level countries adjacent to the sea was represented to be descending, or going down. ¶ Taught the brethren. That is, Christians. They endeavoured to convince them of the necessity of keeping the laws of Moses. ¶ Except ye be circumcised. This was the leading or principal rite of the Jewish religion. It was indispensable to the name and privileges of a Jew. Proselytes to their religion were circumcised as well as native-born Jews, and they held it to be indispensable to salvation. It is evident from this that Paul and Barnabas had dispensed with this rite in regard to the Gentile converts, and that they intended to found the Christian church on the principle that the Jewish ceremonies were to cease. When, however, it was necessary to conciliate the minds of the Jews and to prevent contention, Paul did not hesitate to practise circumcision, ch. vi. 3. ¶ After the manner of Moses. According to the custom which Moses commanded; according to the Mosaic ritual. ¶ Ye cannot be saved. The Jews regarded this as indispensable to salvation. The grounds on which they would press it on the attention of Gentile converts would be very plausible, and such as would produce much embarrassment. For, (1) It would be maintained that the laws of Moses were the laws of God, and were therefore unchangeable; and, (2) It would doubtless be maintained that the religion of the Messiah was only a completing and perfecting of the Jewish religion—that it was designed simply to carry out its principles according to the promises, and not to subvert and destroy anything that had been established by divine authority. It is usually not difficult to perplex and embarrass young converts with questions of modes, and rites, and forms of religion; and it is not uncommon that a revival is followed by some contention just like this. Opposing sects urge the claims of their peculiar rites, and seek to make proselytes, and introduce contention and strife into an otherwise peaceful and happy Christian community.

2. Had no small dissension and disputation. The word rendered dissension (στρατεία) denotes sometimes sedition or intestine war, and sometimes earnest and violent disputation or controversy, Ac. xxiii. 7, 10. In this place it clearly denotes that there was earnest and warm discussion; but it is not implied that there was any improper heat or temper on the part of Paul and Barnabas. Important principles were to be settled in regard to the organization of the church. Doctrines were advanced by the Judaizing teachers which were false, and which tended to produce great disorder in the church. Those doctrines were urged with zeal, were declared to be essential to salvation, and would therefore tend to distract the minds of Christians, and to produce great anxiety. It became, therefore, necessary to meet them with a determined purpose, and to establish the truth on an immovable basis. And the case shows that it is right to "contend earnestly for the faith" (Jude 3); and, when similar cases occur, that it is proper to resist the approach of error with all the arguments which may be at our command, and with all the weapons which truth can furnish. It is further implied here that it is the duty of the ministers of the gospel to defend the truth and to oppose error. Paul and Barnabas regarded themselves as set for this purpose (comp. Phi. i. 17, "Knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel"); and Christian ministers should be qualified to defend the truth, and should be willing with a proper spirit and with great earnestness to maintain the doctrines revealed. ¶ They determined. There was no prospect that the controversy would be settled by contention and argument. It would seem, from this statement, that those who came down from Judea were also willing that the whole matter should be referred to the apostles at Jerusalem. The reason for this may have been, (1) That Jerusalem would be regarded by them as the source of authority in the Christian church, as it had been among the Jews. (2) Most of the apostles and the most experienced Christians were there. They nabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem, unto the apostles and elders, about this question.

had listened to the instructions of Christ himself; had been long in the church; and were supposed to be better acquainted with its design and its laws. (3) Those who came from Judea would not be likely to acknowledge the authority of Paul as an apostle: the authority of those at Jerusalem they would recognize. (4) They might have had a very confident expectation that the decision there would be in their favour. The question had not been agitated there. They had all been Jews, and it is certain that they continued as yet to attend in the temple service, and to conform to the Jewish customs. They might have expected, therefore, with great confidence, that the decision would be in their favour, and they were willing to refer it to those who resided at Jerusalem. ¶ Certain other of them. Of the brethren; probably of each party. They did not go to debate, or to give their opinion, or to vote in the case themselves, but to lay the question fairly before the apostles and elders. ¶ Unto the apostles. The authority of the apostles in such a case would be acknowledged by all. They had been immediately instructed by the Saviour, and had the promise of infallible guidance in the organization of the church. See Notes on Mat. xvi. 19; xviii. 18. ¶ And elders. Note, ch. xi. 30. Greek, presbyters. See Notes on ch. xiv. 23. Who these were, or what was their office and authority, is not easy now to determine. It may refer either to the aged men in the church at Jerusalem, or to those who were appointed to rule and to preach in connection with the apostles. As in the synagogue it was customary to determine questions by the advice of a bench of elders, there is no improbability in the supposition that the apostles would imitate that custom, and appoint a similar arrangement in the Christian church (Grotius). It is generally agreed that this is the journey to which Paul refers in Ga. ii. 1-10. If so, it happened fourteen years after his conversion, Ga. ii. 1. It was done in accordance with the divine command, "by revelation," Ga. ii. 2. Among those who went with him was Titus, who was afterwards so much distinguished as his companion, Ga. ii. 3. ¶ About this question. The question whether the ceremonial laws of Moses were binding on Christian converts. In regard to the nature and design of this council at Jerusalem, see Notes on ver. 30, 31.

Of the Gentiles in Antioch, and in the regions in Asia Minor through which they had travelled. These remarkable events they would naturally communicate with joy to the Christians with whom they would have intercourse in their journey. ¶ Caused great joy. At the news of the extensive spread of the gospel. It was an indication of their deep feeling in the interests of religion that they thus rejoiced. Where Christians are themselves awake, and engaged in the service of Christ, they rejoice at the news of the conversion of sinners. Where they are cold, they hear such news with indifference, or with the utmost unconcern. One way of testing our feelings on the subject of religion is by the emotions which we have when we hear of extensive and glorious revivals of religion. Comp. Notes on Ac. viii. 8.

That is, they stated the case; the remarkable conversion of the Gentiles, the evidence of their piety, and the origin of the present dispute.

5. But there rose up, &c. It has been doubted whether these are the words of Paul and Barnabas, relating what occurred at Antioch, or whether they are the words of Luke recording what took place at Jerusalem. The correct exposition is probably that which refers it to the latter. For, (1) This seems to be the most obvious interpretation. (2) The use of the words "rose up" implies that. Those who disturbed the church at Antioch are said to have come down from Judea (ver. 1), and if this place referred to that occurrence, the same words would have been retained. (3) The particular specification here of "the sect of the Pharisees" looks as if this was an occurrence taking place at Jerusalem. No such specification exists respecting those who came down to Antioch; but it would seem here as if this party in Jerusalem resolved still to abide by the law, and to impose those rites on the Christian converts. However, this interpretation is by no means certain. ¶ Which believed. Who maintained or taught. ¶ That it was needful, &c. See Notes on ver. 1.

6. And the apostles and elders, &c. They came together in accordance with the authority in Mat. xviii. 19, 20. It would seem, also, that the whole church was convened on this occasion, and that the church concurred, at least, in the judgment expressed in this case. See ver. 12, 22, 23. ¶ For to consider this matter. Not to decide it arbitrarily, or even by authority, without deliberation; but to compare their views, and to express the result of the whole to the church at Antioch. It was a grave

7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

and difficult question, deeply affecting the entire constitution of the Christian church, and they therefore solemnly engaged in deliberation on the subject.

7. Much disputing. Or rather, much inquiry or deliberation. With our word disputing we commonly connect the idea of heat and anger. This is not necessarily implied in the word used here. It might have been calm, solemn, deliberate inquiry; and there is no evidence that it was conducted with undue warmth or anger. ¶ Peter rose up and said. Peter was probably the most aged, and was most accustomed to speak, ch. ii. 14, &c.; iii. 6, 12. Besides, there was a particular reason for his speaking here, as he had been engaged in similar scenes, and understood the case, and had had evidence that God had converted sinners without the Mosaic rites, and knew that it would have been inexpedient to have imposed these rites on those who had thus been converted. ¶ A good while ago. See ch. x. Some time since. So long since that there had been opportunity to ascertain whether it was necessary to observe the laws of Moses in order to the edification of the church. ¶ God made choice, &c. That is, of all the apostles, he designated me to engage in this work. Comp. Notes on Mat. xvi. 18, with Ac. x. ¶ That the Gentiles. Cornelius, and those who were assembled with him at Cesarea. This was the first case that had occurred, and therefore it was important to appeal to it.

8. And God, which knoweth the hearts. Ch. i. 24. God thus knew whether they were true converts or not, and gave a demonstration that he acknowledged them as his. ¶ Giving them the Holy Ghost, &c. Ch. x. 45, 46.

law of Moses. Thus God showed that the observance of these rites was not necessary in order to the true conversion of men, and to acceptance with him. He did not give us, who are Jews, any advantage over them, but justified and purified all in the same manner. ¶ Purifying their hearts. Thus giving the best evidence that he had renewed them, and admitted them to favour with him. ¶ By faith. By believing on the Lord Jesus Christ. This demonstrated that the plan on which God was now about to show favour to men was not by external rites and ceremonies, but by a scheme which required faith as the only condition of acceptance. It is further implied here that there is no true faith which does not purify the heart.

10. Why tempt ye God? Why provoke him to displeasure? Why, since he has shown his determination to accept them without such rites, do you provoke him by attempting to impose on his own people rites without his authority, and against his manifest will? The argument is, that God had already accepted them. To attempt to impose these rites would be to provoke him to anger; to introduce observances which he had shown it was his purpose should now be abolished. ¶ To put a yoke. That which would be burdensome and oppressive, or which would infringe on their just freedom as the children of God. It is called in Ga. v. 1, "a yoke of bondage." Comp. Notes on Mat. xxiii. 4. A yoke is an emblem of slavery or bondage (1 Ti. vi. 1); or of affliction (La. iii. 27); or of punishment (La. i. 14); or of oppressive and burdensome ceremonies, as in this place, or of the restraints of Christianity, Mat. xi. 29, 30. In this place those rites are called a yoke, because (1) They were burdensome and oppressive; and (2) Because they would be an infringement of Christian freedom. One design of the gospel was to set men free from such rites and ceremonies. ¶ Which neither our fathers, &c. Which have been found burdensome at all times. They were expensive, and painful, and oppressive; and as they had been found to be so, it was not proper to impose them on the Gentile converts, but should rather rejoice at any evidence that the people of God might be delivered from them. ¶ Were able to bear. Which are found to be oppressive and burdensome. They were attended with great inconvenience and many transgressions, as the consequence.

11. But we believe. We apostles, who have been with them, and have seen the evidences of their acceptance with God. ¶ Through the grace, &c. By the grace or mercy of Christ alone, without any of the rites and ceremonies of the Jews. ¶ We shall be saved, even as they. In the same manner, by the mere grace of Christ. So far from being necessary to their salvation, they are really of no use in ours. We are to be saved, not by these ceremonies, but by the mere mercy of God in the Redeemer. They should not, therefore, be imposed on others.

12. Then all the multitude. Evidently the multitude of private Christians who were assembled on this occasion. That it does not refer to a synod of ministers and elders merely is apparent, (1) Because the church, the brethren, are represented as having been present, and as concurring in the final opinion (ver. 22, 23); and (2) Because the word multitude (τὸ πλῆθος) would not have been used in describing the collection of apostles and elders merely. Comp. they were qualified to give a fair statement of the facts as they had occurred. ¶ Declaring what miracles and wonders, &c. The argument here evidently is, that God had approved their work by miracles; that he gave evidence that what they did had his approbation; and that as all this was done without imposing on them the rites of the Jews, so it would follow that those were not now to be commanded.

13. James answered. James the Less, son of Alpheus. See Notes on ch. xii. 1. ¶ Hearken unto me. This whole transaction shows that Peter had no such authority in the church as the Papists pretend, for otherwise his opinion would have been followed without debate. James had an authority not less than that of Peter. It is possible that he might have been next in age (comp. 1 Co. xv. 7); and it seems morally certain that he remained for a considerable part of his life in Jerusalem, Ac. xii. 17; xxi. 18; Ga. i. 19; ii. 9, 12.

14. Simeon. This is a Hebrew name. The Greek mode of writing it commonly was Simon. It was one of the names of Peter, Mat. iv. 18. ¶ To take out of them a people. To choose from among the Gentiles those who should be his friends.

15. The words of the prophets. Am. ix. 11, 12. It was a very material point with them, as Jews, to inquire whether this was in accordance with the predictions of the Scriptures. The most powerful revivals of religion, and the most striking demonstrations of the divine presence, will be in accordance with the Bible, and should be tested by them. This habit was always manifested by the apostles and early Christians, and should be followed by Christians at all times. Unless a supposed work of grace accords with the Bible,

16. After this. This quotation is not made literally either from the Hebrew or the Septuagint, which differs also from the Hebrew. The 17th verse is quoted literally from the Septuagint, but in the 16th the general sense only of the passage is retained. The main point of the quotation, as made by James, was to show that, according to the prophets, it was contemplated that the Gentiles should be introduced to the privileges of the children of God; and on this point the passage has a direct bearing. The prophet Amos (ix. 8-10) had described the calamities which would come upon the nation of the Jews by their being scattered and driven away. This implied that the city of Jerusalem, the temple, and the walls of the city would be destroyed. But after that (Heb. "on that day," ver. 11, that is, the day when he should revisit them and recover them) he would restore them to their former privileges—would rebuild their temple, their city, and their walls, ver. 11. And not only so, not only would the blessing descend on the Jews, but it would also be extended to others. The "remnant of Edom," "the heathen upon whom" his "name would be called" (Am. ix. 12), would also partake of the mercy of God, and be subject to the Jewish people, and a time of general prosperity and of permanent blessings would follow, Am. ix. 13-15. James understands this as referring to the times of the Messiah, and to the introduction of the gospel to the Gentiles. And so the passage (Am. ix. 12) is rendered in the Septuagint. See ver. 17. ¶ I will return. When the people of God are subjected to calamities and trials, it is often represented as if God had departed from them. His returning, therefore, is an image of their restoration to his favour and to prosperity. This is not, however, in the Hebrew, in Am. ix. 11. ¶ I will build again. In the calamities that would come upon the nation (Am. ix. 8), it is implied that the temple and the city would be destroyed. To build them again would be a proof of his returning favour. ¶ The tabernacle of David. The tent of David. Here it means the house or royal residence of David and the kings of Israel. That is, he would restore them to their former glory and splendour as his people. The reference here is not to the temple, which was the work of Solomon, but to the magnificence and splendour of the dwelling-place of David; that is, to the full enjoyment of their former high privileges and blessings. ¶ Which is fallen down. Which would be destroyed by the King of Babylon, and by the long neglect and decay resulting from their being carried to a distant land. ¶ The ruins thereof. Heb. "close up the breaches thereof." That is, it would be restored to its former prosperity and magnificence; an emblem of the favour of God, and of the spiritual blessings that would in future times descend on the Jewish people.

17. That the residue of men. This verse is quoted literally from the Septuagint, and differs in some respects from the Hebrew. The phrase, "the residue of men," here is evidently understood, both by the LXX. and by James, as referring to others than Jews, to the Gentiles—the rest of the world—implying that many of them would be admitted to the friendship and favour of God. The Hebrew is, "that they may possess the remnant of Edom." This change is made in the Septuagint by a slight difference in the reading of two Hebrew words. The LXX., instead of the Hebrew וְרָמֶם, shall inherit, read וְרָמֵם, shall seek of thee; and instead of אַדָּם, Edom, they read אָדָם, man, or mankind; that is, men. Why this variation occurred cannot be explained; but the sense is not materially different. In the Hebrew the word Edom has undoubtedly reference to another nation than the Jewish; and the expression means that, in the great prosperity of the Jews after their return, they would extend the influence of their religion to other nations; that is, as James applies it, the Gentiles might be brought to the privileges of the children of God. ¶ And also the Gentiles. Heb. all the heathen; that is, all who were not Jews. This was a clear prediction that other nations were to be favoured with the true religion, and that without any mention of their conforming to the rites of the Jewish people. ¶ Upon whom my name is called. Who are called by my name, or who are regarded as my people. ¶ Who doeth all these things. That is, who will certainly accomplish this in its time.

19 Wherefore my sentence is,

18. Known unto God, &c. See Notes on ch. i. 24. The meaning of this verse, in this connection, is this. God sees everything future; he knows what he will accomplish; he has a plan; all his works are so arranged in his mind that he sees everything distinctly and clearly. As he foretold these, it was a part of his plan; and as it was a part of his plan long since foretold, it should not be opposed and resisted by us.

19. My sentence. Greek, I judge (ξινω); that is, I give my opinion. It is the usual language in which a judge delivers his opinion; but it does not imply here that James assumed authority to settle the case, but merely that he gave his opinion, or counsel. ¶ That we trouble not them. That we do not molest, disturb, or oppress them by imposing on them unnecessary rites and ceremonies.

20. That we write unto them. Expressing our judgment, or our views of the case. ¶ That they abstain. That they refrain from these things, or wholly avoid them. ¶ Pollutions of idols. The word rendered pollutions means any kind of defilement. But here it is evidently used to denote the flesh of those animals that were offered in sacrifice to idols. See ver. 29. That flesh, after being offered in sacrifice, was often exposed for sale in the markets, or was served up at feasts, 1 Co. x. 25-29. It became a very important question whether it was right for Christians to partake of it. The Jews would contend that it was, in fact, partaking of idolatry. The Gentile converts would allege that they did not eat it as a sacrifice to idols, or lend their countenance in any way to the idolatrous worship where it had been offered. See this subject discussed at length in 1 Co. viii. 4-18. As that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are "turned to God":

20 But that we write unto them,

¶ 1 Th. 1.9.

idolatry was forbidden to the Jews in every form, and as partaking even of the sacrifices of idols in their feasts might seem to countenance idolatry, the Jews would be utterly opposed to it; and for the sake of peace, James advised that the Christians at Antioch be recommended to abstain from this. To partake of that food might not be morally wrong (1 Co. viii. 4), but it would give occasion for scandal and offence; and, therefore, as a matter of expediency, it was advised that they should abstain from it. ¶ And from fornication. The word used here (πορνεία) is applicable to all illicit intercourse, and may refer to adultery, incest, or licentiousness in any form. There has been much diversity of opinion in regard to this expression. Interpreters have been greatly perplexed to understand why this violation of the moral law has been introduced amidst the violations of the ceremonial law, and the question is naturally asked whether this was a sin about which there could be any debate between the Jewish and Gentile converts? Were there any who would practise it, or plead that it was lawful? If not, why is it prohibited here? Various explanations of this have been proposed. Some have supposed that James refers here to the offerings which harlots would make of their gains to the service of religion, and that James would prohibit the reception of it. Beza, Selden, and Schleusner suppose the word is taken for idolatry, as it is often represented in the Scriptures as consisting in unfaithfulness to God, and as it is often called adultery. Heringius supposes that marriage between idolaters and Christians is here intended. But, after all, the usual interpretation of the word, as referring to illicit intercourse of the sexes of any kind, is undoubtedly here to be retained. If it be asked, then, why this was particularly forbidden, and was introduced in this connection, we may reply, (1) That this vice prevailed everywhere among the Gentiles, and was that to which all were particularly exposed. (2) That it was not deemed by the Gentiles disgraceful. It was practised without shame and without remorse. (Terence, Adelphi, 1, 2, 21. See Grotius.) It was important, therefore, that the pure laws of Christianity on this subject should be known, and that special pains should be taken to instruct the early converts from paganism in those laws. The same thing is necessary still in heathen lands. (3) This crime was connected with religion. It was the practice not only to introduce indecent pictures and emblems into their worship, but also for females to devote themselves to the service of particular temples, and to devote the avails of indiscriminate prostitution to the service of the god, or the goddess. The vice was connected with no small part of the pagan worship; and the images, the emblems, and the customs of idolatry everywhere tended to sanction and promote it. A mass of evidence on this subject which sickens the heart, and which would be too long and too indelicate to introduce here, may be seen in Tholuck's Nature and Moral Influence of Heathenism, in the Biblical Repository for July, 1832, p. 441-464. As this vice was almost universal; as it was practised without shame or disgrace; as there were no laws among the heathen to prevent it; as it was connected with all their views of idol worship and of religion, it was important for the early Christians to frown upon and to oppose it, and to set a peculiar guard against it in all the churches. It was the sin to which, of all others, they were the most exposed, and which was most likely to bring scandal on the Christian religion. It is for this cause that it is so often and so pointedly forbidden in the New Testament, Ro. i. 29; 1 Co. vi. 13, 18; Ga. v. 19; Ep. v. 3; 1 Th. iv. 3. ¶ And from things strangled. That is, from animals or birds that were killed without shedding their blood. The reason why these were considered by the Jews unlawful to be eaten was, that thus they would be under a necessity of eating blood, which was positively forbidden by the law. Hence it was commanded in the law that when any beast or fowl was taken in a snare, the blood should be poured out before it was lawful to be eaten, Le. xvii. 13. ¶ And from blood. The eating of blood was strictly forbidden to the Jews. The reason of this was that it contained the life, Le. xvii. 11, 14. See Notes on Ro. iii. 25. The use of blood was common among the Gentiles. They drank it often at their sacrifices, and in making covenants or compacts. To separate the Jews from them in this respect was one design of the prohibition. See Spencer, De Ley. Hebreo., p. 144, 145, 169, 235, 377, 381, 594, edit. 1732. See also this whole passage examined at length in Spencer, p. 588-626. The primary reason of the prohibition was, that it was thus used in the feasts and compacts of idolaters. That blood was thus drank by the heathens, particularly by the Sabians, in their sacrifices, is fully proved by Spencer, De Ley., p. 377-380. But the prohibition specifies a higher reason, that the life is in the blood, and that therefore it should not be eaten. On this opinion see Notes on Ro. iii. 25. This reason existed before any ceremonial law; it is founded in the nature of things; it has no particular reference to any custom of the Jews; and it is as forcible in any other circumstances as in theirs. It was proper, therefore, to forbid it to the early Christian converts; and for the same reason, its use should be abstained from everywhere. It adds to the force of these remarks when we remember that the same principle was settled before the laws of Moses were given, and that God regarded the fact that the life was in the blood as of so much importance as to make the shedding of it worthy of death, Ge. ix. 4-6. It is supposed, therefore, that this law is still obligatory. Perhaps, also, there is no food more unwholesome than blood; and it is a further circumstance of some moment that all men naturally revolt from it as an article of food.

21. For Moses. The meaning of this verse is, that the law of Moses, prohibiting these things, was read in the synagogues constantly. As these com-and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch, with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

mands were constantly read, and as the Jewish converts would not soon learn that their ceremonial law had ceased to be binding, it was deemed to be a matter of expediency that no needless offence should be given to them. For the sake of peace, it was better that they should abstain from meat offered to idols than to give offence to the Jewish converts. Comp. 1 Co. viii. 10-13. ¶ Of old time. But as it is not probable that they would volunteer an opinion unless they were consulted, it seems most reasonable to suppose that the apostles and elders submitted the case to them for their approbation. It would seem that the apostles and elders deliberated on it, and decided it; but still, for the sake of peace and unity, they also took measures to ascertain that their decision agreed with the sentiment of the church. ¶ Chosen men. mies who remove and bear off property, thus producing distress, confusion, and disorder. It is thus used in the sense of disturbing or destroying, and here denotes that they unsettled their minds —that they produced anxiety, disturbance, and distress by these doctrines about Moses. ¶ To whom we gave no such commandment. They went, therefore, without authority. Self-constituted and self-sent teachers not unfrequently produce disturbance and distress. Had the apostles been consulted on this subject, the difficulty would have been avoided. By thus saying that they had not given them a command to teach these things, they practically assured the Gentile converts that they did not approve of the course which those who went from Judea had taken.

26. Men that have hazarded their lives, &c. See ch. xiv. This was a noble testimony to the character of Barnabas and Paul. It was a commendation of them to the confidence of the churches, and an implied expression that they wished their authority to be regarded in the establishment and organization of the church. ¶ For the name. In the cause of the Lord Jesus.

27. The same things. The same things that we wrote to you. They will confirm all by their own statements.

28. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost. This is a strong and undoubted claim to inspiration. It was with special reference to the organization of the church that the Holy Spirit had been promised to them by the Lord Jesus, Mat. xviii. 18-20; Jn. xiv. 26. ¶ No greater burden. To impose no greater restraints to enjoin no other observ-

(3) In their circumstances particularly, because the crime which is specified—licentiousness — was one to which all early converts were especially exposed. See Notes on ver. 20.

29. From meats offered to idols. This explains what is meant by “pollutions of idols,” ver. 20. ¶ Ye shall do well. You will do what ought to be done in regard to the subjects of dispute.

31. They rejoiced for the consolation. They acquiesced in the decision of the apostles and elders, and rejoiced that they were not to be subjected to the burdensome rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion. This closes the account of the first Christian council. It was conducted throughout on Christian principles; in a mild, kind, conciliatory spirit, and is a model for all similar assemblages. It came together, not to promote, but to silence disputation; not to persecute the people of God, but to promote their peace; not to be a scene of harsh and angry recrimination, but to be an example of all that was mild, and tender, and kind. Those who composed it came together, not to carry a point, not to overreach their adversaries, not to be party men, but to mingle their sober counsels, to inquire what was right, and to express, in a Christian manner, that which was proper to be done. Great and important principles were to be established in regard to the Christian church, and they engaged in their work evidently with a deep sense of their responsibility, and with a just view of their dependence on the aid of the Holy Spirit. How happy would it have been if this spirit had been possessed by all professedly Christian councils; if all had really sought the peace and harmony of the churches; if none had ever been convened to kindle the fires of persecution, or to rend and destroy the church of God!

This council has been usually appealed to as the authority for councils in the church as a permanent arrangement, and especially as an authority for courts of appeal and control. But it establishes neither, and should be brought as authority for neither. For, (1) It was not a court of appeal in any intelligible sense. It was an assembly convened for a special purpose; designed to settle an inquiry which arose in a particular part of the church, and which required the collected wisdom of the apostles and elders. (2) It had none of the marks or appendages of a court. The term court, or judicature, is nowhere applied to it, nor to any assembly of Christian men in the New Testament. Nor should these terms be used now in the churches. Courts of judicature imply a degree of authority which cannot be proved from the New Testament to have been conceded to any ecclesiastical body of men. (3) There is not the slightest intimation that anything like permanency was to be attached to this council, or that it would be periodically or regularly repeated. It proves, indeed, that, when cases of difficulty occur—when Christians are perplexed and embarrassed, or when contentions arise—it is proper to refer to Christian men for advice and direction. Such was the case here, and such a course is obviously proper. If it should be maintained that it is well that Christian ministers and laymen should assemble periodically, at stated intervals, on the supposition that such cases may arise, this is conceded; but the example of the apostles and elders should not be pleaded as making such assemblies of divine right and authority, or as being essential to the existence of a church of God. Such an arrangement has been deemed to be so desirable by Christians,

that it has been adopted by Episcopalians in their regular annual and triennial Conventions; by Methodists in their Conferences; by Presbyterians in their General Assembly; by Friends in their Yearly Meetings; by Baptists and Congregationalists in their Associations, &c.; but the example of the council summoned on a special emergency at Jerusalem should not be pleaded as giving divine authority to these periodical assemblages. They are wise and prudent arrangements, contributing to the peace of the church, and the example of the council at Jerusalem can be adduced as furnishing as much divine authority for one as for another; that is, it does not make all or either of them of divine authority, or obligatory on the church of God. (4) It should be added that a degree of authority (comp. ch. xvi. 4) would, of course, be attached to the decision of the apostles and elders at that time which cannot be to any body of ministers and laymen now. Besides, it should never be forgotten—what, alas! it seems to have been the pleasure and the interest of ecclesiastics to forget—that neither the apostles nor elders asserted any jurisdiction over the churches of Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia; that they did not claim a right to have these cases referred to them; that they did not attempt to “lord it” over their faith or their consciences. The case was a single, specific, definite question referred to them, and they decided it as such. They asserted no abstract right of such jurisdiction; they sought not to intermeddle with the case; they enjoined no future reference of such cases to them, to their successors, or to any ecclesiastical tribunal. They evidently regarded the churches as blessed with the most ample freedom, and contemplated no arrangement of a permanent character asserting a right to legislate on articles of faith, or to make laws for the direction of the Lord’s freemen.

32. Being prophets. See Notes on ch. xi. 27. This evidently implies that they had been preachers before they went to Antioch. What was the precise nature of the office of a prophet in the Christian church it is not easy to ascertain. Possibly it may imply that they were teachers of unusual or remarkable ability. Comp. Notes on Ro. xii. 6. ¶ Confirmed them. Strengthened them; that is, by their instructions and exhortations. See Notes on ch. xiv. 22.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, <sup>k</sup>they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

35 Paul also, and Barnabas, continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

33. A space. For some time. ¶ They were let go in peace. An expression implying that they departed with the affectionate regard of the Christians to whom they had ministered, and with their highest wishes for their prosperity, 1 Co. xvi. 11; 2 Jn. 10. ¶ Unto the apostles. At Jerusalem. Many MSS., however, instead of “unto the apostles,” read “unto those who had sent them.” The sense is not materially different.

34. Notwithstanding, &c. This whole verse is wanting in many MSS.; in the Syriac, Arabic, and Coptic versions; and is regarded as spurious by Mill, Griesbach, and by other critics. It was probably introduced by some early transcriber, who judged it necessary to complete the narrative. The Latin Vulgate reads, “It seemed good to Silas to remain, but Judas went alone to Jerusalem.”

35. Paul also, and Barnabas, continued in Antioch. How long a time is unknown. It is probable that at this time the unhappy incident occurred between Paul and Peter which is recorded in Ga. ii. 11-14.

36. Let us go again and visit our brethren. That is, in the churches which they had established in Asia Minor, ch. xiii. xiv. This was a natural wish, and was an enterprise that might be attended with important advantages to those feeble churches.

37. But Barnabas determined. Greek,

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, <sup>n</sup>who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

willed, or was disposed to (ἰσουτίσατο). ¶ John, &c. See Notes on ch. xii. 12. He had been with them before as a travelling companion, ch. xii. 25; xiii. 5. He was the son of a sister of Barnabas (Col. iv. 10), and it is probable that Barnabas’s affection for his nephew was the main reason for inducing him to wish to take him with him in the journey.

38. But Paul thought not good. Did not think it proper. Because he could not confide in his perseverance with them in the toils and perils of their journey. ¶ Who departed from them, &c., ch. xiii. 13. Why he did this is not known. It was evidently, however, for some cause which Paul did not consider satisfactory, and which, in his view, disqualified him from being their attendant again. ¶ To the work. Of preaching the gospel.

39. And the contention was so sharp. The word used here (παροξύμως) is that from which our word paroxysm is derived. It may denote any excitement of mind, and is used in a good sense in He. x. 24. It here means, however, a violent altercation that resulted in their separation for a time, and in their engaging in different spheres of labour. ¶ And sailed unto Cyprus. This was the native place of Barnabas. See Notes on ch. iv. 36.

40. Being recommended. Being commended by prayer to God. See Notes on ch. xiv. 26.

In regard to this unhappy contention between Paul and Barnabas, and their separation from each other, we may make the following remarks. (1) That no apology or vindication of it is offered by the sacred writer. It was undoubtedly improper and evil. It was a melancholy instance in which even apostles evinced an improper spirit, and engaged in improper strife. (2) In this contention it is probable that Paul was, in the main, right. Barnabas seems to have been influenced by attachment to a relative; Paul sought a helper who would not shrink from duty and danger. It is clear that Paul had the sympathies and prayers of the church in his favour (ver. 40), and it is more than probable that Barnabas departed without any such sympathy, ver. 39. (3) There is reason to think that this contention was overruled for the furtherance of the gospel. They went to different places, and preached to different people. It often happens that the unhappy and wicked strifes of Christians are the means of exciting their mutual zeal, and of extending the gospel, and of establishing churches. But no thanks to their contention; nor is the guilt of their anger and strife mitigated by this. (4) This difference was afterward reconciled, and Paul and Barnabas again became travelling companions, 1 Co. ix. 6; Gal. ii. 9. (5) There is evidence that Paul also became reconciled to John Mark, Col. iv. 10; Phile. 24; 2 Ti. iv. 11. How long this separation continued is not known; but perhaps in this journey with Barnabas John gave such evidence of his courage and zeal as induced Paul again to admit him to his confidence as a travelling companion, and as to become a profitable fellow-labourer. See 2 Ti. iv. 11, "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry." (6) This account disciple was there, named "Timotheus, the son of "a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

proves that there was no collusion or agreement among the apostles to impose upon mankind. Had there been such an agreement, and had the books of the New Testament been an imposture, the apostles would have been represented as perfectly harmonious, and as united in all their views and efforts. What impostor would have thought of the device of representing the early friends of the Christian religion as divided, and contending, and separating from each other? Such a statement has an air of candour and honesty, and at the same time is apparently so much against the truth of the system, that no impostor would have thought of resorting to it.

CHAPTER XVI.

1. Then came he. That is, Paul in company with Silas. Luke does not give us the history of Barnabas, but confines his narrative to the journey of Paul. ¶ To Derbe and Lystra. See Notes on ch. xiv. 6. ¶ And, behold, a certain disciple named Timotheus. It was to this disciple that Paul afterward addressed the two epistles which bear his name. It is evident that he was a native of one of these places, but whether of Derbe or Lystra it is impossible to determine. ¶ The son of a certain woman, &c. Her name was Eunice, 2 Ti. i. 5. ¶ And believed. And was a Christian. It is stated also that her mother was a woman of distinguished Christian piety, 2 Ti. i. 5. It was not lawful for a Jew to marry a woman of another nation, or to give his daughter in marriage to a Gentile, Ezr. ix. 12. But it is probable that this law was not regarded very strictly by the Jews who lived in the midst of heathen nations. It is evident that Timothy, at this time, was very young; for when Paul besought him to abide at Ephesus, to take charge of the church there (1 Ti. i. 3), he addressed him then as a young man, 1 Ti. iv. 12, "Let no man despise thy youth." ¶ But his father was a Greek. Evidently a man who had not been cir-

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him, because of the Jews which were in those quarters; for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decumcised, for had he been Timothy would have been also.

2. Which. That is, Timothy. The connection requires us to understand this of him. Of the character of his father nothing is known. ¶ Was well reported of. Was esteemed highly as a young man of piety and promise. Comp. Notes on ch. vi. 3. Comp. 1 Ti. v. 10. Timothy had been religiously educated. He was carefully trained in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures, and was therefore the better qualified for his work, 2 Ti. iii. 15.

3. Him would Paul have, &c. This was an instance of Paul's selecting young men of piety for the holy ministry. It shows, (1) That he was disposed to look up and call forth the talent in the church that might be usefully employed. It is quite evident that Timothy would not have thought of this had it not been suggested by Paul. The same thing education societies are attempting now to accomplish. (2) That Paul sought proper qualifications, and valued them. Those were (a) That he had a good reputation for piety, &c., ver. 2. This he demanded as an indispensable qualification for a minister of the gospel, 1 Ti. iii. 7, "Moreover he (a bishop) must have a good report of them which are without." Comp. Ac. xxii. 12. (b) Paul esteemed him to be a young man of talents and prudence. His admitting him to a partnership in his labours, and his intrusting to him the affairs of the church at Ephesus, prove this. (c) He had been carefully trained in the holy Scriptures. A foundation was thus laid for usefulness. And this qualification seems to have been deemed by Paul of indispensable value for the right discharge of his duties in this holy office. ¶ And he took and circumcised him. This was evidently done to avoid the opposition and reproaches of the Jews. It was a measure not binding in itself (comp. ch. xv. 1, 28, 29), but the neglect of crees for to keep that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And so were <sup>h</sup>the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

which would expose to contention and opposition among the Jews, and greatly retard or destroy his usefulness. It was an act of expediency for the sake of peace, and was in accordance with Paul's uniform and avowed principle of conduct, 1 Co. ix. 20, "And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews." Comp. Ac. xxi. 23-26.

4. And as they went through the cities. The cities of Syria, Cilicia, &c. ¶ They delivered them. Paul and Silas delivered to the Christians in those cities. ¶ The decrees—r̄a δέκταρα. The decrees in regard to the four things specified in ch. xv. 20, 29. The word translated decrees occurs in Lu. ii. 1, "A decree from Caesar Augustus;" in Ac. xvii. 7, "The decrees of Caesar;" in Ep. ii. 15; and in Col. ii. 14. It properly means a law or edict of a king or legislature. In this instance it was the decision of the council in a case submitted to it, and implied an obligation on the Christians to submit to that decision, since they had submitted the matter to them. The same principles, also, would be applicable everywhere, and the decision, therefore, at Jerusalem became conclusive. It is probable that a correct and attested copy of the letter (ch. xv. 23-29) would be sent to the various churches of the Gentiles. ¶ To keep. To obey, or to observe. ¶ That were ordained. Greek, that were adjudged or determined.

5. Established in the faith. Confirmed in the belief of the gospel. The effect of the wise and conciliatory measure was to increase and strengthen the churches.

6. Throughout Phrygia. This was the largest province of Asia Minor. It had Bithynia north; Pisidia and Lycia south; Galatia and Cappadocia east; and Lydia and Mysia west. ¶ And the region of Galatia. This province was directly east of Phrygia. The region was formerly conquered by the Gauls. They settled in it, and called it, after their gion of Galatia, and were <sup>k</sup>forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word <sup>l</sup>in Asia, 7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit suffered them not.

own name, Galatia. The Gauls invaded the country at different times, and no less than three tribes or bodies of Gauls had possession of it. Many Jews were also settled there. It was from this cause that so many parties could be formed there, and that so much controversy would arise between the Jewish and Gentile converts. See the Epistle to the Galatians. ¶ And were forbidden. Probably by a direct revelation. The reason of this was, doubtless, that it was the intention of God to extend the gospel farther into the regions of Greece than would have been done if they had remained in Asia Minor. This prohibition was the means of the first introduction of the gospel into Europe. ¶ In Asia. See Notes on ch. ii. 9. This was doubtless the region of proconsular Asia. It was also called Ionia. Of this region Ephesus was the capital; and here were situated also the cities of Smyrna, Thyatira, Philadelphia, &c., within which the seven churches mentioned in Re. i. ii. iii. were established. Cicero speaks of proconsular Asia as containing the provinces of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, and Lydia. In all this region the gospel was afterward preached with great success. But now a more important and a wider field was opened before Paul and Barnabas in the extensive country of Macedonia.

7. Mysia. This was a province of Asia Minor, having Propontis on the north, Bithynia on the east, Lydia on the south, and the Ægean Sea on the west. ¶ They assayed. They endeavoured; they attempted. ¶ Into Bithynia. A province of Asia Minor lying east of Mysia.

8. Came down to Trous. This was a city of Phrygia or Mysia, on the Hellespont, between Troy north, and Assos south. Sometimes the name Trous, or Troad, is used to denote the whole country of the Trojans, the province where the ancient city of Troy had stood. This region was much celebrated in the early periods of Grecian history. It was here that the events recorded in the Iliad of Homer are supposed to have occurred. The city of Troy has long since been completely destroyed. Trous is several times mentioned in the New Testament, 2 Co. ii. 12; 2 Ti. iv. 13; Ac. xx. 5.

9. And a vision. See Notes on ch. ix. 10. ¶ There stood a man, &c. The appearance of a man who was known to be of Macedonia, probably by his dress and language. Whether this was in a dream, or whether it was a representation made to the senses while awake, it is impossible to tell. The will of God was at different times made known in both these ways. Comp. Mat. ii. 12; Note, Ac. x. 3. Grotius supposes that this was the guardian angel of Macedonia, and refers for illustration to Da. x. 12, 13, 20, 21. But there seems to be no foundation for this opinion. ¶ Of Macedonia. This was an extensive country of Greece, having Thrace on the north, Thessaly south, Epirus west, and the Ægean Sea east. It is supposed that it was peopled by Kittim, son of Javan, Ge. x. 4. The kingdom rose into celebrity chiefly under the reign of Philip and his son, Alexander the Great. It was the first region in Europe in which we have any record that the gospel was preached.

¶ And help us. That is, by preaching the gospel. This was a call to preach the gospel in an extensive heathen land, amid many trials and dangers. To this call, notwithstanding all this prospect of danger, Paul and Silas cheerfully responded, and gave themselves to the work. Their conduct was thus an example to the church. From all portions of the earth a similar call is now coming to the churches. Openings of a similar character for the introduction of the gospel are presented in all lands. Appeals are coming from every quarter, and all that seems now necessary for the speedy conversion of the world is for the church to enter into these vast fields with the self-denial, the spirit, and the zeal which characterized the apostle Paul.

10. We endeavoured. This is the first instance in which Luke refers to himself as being in company with Paul. It is hence probable that he joined Paul and Silas about this time, and it is evident that he attended Paul in his travels, as recorded throughout the remainder of the Acts. ¶ Assuredly gathering. Being certainly convinced.

11. Loosing from Troas. Setting sail from this place. ¶ To Samothracia. This was an island in the Aegean Sea not far from Thrace. It was peopled by inhabitants from Samos and from Thrace, and hence called Samothracia. It was about twenty miles in circumference, and was an asylum for fugitives and criminals. ¶ And the next day to Neapolis. This was a maritime city of Macedonia, near the borders of Thrace. It was about ten miles from Philippi.

12. And from thence to Philippi. The former name of this city was Dathos. It was repaired and adorned by Philip, the father of Alexander the Great, and after him was called Philippi. It was famous for having been the place where several battles were fought during the civil wars of the Romans, and, among others, for the decisive battle between Brutus and Antony. At this place Brutus killed himself. To the church in this place Paul afterward wrote the epistle which bears its name. ¶ Which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia. This whole region had been conquered by the Romans under Paulus Æmilius. By him it was divided into four parts or provinces (Livy). The Syriac version renders it “a city of the first part of Macedonia,” and there is a medal extant which also describes this region by this name. It has been proposed, therefore, to alter the Greek text in accordance with this, since it is known that Amphipolis was made the chief city by Paulus Æmilius. But it may be remarked that, although Amphipolis was the chief city in the time of Paulus Æmilius, it may have happened that in the lapse of two hundred and twenty years from that time Philippi might have become the most extensive and splendid city. The Greek here may also mean simply that this was the first city to which they arrived in their travels. ¶ And a colony. This is a Latin word, and means that this was a Roman colony. The word denotes a city or province which was planted or occupied by Roman citizens. It is a strong confirmation of the fact here stated by Luke, that Philippi had the rank and dignity of a Roman colony, as coins are still extant, in which Philippi is distinctly referred to as a colony. Such coins exist from the reign of Augustus to the reign of Caracalla. ¶ Certain days. Some days.

13. And on the sabbath. There is no doubt that in this city there were Jews: In the time of the apostles they were scattered extensively throughout the known world. ¶ By a river side. What river this was is not known. It is known, however, that the Jews were accustomed to provide water, or to build their synagogues and oratories near water, for the convenience of the numerous washings before and during their religious services. ¶ Where prayer. Where there was a place of prayer, or where prayer was commonly offered. The Greek will bear either, but the sense is the same. Places for prayer were erected by the Jews in the vicinity of cities and towns, and particularly where there were not Jewish families enough, or where they were forbidden by the magistrate to erect a synagogue. These prosenchæ, or places of prayer, were simple inclosures made of stones, in a grove or under a tree, where there would be a retired and convenient place for worship. ¶ Was wont. Was accustomed to be offered, or where it was established by custom. ¶ And spake unto the women, &c. This was probably before the regular service of the place commenced.

14. A seller of purple. Purple was a most valuable colour, obtained usually from shell-fish. It was chiefly worn by princes and by the rich, and the traffic in it might be very profitable. Comp. Notes on Is. i. 18; Lu. xvi. 19. ¶ The city of Thyatira. This was a city of Lydia, in Asia Minor, now called Akhisar. The art of dyeing was early cultivated in the neighbourhood of Thyatira, as we learn from Homer (Iliad, iv. 141), and as is confirmed by inscriptions found in that city—a circumstance which may be referred to as confirming the veracity of the statements of Luke even in his casual allusions. Several of these inscriptions have been published. See the Life and Epistles of St. Paul, i. 295. ¶ Which worshipped God. A religious woman, a proselyte. Note, ch. xiii. 16. ¶ Whose heart the Lord opened. See Note, Lu. xxiv. 45.

15. And when she was baptized. Apparently without any delay. Comp. Ac. ii. 41; viii. 38. It was usual to be baptized immediately on believing. ¶ And her household. Greek, her house (oikos avris), her family. No mention is made of their having believed, and the case is one that affords a strong presumptive proof that this was an instance of household or infant baptism. For, (1) Her believing is particularly mentioned. (2) It is not intimated that they believed. (3) It is manifestly implied that they were baptized because she believed. It was the offering of her family to the Lord. It is just such an account as would now be given of a household or family that were baptized on the faith of the parent. ¶ If ye have judged me to be faithful. If you deem me a Christian or a believer. ¶ And she constrained us. She urged us. This was an instance of great hospitality, and also an evidence of her desire for farther instruction in the doctrines of religion.

16. As we went to prayer. Greek, as we were going to the proseuche, the place of prayer, ver. 13. Whether this was on the same day in which the conversion of Lydia occurred, or at another time, is not mentioned by the historian. ¶ A certain damsel. A maid, a young woman. ¶ Possessed with a spirit of divination. Greek, Python. See the margin. Python, or Pythios, was one of the names of Apollo, the Grecian god of the fine arts, of music, poetry, medicine, and eloquence. Of these he was esteemed to have been the inventor. He was reputed to be the third son of Jupiter and Latona. He had a celebrated temple and oracle at Delphi, which was resorted to from all parts of the world, and which was perhaps the only oracle that was in universal repute. The name Python is said to have been given him because, as soon as he was born, he destroyed with arrows a serpent of that name, that had been sent by Juno to persecute Latona; hence his common name was the Pythian Apollo. He had temples on Mount Parnassus, at Delphi, Delos, Claros, Tenedos, &c., and his worship was almost universal. In the celebrated oracle at Delphi, the priestess of Apollo pretended to be inspired; became violently agitated during the periods of pretended inspiration; and during those periods gave such responses to inquirers as were regarded as the oracles of the god. Others, it is probable, would also make pretensions to such inspiration; and the art of fortune-telling, or of jugglery, was extensively practised, and was the source of much gain. See Notes on ch. viii. 8-10. What was the cause of this extensive delusion in regard to the oracle at Delphi it is not necessary now to inquire. It is plain that Paul regarded this as a case of demoniacal possession,

and treated it accordingly. ¶ Her masters. Those in whose employ she was. ¶ By soothsaying. Pretending to foretell future events.

17. The same followed Paul, &c. Why she did this, or under what pretence, the sacred writer has not informed us. It may have been, (1) That as she prophesied for gain, she supposed that Paul and Silas would reward her if she publicly proclaimed that they were the servants of God. Or, (2) Because she was conscious that an evil spirit possessed her, and she feared that Paul and Silas would expel that spirit, and by proclaiming them to be the servants of God she hoped to conciliate their favour. Or, (3) More probably it was because she saw evident tokens of their being sent from God, and that their doctrine would prevail; and by proclaiming this she hoped to acquire more authority, and a higher reputation for being herself inspired. Comp. Mar. v. 7.

18. But Paul, being grieved. Being molested, troubled, offended. Paul was grieved, probably, (1) Because her presence was troublesome to him; (2) Because it might be said that he was in alliance with her, and that his pretensions were just like hers; (3) Because what she did was for the sake of gain, and was a base imposition; (4) Because her state was one of bondage and delusion, and it was proper to free her from this demoniacal possession; and (5) Because the system under which she was acting was a part of a scheme of delusion and imposture, which had spread over a large portion of the pagan world, and which was then holding it in bondage. Throughout the Roman empire the inspiration of the priestesses of Apollo was believed in, and temples were everywhere reared to perpetuate and celebrate the delusion. Against this extensive system of imposture and fraud Christianity must oppose itself; and this was a favourable instance to expose

18 And this she did many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to come out of her. And <sup>x</sup> he came out the same hour.

the delusion, and to show the power of the Christian religion over all the arts and powers of imposture. The mere fact that in a very few instances—of which this was one—they spoke the truth, did not make it improper for Paul to interpose. That fact would only tend to perpetuate the delusion, and to make his interposition more proper and necessary. The expulsion of the evil spirit would also afford a signal proof of the fact that the apostles were really from God—a far better proof than her noisy and troublesome proclamation of it would furnish. ¶ In the name of Jesus Christ. Or, by the authority of Jesus Christ. See Notes on ch. iii. 6.

19. The hope of their gains was gone. It was this that troubled and enraged them. Instead of regarding the act as proof of divine power, they were intent only on their profits. Their indignation furnishes a remarkable illustration of the fixedness with which men will regard wealth; of the fact that the love of it will blind them to all the truths of religion, and all the proofs of the power and presence of God; and of the fact that any interposition of divine power that destroys their hopes of gain, fills them with wrath, and hatred, and murmuring. Many a man has been opposed to God and his gospel because, if religion should be extensively prevalent, his hopes of gain would be gone. Many a slave-dealer, and many a trafficker in ardent spirits, and many a man engaged in other unlawful modes of gain, has been unwilling to abandon his employments simply because his hopes of gain would be destroyed. No small part of the opposition to the gospel arises from the fact that, if embraced, it would strike at so much of the dishonourable employments of men, and make them honest and conscientious. ¶ The market-place. The court or forum. The market-place was a place of concourse, and the courts were often held in or near those places. ¶ The rulers. The term used here refers commonly to civil magistrates.

20. And brought them to the magistrates. To the military rulers (στρατηγοῖς) or praetors. Philippi was a Roman colony, and it is probable that the officers of the army exercised the double function of civil and military rulers. ¶ Do exceedingly trouble our city. In what way they did it they specify in the next verse. The charge which they wished to substantiate was that of being disturbers of the public peace. All at once they became conscientious. They forgot the subject of their gains, and were greatly distressed about the violation of the laws. There is nothing that will make men more hypocritically conscientious than to denounce, and detect, and destroy their unlawful and dishonest practices. Men who are thus exposed become suddenly filled with reverence for the law or for religion, and they who have heretofore cared nothing for either become greatly alarmed lest the public peace should be disturbed. Men slumber quietly in sin, and pursue their wicked gains; they hate or despise all law and all forms of religion; but the moment their course of life is attacked and exposed, they become full of zeal for laws that they would not themselves hesitate to violate, and for the customs of religion which in their hearts they thoroughly despise. Worldly-minded men often thus complain that their neighbourhoods are disturbed by revivals of religion; and the preaching of the truth, and the attacking of their vices, often arouses this hypocritical conscientiousness, and makes them alarmed for the laws, and for religion, and for order, which they at other times are the first to disturb and disregard.

21. And teach customs. The word customs here (i.e.) refers to religious rites or forms of worship. See Notes on ch. vi. 14. They meant to charge the apostles with introducing a new religion which was unauthorized by the Roman laws. This was a cunning and artful accusation. It is perfectly evident that they cared nothing either for the religion of the Romans or of the Jews. Nor were they really concerned about any change of religion. Paul had destroyed their hopes of gain; and as they could not prevent that except by securing his punishment or expulsion, and as they had no way of revenge except by endeavouring to excite indignation against him and Silas for violating the laws, they endeavoured to convict them of such violation. This is one, among many instances, where wicked and unprincipled men will endeavour to make religion the means of promoting their own interest. If they can make money by it, they will become its professed friends; or if they can annoy Christians, they will at once have remarkable zeal for the laws and for the purity of religion. Many a man opposes revivals of religion, and the real progress of evangelical piety, from professed zeal for truth and order. ¶ Which are not lawful for us to receive. There were laws of the Roman empire under which they might shield themselves in this charge, though it is evident that their zeal was, not because they loved the laws more, but because they loved Christianity less. Thus Servius on Virgil, Aeneid, viii. 187, says, "Care was taken among the Athenians and the Romans that no one should introduce new religions. It was on this account that Socrates was condemned, and the Chaldeans or Jews were banished from the city." Cicero (De Legibus, ii. 8) says, "No person shall have any separate gods, or new ones; nor shall he privately worship any strange gods, unless they be publicly allowed." Wetstein (in loco) says, "The Romans would indeed allow foreigners to worship their own gods, but not unless it were done secretly, so that the worship of foreign gods would not interfere with the allowed worship of the Romans, and so that occasion for dissension and controversy might be avoided. Neither was it lawful among the Romans to recommend a new religion to the citizens, contrary to that which was confirmed and established by the public authority, and to call off the people from that. It was on this account that there was such a hatred of the Romans against the Jews" (Kuinzel). Tertullian says that "there was a decree that no god should be consecrated unless approved by the senate" (Grotius). See many other authorities quoted in Bishop Watson's Apology for Christianity. ¶ To observe. To do. ¶ Being Romans. Having the privileges of Roman citizens. See Notes on ver. 12.

22. And the multitude, &c. It is evident that this was done in a popular tumult, and without even the form of law. Of this Paul afterward justly complained, as it was a violation of the privileges of a Roman citizen, and contrary to the laws. See Notes on ver. 37. It was one instance in which men affect great zeal for the honour of the law, and yet are among the first to disregard it. ¶ And the magistrates, ver. 20. They who should have been their protectors until they had had a fair trial according to law. ¶ Rent off their clothes. This was always done when one was to be scourged or whipped. The criminal was usually stripped entirely naked. Livy says (ii. 5), "The lictors, being sent to inflict punishment, beat them with rods, being naked." Cicero, against Verres, says, "He commanded the man to be seized, and to be stripped naked in the midst of the forum, and to be bound, and rods to be brought." ¶ And commanded to beat them—παρδεῖσιν. To beat them with rods. This was done by lictors, whose office it was, and was a common mode of punishment among the Romans. Probably Paul alludes to this as one of the instances which occurred in his life of his being publicly scourged, when he says (2 Co. xi. 25), "Thrice was I beaten with rods."

23. And when they had laid many stripes on them. The Jews were by law prohibited from inflicting more than forty stripes, and usually inflicted but thirty-nine, 2 Co. xi. 24. But there was no such law among the Romans. They were unrestricted in regard to the number of lashes, and probably inflicted many more. Perhaps Paul refers to this when he says (2 Co. xi. 23), "In stripes above measure," that is, beyond the usual measure among the Jews, or beyond moderation. ¶ They cast them into prison. The magistrates did this partly as a punishment, and partly with a view hereafter of taking vengeance on them more according to the forms of law.

24. Thrust them into the inner prison. Into the most retired and secure part of the prison. The cells in the interior of the prison would be regarded as more safe, being doubtless more protected, and the difficulty of escape would be greater. ¶ And made their feet fast in the stocks. Greek, and made their feet secure to wood. The word stocks, with us, denotes a machine made of two pieces of timber between which the feet of criminals are placed, and in which they are thus made secure. The account here does not imply necessarily that they were secured precisely in this way, but that they were fastened or secured by the feet, probably by cords, to a piece or beam of wood, so that they could not escape. It is probable that the legs of the prisoners were bound to large pieces of wood which not only encumbered them, but which were so placed as to extend their feet to a considerable distance. In this condition it might be necessary for them to lie on their backs; and if this, as is probable, was on the cold ground, after their severe scourging, their sufferings must have been very great. Yet in the midst of this they sang praises to God.

25. And at midnight. Probably their painful posture, and the sufferings of their recent scourging, prevented their sleeping. Yet, though they had no repose, they had a quiet conscience, and the supports of religion. ¶ Prayed.

26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, <sup>f</sup>so that the foundations of the prison were shaken; <sup>g</sup>and immediately all the

Though they had suffered much, yet they had reason to apprehend more. They sought, therefore, the sustaining grace of God. ¶ And sang praises. Comp. Notes on Job xxxv. 10. Nothing but religion would have enabled them to do this. They had endured much, but they had cause still for gratitude. The Christian may find more true joy in a prison than the monarch on his throne. ¶ And the prisoners heard them. And doubtless with astonishment. Prayer and praise are not common in a prison. The song of rejoicing and the language of praise is not usual among men lying bound in a dungeon. From this narrative we may learn, (1) That the Christian has the sources of his happiness within him. External circumstances cannot destroy his peace and joy. In a dungeon he may find as real happiness as on a throne. On the cold earth, beaten and bruised, he may be as truly happy as on a bed of down. (2) The enemies of Christians cannot destroy their peace. They may incarcelate the body, but they cannot bind the spirit. They may exclude from earthly comforts, but they cannot shut them out from the presence and sustaining grace of God. (3) We see the value of a good conscience. Nothing else can give peace; and amidst the wakeful hours of the night, whether in a dungeon or on a bed of sickness, it is of more value than all the wealth of the world. (4) We see the inestimable worth of the religion of Christ. It fits for all scenes; supports in all trials; upholds by day or by night; inspires the soul with confidence in God; and puts into the lips the songs of praise and thanksgiving. (5) We have here a sublime and holy scene which sin and infidelity could never furnish. What more sublime spectacle has the earth witnessed than that of scourged and incarcerated men, suffering from unjust and cruel inflictions, and anticipating still greater sorrows; yet, with a calm mind, a pure conscience, a holy joy, pouring forth their desires and praises at midnight, into the ear of the God who always hears prayer! The darkness, the stillness, the loneliness, all give sublimity

26. And suddenly. While they were praying and singing. ¶ A great earthquake, Mat. xxviii. 2. An earthquake, in such circumstances, was regarded as a symbol of the presence of God, and as an answer to prayer. See Notes on ch. iv. 31. The design of this was, doubtless, to furnish them proof of the presence and protection of God, and to provide a way for them to escape. It was one among the series of wonders by which the gospel was established, and the early Christians protected amidst their dangers. ¶ And immediately all the doors were opened. An effect that would naturally follow from the violent concussion of the earthquake. Comp. ch. v. 19. ¶ Every one's bands were loosed. This was evidently a miracle. Some have supposed that their chains were dissolved by electric fluid; but the narrative gives no account of any such fluid, even supposing such an effect to be possible. It was evidently a direct interposition of divine power. But for what purpose it was done is not recorded. Grotius supposes that it was that they might know that the apostles might be useful to them and to others, and that by them their spiritual bonds might be loosed. Probably the design was to impress all the prisoners with the conviction of the presence and power of God, and thus to prepare them to receive the message of life from the lips of his servants Paul and Silas. They had just before heard them singing and praying; they were aware, doubtless, of the cause for which they were imprisoned; they saw evident tokens that they were the servants of the Most High, and under his protection; and their own minds were impressed and awed by the terrors of the earthquake, and by the fact of their own liberation. It renders this scene the more remarkable, that though the doors were opened, and the prisoners loosed, yet no one made any attempt to escape.

27. Would have killed himself. This out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

was done in the midst of agitation and alarm. He supposed that the prisoners had fled. He presumed that their escape would be charged on him. It was customary to hold a jailer responsible for the safe keeping of prisoners, and to subject him to the punishment due them if he suffered them to escape. See ch. xii. 19. It should be added that it was common and approved among the Greeks and Romans for a man to commit suicide when he was encompassed with dangers from which he could not escape. Thus Cato was guilty of self-murder in Utica; and thus, at this very place—Philippi—Brutus and Cassius, and many of their friends, fell on their own swords, and ended their lives by suicide. The custom was thus sanctioned by the authority and example of the great; and we are not to wonder that the jailer, in a moment of alarm, should also attempt to destroy his own life. It is not one of the least benefits of Christianity that it has proclaimed the evil of self-murder, and has done so much to drive it from the world.

28. Do thyself no harm. This is the solemn command of religion in his case, and in all others. It enjoins on men to do themselves no harm—by self-murder, whether by the sword, the pistol, the halter; by intemperance, by lust, or by dissipation. In all cases, Christianity seeks the true welfare of man. In all cases, if it were obeyed, men would do themselves no harm. They would promote their own best interests here, and their eternal welfare hereafter.

29. Then he called for a light. Greek, lights, in the plural. Probably several torches were brought by his attendants. ¶ And came trembling. Alarmed at the earthquake; amazed that the prisoners were still there; confounded at the calmness of Paul and Silas, and overwhelmed at the proof of the presence of God. Comp. Je. v. 22, "Fear ye not me, saith the Lord? will ye not tremble at my presence?" &c. ¶ And fell down. This was an act of profound reverence. See Notes on Mat. ii. 11. It is evident that he regarded them as the favourites of God, and was constrained to recognize them as religious teachers.

30. And brought them out. From the prison. ¶ Sirs. Greek, xíροι, lords—an address of respect; a title usually given to masters or owners of slaves. ¶ What must I do to be saved? Never was a more important question asked than this. It is clear that by the question he did not refer to any danger to which he might be exposed from what had happened. For, (1) The apostles evidently understood him as referring to his eternal salvation, as is manifest from their answer, since to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ would have no effect in saving him from any danger of punishment to which he might be exposed from what had occurred. (2) He could scarcely now consider himself as exposed to punishment by the Romans. The prisoners were all safe; none had escaped, or showed any disposition to escape; and besides, for the earthquake and its effects he could not be held responsible.

It is not improbable that there was much confusion in his mind. There would be a rush of many thoughts; a state of agitation, alarm, and fear; and in view of all, he would naturally ask those whom he now saw to be men sent by God, and under his protection, what he should do to obtain the favour of that great Being under whose protection he saw that they manifestly were. Perhaps the following thoughts might have tended to produce this state of agitation and alarm.

(1) They had been designated by the Pythoness (ver. 17) as religious teachers sent from God, and appointed to "show the way of salvation," and in her testimony he might have been disposed to put confidence, or it might now be brought fresh to his recollection. (2) He manifestly saw that they were under the protection of God. A remarkable interposition—an earthquake—an event which all the heathen regarded as ominous of the presence of the divinity—had showed this. (3) The guilt of their imprisonment might rush upon his mind; and he might suppose that he, the agent of the imprisonment of the servants of God, would be exposed to his displeasure. (4) His guilt in attempting his own life might overwhelm him with alarm. (5) The whole scene was fitted to show him the need of the protection and friendship of the God that had thus interposed. In this state of agitation and alarm, the apostles directed him to the only source of peace and safety—the blood of the atonement. The feelings of an awakened sinner are often strikingly similar to those of this jailer. He is agitated, alarmed, and fearful; he sees that he is a sinner, and trembles; the sins of his life rush over his memory, and fill him with deep anxiety, and he inquires what he must do to be saved. Often too, as here, the providence of God is the means of awakening the sinner, and of leading to this inquiry. Some alarming dispensation convinces him that God is near, and that the soul is in danger. The loss of health, or property, or of a friend, may thus alarm the soul; the ravages of the pestilence, or any fearful judgment, may arrest the attention, and lead to the inquiry, "What must I do to be saved?" Reader, have you ever made this inquiry? Have you ever, like the heathen jailer at Philippi, seen yourself to be a lost sinner, and been willing to ask the way to life?

In this narrative we see the contrast which exists in periods of distress and alarm between Christians and sinners. The guilty jailer was all agitation, fear, distress, and terror; the apostles, all peace, calmness, joy. The one was filled with thoughts of self-murder; the others, intent on saving life and doing good. This difference is to be traced to religion. It was confidence in God that gave peace to them; it was the want of that which led to agitation and alarm in him. It is so still. In the trying scenes of this life the same difference is seen. In bereavement, in sickness, in times of pestilence, in death, it is still so. The Christian is calm; the sinner is agitated and alarmed. The Christian can pass through such scenes with peace and joy; to the sinner, they are scenes of terror and of dread. And thus it will be beyond the grave. In the morning of the resurrection, the Christian will rise with joy and triumph; the sinner, with fear and horror. And thus at the judgment seat. Calm and serene, the saint shall witness the solemnities of that day, and triumphantly hail the Judge as his friend; fearful and trembling, the sinner shall look on these solemnities with a soul filled with horror as he listens to the sentence that consigns him to eternal woe! With what solicitude, then, should we seek, without delay, an interest in that religion which alone can give peace to the soul!

31. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. This was a simple, a plain, and an effectual direction. They did not direct him to use the means of grace, to pray, or to continue to seek for salvation. They did not advise him to delay, or to wait for the mercy of God. They told him to believe at once; to commit his agitated, and guilty, and troubled spirit to the Saviour, with the assurance that he should find peace. They presumed that he would understand what it was to believe, and they commanded him to do the thing. And this was the uniform direction which the early preachers gave to those inquiring the way to life. See Notes on Mat. xvi. 16. Comp. Notes on Ac. viii. 22. ¶ And thy house. And thy family. That is, the same salvation is equally adapted to, and offered to your family. It does not mean that his family would be saved simply by his believing, but that the offers had reference to them as well as to himself; that they might be saved as well as he. His attention was thus called at once, as every man's should be, to his family. He was reminded that they needed salvation, and he was presented with the assurance that they might unite with him in the peace and joy of redeeming mercy. Comp. Notes on ch. ii. 39. It may be implied here that the faith of a father may be expected to be the means of the salvation of his family. It often is so in fact; but the direct meaning is, that salvation was offered to his family as well as himself, implying that if they believed they should also be saved.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he, and all his, straightway.

34 And when he had brought

32. To all that were in his house. Old and young. They instructed them in the doctrines of religion, and doubtless in the nature of the ordinances of the gospel, and then baptized the entire family.

33. And he took them. To a convenient place for washing. It is evident from this that, though the apostles had the gift of miracles, they did not exercise it in regard to their own sufferings or to heal their own wounds. They restored others to health, not themselves. ¶ And washed their stripes. The wounds which had been inflicted by the severe scourging which they had received the night before. We have here a remarkable instance of the effect of religion in producing humanity and tenderness. This same man, a few hours before, had thrust them into the inner prison, and made them fast in the stocks. He evidently had then no concern about their stripes or their wounds. But no sooner was he converted than one of his first acts was an act of humanity. He saw them suffering; he pitied them, and hastened to minister to them and to heal their wounds. Till the time of Christianity there never had been a hospital or an almshouse. Nearly all the hospitals for the sick since have been reared by Christians. They who are most ready to minister to the sick and dying are Christians. They who are most willing to encounter the pestilential damps of dungeons to aid the prisoner are, like Howard, Christians. Who ever saw an infidel attending a dying bed if he could help it? and where has infidelity ever reared a hospital or an almshouse, or made provision for the widow and the fatherless? Often one of the most striking changes that occurs in conversion is seen in the disposition to be kind and humane to the suffering. Comp. Ja. i. 27. ¶ And was baptized. This was done straightway; that is, immediately. As it is altogether improbable that either in his house or in the prison there would be water sufficient for immersing them, there is every reason to suppose that this was performed in some other mode. All the circumstances lead us to suppose that it was not by immersion. It was at the dead of night; in a prison; amidst much agitation; and was evidently performed in haste.

35 And when it was day, the

34. He set meat before them. Food. Greek, he placed a table. The word meat formerly meant food of all kinds. ¶ And rejoiced. This was the effect of believing. Religion produces joy. See Notes on ch. viii. 8. He was free from danger and alarm; he had evidence that his sins were forgiven, and that he was now the friend of God. The agitating and alarming scenes of the night had passed away; the prisoners were safe; and religion, with its peace, and pardon, and rejoicings, had visited himself and his family. What a change to be produced in one night! What a difference between the family when Paul was thrust into prison, and when he was brought out and received as an honoured guest at the very table of the renovated jailer! Such a change would Christianity produce in every family, and such joy would it diffuse through every household. ¶ With all his house. With all his family. Whether they believed before they were baptized or after is not declared. But the whole narrative would lead us to suppose that, as soon as the jailer believed, he and all his family were baptized. It is subsequently added that they believed also. The joy arose from the fact that they all believed the gospel; the baptism appears to have been performed on account of the faith of the head of the family.

35. And when it was day, &c. It is evident from the narrative that it was not contemplated at first to release them so soon, ver. 22-24. But it is not known what produced this change of purpose in the magistrates. It is probable, however, that they had been brought to reflection, somewhat as the jailer had, by the earthquake, and that their consciences had been troubled by the fact, that in order to please the multitude, they had caused strangers to be beaten and imprisoned without trial, and contrary to the Roman laws. An magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go; now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them,

They have beaten us openly 'uncondemned', being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? Nay, verily; but let them come themselves, and fetch us out.

earthquake is always fitted to alarm the guilty; and among the Romans it was regarded as an omen of the anger of the gods, and was therefore adapted to produce agitation and remorse. The agitation and alarm of the magistrates were shown by the fact that they sent the officers as soon as it was day. The judgments of God are eminently fitted to alarm sinners. Two ancient MSS. read this, “The magistrates who were alarmed by the earthquake, sent,” &c. (Doddridge). Whether this reading be genuine or not, it doubtless expresses the true cause of their sending to release the apostles. ¶ The serjeants—ἱαβδούχοις. Literally, those having rods; the lictors. These were public officers who walked before magistrates with the emblems of authority. In Rome they bore before the senators the fascæ; that is, a bundle of rods with an axe in its centre, as a symbol of office. They performed somewhat the same office as a beadle in England, or as a constable in our courts (America).

37. They have beaten us openly uncondemned. There are three aggravating circumstances mentioned, of which Paul complains. (1) That they had been beaten contrary to the Roman laws. (2) That it had been public; the disgrace had been in the presence of the people, and the reparation ought to be as public. (3) That it had been done without a trial, and while they were uncondemned, and therefore the magistrates ought themselves to come and release them, and thus publicly acknowledge their error. Paul knew the privileges of a Roman citizen, and at proper times, when the interests of justice and religion required it, he did not hesitate to assert them. In all this, he understood and accorded with the Roman laws. The Valerian law declared that if a citizen appealed from the magistrate to the people, it should not be lawful for the magistrate to beat him with rods, or to behead him (Plutarch, Life of P. Valerius Publicola; Livy, ii. 8). By the Porcian law it was expressly forbidden that a citizen should be beaten (Livy, iv. 9). Cicero says that the body of every Roman citizen was inviolable. “The Porcian law,” he adds, “has removed the rod from the body of every Roman citizen.” And in his celebrated oration against Verres, he says, “A Roman citizen was beaten with rods in the forum, O judges; where, in the meantime, no groan, no other voice of this unhappy man, was heard except the cry, ‘I am a Roman citizen!’ Take away this hope,” he says, “take away this defence from the Roman citizens, let there be no protection in the cry I am a Roman citizen, and the prætor can with impunity inflict any punishment on him who declares himself a citizen of Rome,” &c. ¶ Being Romans. Being Romans, or having the privilege of Roman citizens. They were born Jews, but they claimed that they were Roman citizens, and had a right to the privileges of citizenship. On the ground of this claim, and the reason why Paul claimed to be a Roman citizen, see Notes on ch. xxii. 28. ¶ Privily. Privately. The release should be as public as the unjust act of imprisonment. As they have publicly attempted to disgrace us, so they should as publicly acquit us. This was a matter of mere justice; and as it was of great importance to their character and success, they insisted on it. ¶ Nay, verily; but let them come, &c. It was proper that they should be required to do this, (1) Because they had been illegally imprisoned, and the injustice of the magistrates should be acknowledged. (2) Because the Roman laws had been violated, and the majesty of the Roman people insulted, and honour should be done to the laws. (3) Because injustice had been done to Paul and Silas, and they had a right to demand just treatment and protection. (4) Because such a public act on the part of the magistrates would strengthen the young converts, and show them that the apostles were not guilty of a violation of the laws. (5) Because it would tend to the honour and to the furtherance of religion. It would be a public acknowledgement of their innocence, and would go far toward lending to them the sanction of the laws as religious teachers. We may learn from this also, (1) That though Christianity requires meekness in the reception of injuries, yet that there are occasions on which Christians may insist on their rights according to the laws. Comp. Jn. xviii. 23. (2) That this is to be done particularly where the honour of religion is concerned, and where by it the gospel will be promoted. A Christian may bear much as a man in a private capacity, and may submit, without any effort to seek reparation; but where the honour of the gospel is concerned; where submission, without any effort to obtain justice, might be followed by disgrace to the cause of religion, a higher obligation may require him to seek a vindication of his character, and to claim the protection of the laws. His name, and character, and influence belong to the church. The laws are designed as a protection to an injured name, or of violated property and rights, and of an endangered life. And when that protection can be had only by an appeal to the laws, such an appeal, as in the case of Paul and Silas, is neither vindictive nor improper. My private interests I may sacrifice, if I choose; my public name, and character, and principles belong to the church and the world, and the laws, if necessary, may be called in for their protection.

38. They feared when they heard, &c. They were apprehensive of punishment for having imprisoned them in violation of the laws of the empire. To punish unjustly a Roman citizen was deemed an offence to the majesty of the Roman people, and was severely punished by the laws. Dionysius Hal. (Ant. Rom., ii.) says, "The punishment appointed for those who abrogated or transgressed the Valerian law was death, and the confiscation of his property." The emperor Claudius deprived the inhabitants of Rhodes of freedom for having cruci-

39. And they came and besought them. A most humiliating act for Roman magistrates, but in this case it was unavoidable. The apostles had them completely in their power, and could easily effect their disgrace and ruin. Probably they besought them by declaring them innocent; by affirming that they were ignorant that they were Roman citizens, &c. ¶ And desired them to depart, &c. Probably, (1) To save their own character, and be secure from their taking any further steps to convict the magistrates of violating the laws; and (2) To evade any further popular tumult on their account. This advice Paul and Silas saw fit to comply with, after they had seen and comforted the brethren, ver. 40. They had accomplished their main purpose in going to Philippi; they had preached the gospel; they had laid the foundation of a flourishing church (comp. the Epistle to the Philippians); and they were now prepared to prosecute the purpose of their agency into surrounding regions. Thus the opposition of the people and the magistrates at Philippi was the occasion of the founding of the church there, and thus their unkind and inhospitable request that they should leave them was the means of the extension of the gospel into adjacent regions.

40. They comforted them. They exhorted them, and encouraged them to persevere, notwithstanding the opposition and persecution which they might meet with. ¶ And departed. That is, Paul and Silas departed. It would appear probable that Luke and Timothy remained in Philippi, or, at least, did not attend Paul and Silas. For Luke, who, in ch. xvi. 10, uses the first person, and speaks of himself as with Paul and Silas, speaks of them now in the third person, implying that he was not with them until Paul had arrived at Troas, where Luke joined him from Philippi, ch. xx. 5, 6. In ch. xvii. 14, also, Timothy is mentioned as being at Berea in company with Silas, from which it of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

CHAPTER XVII.

NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, appears that he did not accompany Paul and Silas to Thessalonica. Comp. ch. xvii. 1, 4. Paul and Silas, when they departed from Philippi, went to Thessalonica, ch. xvii. 1.

CHAPTER XVII.

1. Amphipolis. This was the capital of the eastern province of Macedonia. It was originally a colony of the Athenians, but under the Romans it was made the capital of that part of Macedonia. It was near to Thrace, and was situated not far from the mouth of the river Strymon, which flowed around the city, and thus occasioned its name, around the city. The distances laid down in the Itineraries in regard to these places are as follows: Philippi to Amphipolis, thirty-three miles; Amphipolis to Apollonia, thirty miles; Apollonia to Thessalonica, thirty-seven miles. "These distances are evidently such as might have been traversed each in one day; and since nothing is said of any delay on the road, but everything to imply that the journey was rapid, we conclude (unless, indeed, their recent sufferings made rapid travelling impossible) that Paul and Silas rested one night at each of the intermediate places, and thus our notice of their journey is divided into three parts. The position of Amphipolis is one of the most important in Greece. It stands in a pass which traverses the mountains bordering the Strymonic Gulf, and it commands the only easy communication from the coast of that gulf into the great Macedonian plains, which extend, for sixty miles, from beyond Meleniko to Philippi. The ancient name of the place was 'Nine Ways,' from the great number of Thracian and Macedonian roads which met at this point. The Athenians saw the importance of the position, and established a colony there, which they called Amphipolis, because the river surrounded it." ¶ And Apollonia. This city was situated between Amphipolis and Thessalonica, and was formerly much nica, where was a synagogue of the Jews:

2 And Paul, "as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening and alleging <sup>a</sup>that celebrated for its trade. ¶ They came to Thessalonica. This was a seaport of the second part of Macedonia. It is situated at the head of the Bay Thermaicus. It was made the capital of the second division of Macedonia by Æmilius Paulus, when he divided the country into four districts. It was formerly called Therma, but afterward received the name of Thessalonica, either from Cassander, in honour of his wife Thessalonica, the daughter of Philip, or in honour of a victory which Philip obtained over the armies of Thessaly. It was inhabited by Greeks, Romans, and Jews. It is now called Saloni<sup>k</sup>i, and, from its situation, must always be a place of commercial importance. It is situated on the inner bend of the Thermaic Gulf, half-way between the Adriatic and the Hellespont, on the sea margin of a vast plain, watered by several rivers, and was evidently designed for a commercial emporium. It has a population at present of sixty or seventy thousand, about half of whom are Jews. They are said to have thirty-six synagogues, "none of them remarkable for their neatness or elegance of style." In this place a church was collected, to which Paul afterward addressed the two epistles to the Thessalonians. ¶ Where was a synagogue. Greek, where was THE synagogue (ἡ συναγωγὴ) of the Jews. It has been remarked by Grotius and Kuinoel that the article used here is emphatic, and denotes that there was probably no synagogue at Amphipolis and Apollonia. This was the reason why they passed through those places without making any delay.

2. His manner was. His custom was to attend on the worship of the synagogue, and to preach the gospel to his countrymen first, ch. ix. 20; xiii. 5, 14. ¶ Reasoned with them. Discussed to them, or attempted to prove that Jesus was the Messiah. The word used here (διείπεστο) means often no more than to make a public address or discourse. See Notes on ch. xxiv. 25. ¶ Out of the scriptures. By many critics this is connected with the following verse, "Opening and alleging from the scriptures that Christ must needs have suffered," &c. The sense is not varied materially by the change.

3. Opening—διενύσας. See Lu. xxiv. 32. The word means to explain or to unfold. It is usually applied to that which is shut, as the eye, &c. Then it means to explain that which is concealed or obscure. It means here that he explained the Scriptures in their true sense. ¶ And alleging—παραγγίζουσος. Laying down the proposition; that is, maintaining that it must be so. ¶ That Christ must needs have suffered. That there was a fitness and necessity in his dying, as Jesus of Nazareth had done. The sense of this will be better seen by retaining the word Messiah. "That there was a fitness or necessity that the Messiah expected by the Jews, and predicted in their Scriptures, should suffer." This point the Jews were unwilling to admit; but it was essential to his argument in proving that Jesus was the Messiah to show that it was foretold that he should die for the sins of men. On the necessity of this, see Notes on Lu. xxiv. 26, 27. ¶ Have suffered. That he should die. ¶ And that this Jesus. And that this Jesus of Nazareth, who has thus suffered and risen, whom, said he, I preach to you, is the Messiah.

The arguments by which Paul probably proved that Jesus was the Messiah were, (1) That he corresponded with the prophecies respecting him in the following particulars. (a) He was born at Bethlehem, Mi. v. 2. (b) He was of the tribe of Judah, Ge. xl ix. 10. (c) He was descended from Jesse, and of the royal line of David, Is. xi. 1, 10. (d) He came at the time predicted, Da. ix. 24-27. (e) His appearance, character, work, &c., corresponded with the predictions, Is. lxxi. (2) His miracles proved that he was the Messiah, for he professed to be, and God would not work a miracle to confirm the claims of an impostor. (3) For the same reason, his resurrection from the dead proved that he was the Messiah.

Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a com-

4. And consorted. Literally, had their lot with Paul and Silas; that is, they united themselves to them, and became their disciples. The word is commonly applied to those who are partakers of an inheritance. ¶ And of the devout Greeks. Religious Greeks; or, of those who worshipped God. Those are denoted who had renounced the worship of idols, and who attended on the worship of the synagogue, but who were not fully admitted to the privileges of Jewish proselytes. They were called, by the Jews, proselytes of the gate. ¶ And of the chief women. See Notes on ch. xiii. 50.

5. Moved with envy. That they made so many converts, and met with such success. ¶ Certain lewd fellows of the baser sort. This is an unhappy translation. The word lewd is not in the original. The Greek is, "And having taken certain wicked men of those who were about the forum," or market-place. The forum, or market-place, was the place where the idle assembled, and where those were gathered together that wished to be employed, Mat. xx. 3. Many of these would be of abandoned character—the idle, the dissipated, and the worthless, and, therefore, just the materials for a mob. It does not appear that they felt any particular interest in the subject; but they were, like other mobs, easily excited, and urged on to any acts of violence. The pretence on which the mob was excited was, that they had everywhere produced disturbance, and that they violated the laws of the Roman emperor, ver. 6, 7. It may be observed, however, that a mob usually regards very little the cause in which they are engaged. They may be roused either for or against religion, and become as full of zeal for the insulted honour of religion as against it. The profane, the worthless, and the abandoned thus often become violently pany, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also;

7 Whom Jason hath received;

engaged for the honour of religion, and full of indignation and tumult against those who are accused of violating public peace and order. ¶ The house of Jason. Where Paul and Silas were, ver. 7. Jason appears to have been a relative of Paul, and for this reason it was probable that he lodged with him, Ro. xvi. 21.

6. These that have turned the world upside down. That have excited commotion and disturbance in other places. The charge has been often brought against the gospel that it has been the occasion of confusion and disorder.

7. Whom Jason hath received. Has received into his house, and entertained kindly. ¶ These all do contrary to the decrees of Caesar. The charge against them was that of sedition and rebellion against the Roman emperor. Grotius on this verse remarks that the Roman people, and after them the emperors, would not permit the name of king to be mentioned in any of the vanquished provinces except by their permission. ¶ Saying that there is another king. This was probably a charge of mere malignity. They probably understood that when the apostles spoke of Jesus as a king, they did not do it as of a temporal prince. But it was easy to pervert their words, and to give plausibility to the accusation. The same thing had occurred in regard to the Lord Jesus himself, Lu. xxiii. 2.

8. And they troubled the people. They excited the people to commotion and alarm. The rulers feared the tumult that was excited, and the people feared the Romans, when they heard the charge that there were rebels against the government in their city. It does not appear that there was a disposition in the rulers or the people to persecute the apostles; but they were excited and and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus.

8 And they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the others, they let them go.

10 And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas

alarmed by the representations of the Jews, and by the mob that they had collected.

9. And when they had taken security of Jason. This is an expression taken from courts, and means that Jason and the other gave satisfaction to the magistrates for the good conduct of Paul and Silas, or became responsible for it. Whether it was by depositing a sum of money, and by thus giving bail, is not quite clear. The sense is, that they did it in accordance with the Roman usages, and gave sufficient security for the good conduct of Paul and Silas. Heuman supposes that the pledge given was that they should leave the city. Michaelis thinks that they gave a pledge that they would no more harbour them; but if they returned again to them, they would deliver them to the magistrates. ¶ And of the other. The other brethren (ver. 6) who had been drawn to the rulers of the city.

10. And the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas. Comp. ch. ix. 25. They did this for their safety. Yet this was not done until the gospel had taken deep root in Thessalonica. Having preached there, and laid the foundation of a church; having thus accomplished the purpose for which they went there, they prepared to leave the city.

¶ Unto Berea. This was a city of Macedonia, near Mount Cithanes. "Berea is on the eastern slope of the Olympian range, and commands an extensive view of the plain which is watered by the Haliacmon and Axius. It has many natural advantages, and is now considered one of the most agreeable towns in Rumili. Plane-trees spread a grateful shade over its gardens. Streams of water are in every street. Its ancient name is said to have been derived from the abundance of its waters; and the name still survives in the modern Verria, or Kara-Verria. It is situated on the left of the Haliaecon, about 5 miles from the point where that river breaks through an immense rocky ravine from the mountains to the plain. A few insignificant ruins of the Greek and Roman periods may yet be noticed. It still boasts of eighteen or twenty thousand inhabitants, and is placed in the second rank of the cities of European Turkey."

—Life and Epistles of St. Paul.

11. These were more noble—τιμωτέροι. This literally means more noble by birth; descended from more illustrious ancestors. But here the word is used to denote a quality of mind and heart. They were more generous, liberal, and noble in their feelings; more disposed to inquire candidly into the truth of the doctrines advanced by Paul and Silas. It is always proof of a noble, liberal, and ingenuous disposition to be willing to examine into the truth of any doctrine presented. The writer refers here particularly to the Jews. ¶ In that. Because. ¶ They received the word, &c. They listened attentively and respectfully to the gospel. They did not reject and spurn it as unworthy of examination. This is the first particular in which they were more noble than those in Thessalonica. ¶ And searched the scriptures. That is, the Old Testament. See Notes on Jn. v. 39. The apostles always affirmed that the doctrines which they maintained respecting the Messiah were in accordance with the Jewish scriptures. The Bereans made diligent and earnest inquiry in respect to this, and were willing to ascertain the truth. ¶ Daily. Not only on the Sabbath, and in the synagogue, but they made it a daily employment. It is evident from this that they had the Scriptures; and this is one proof that Jewish families would, if possible, obtain the oracles of God. ¶ Whether these things were so. Whether the doctrines stated by Paul and Silas were in accordance with the Scriptures. The Old Testament they received as the standard of truth, and whatever could be shown to be in accordance with that, they received. On received the word <sup>1</sup>with all readiness of mind, and <sup>2</sup>searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

12 Therefore many of them be-

this verse we may remark, (1) That it is proof of true nobleness and liberality of mind to be willing to examine the proofs of the truth of religion. What the friends of Christianity have had most cause to lament and regret is, that so many are unwilling to examine its claims; that they spurn it as unworthy of serious thought, and condemn it without hearing. (2) The Scriptures should be examined daily. If we wish to arrive at the truth, they should be the object of constant study. That man has very little reason to expect that he will grow in knowledge and grace who does not peruse, with candour and with prayer, a portion of the Bible every day. (3) The constant searching of the Scriptures is the best way to keep the mind from error. He who does not do it daily may expect to "be carried about with every wind of doctrine," and to have no settled opinions. (4) The preaching of ministers should be examined by the Scriptures. Their doctrines are of no value unless they accord with the Bible. Every preacher should expect his doctrines to be examined in this way, and to be rejected if they are not in accordance with the Word of God. The church, in proportion to its increase in purity and knowledge, will feel this more and more; and it is an indication of advance in piety when men are increasingly disposed to examine everything by the Bible. How immensely important, then, is it that the young should be trained up to diligent habits of searching the Word of God. And how momentous is the obligation of parents, and of Sabbath-school teachers, to inculcate just views of the interpretation of the Bible, and to form the habits of the rising generation, so that they shall be disposed and enabled to examine every doctrine by the sacred oracles. The purity of the church depends on the extension of the spirit of the noble-minded Bereans, and that spirit is to be extended in a very considerable degree by the instrumentality of Sabbath-schools.

'lieved; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few.

13 But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and "stirred up the people.

12. Therefore many of them believed. As the result of their examination. This result will commonly follow when people search the Scriptures. Much is gained when men can be induced to examine the Bible. We may commonly take it for granted that such an examination will result in their conviction of the truth. The most prominent and usual cause of infidelity is found in the fact that men will not investigate the Scriptures. Many infidels have confessed that they had never carefully read the New Testament. Thomas Paine confessed that he wrote the first part of the Age of Reason without having a Bible at hand, and without its being possible to procure one where he then was (in Paris). "I had," says he, "neither Bible nor Testament to refer to, though I was writing against both; nor could I procure any" (Age of Reason, p. 65, ed. 1831; also p. 33). None, it may safely be affirmed, have ever read the Scriptures with candour, and with the true spirit of prayer, who have not been convinced of the truth of Christianity, and been brought to submit their souls to its influence and its consolations. The great thing which Christians desire their fellow-men to do is candidly to search the Bible, and when this is done they confidently expect that they will be truly converted to God. ¶ Of honourable women. See Notes on ch. xiii. 50.

13. Stirred up the people. The word used here (σαλιέων) denotes properly to agitate or excite, as the waves of the sea are agitated by the wind. It is with great beauty used to denote the agitation and excitement of a popular tumult, from its resemblance to the troubled waves of the ocean. The figure is often employed by the classic writers, and also occurs in the Scriptures. See Ps. lxv. 7; Is. xvii. 12, 13; Je. xlvi. 7, 8.

thing had been done in Thessalonica, ver. 10. The tumult was great; and there was no doubt, such was the hostility of the Jews, that the life of Paul would be endangered, and they therefore resolved to secure his safety. ¶ As it were. Rather, "even to the sea," for that is its signification. It does not imply that there was any feint or sleight in the case, as if they intended to deceive their pursuers. They took him to the sea-coast, not far from Berea, and from that place he probably went by sea to Athens.

15. Unto Athens. This was the first visit of Paul to this celebrated city; and perhaps the first visit of a Christian minister. His success in this city, for some cause, was not great, but his preaching was attended with the conversion of some individuals. See ver. 34. Athens was the most celebrated city of Greece, and was distinguished for the military talents, the learning, the eloquence, and the politeness of its inhabitants. It was founded by Cecrops and an Egyptian colony about 1556 years before the Christian era. It was called Athens in honour of Minerva, who was chiefly worshipped there, and to whom the city was dedicated. The city, at first, was built on a rock in the midst of a spacious plain; but in process of time the whole plain was covered with buildings, which were called the lower city. No city of Greece, or of the ancient world, was so much distinguished for philosophy, learning, and the arts. The most celebrated warriors, poets, statesmen, and philosophers were either born or flourished there. The most celebrated models of architecture and statuary were there; and for ages it held its pre-eminence in civilization, arts, and arms. The city still exists, though it has been often subject to the calamities of war, to a change of masters, and to the mouldering hand of time. It was twice burnt by the Persians; destroyed by Philip II. of Macedon; again by Sylla; was plundered by Tiberius; desolated by the Goths in the reign of Claudius; and the whole territory ravaged and ruined by Alaric. From the reign of Justinian to the thirteenth century the city remained in obscurity, though it continued to be a town at the head of a small state. It was seized by Omar, general of Mohammed the Great, in 1455; was sacked by the Venetians in 1464; and was taken by the Turks again in 1688. In 1812 the population was 12,000; but it has since been desolated by the sanguinary contests between the Turks and the Greeks, and left almost a mass of ruins. It is now free; and efforts are making by Christians to restore it to its former elevation in learning and importance, and to impart to it the blessings of the Christian religion. In the revolutions of ages it has been ordered that men should bear the torch of learning to Athens from a land unknown to its ancient philosophers, and convey the blessings of civilization to them by that gospel which in the time of Paul they rejected and despised. ¶ And receiving a commandment. They who accompanied Paul received his commands to Silas and Timothy. ¶ With all speed. As soon as possible. Perhaps Paul expected much labour and success in Athens, and was therefore desirous of securing their aid with him in his work.

16. Now while Paul waited. How long he was there is not intimated; but doubtless some time would elapse before they could arrive. In the meantime Paul had ample opportunity to observe the state of the city. ¶ His spirit was stirred within him. His mind was greatly excited. The word used here (ταρσίνην) denotes any excitement, agitation, or paroxysm of mind, 1 Co. xiii. 5. It here means that the mind of Paul was greatly concerned, or agitated, doubtless with pity and distress at their folly and danger. ¶ The city wholly given to idolatry. Greek, κατιδωλος. It is well translated in the margin, “or full of idols.” The word is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. That this was the condition of the city is abundantly testified by profane writers. Thus Pausanias (in Attic. i. 24) says, “The Athenians greatly surpassed others in their zeal for religion.” Lucian (t. i. Prometh. p. 180) says of the city of Athens, “On every side there are altars, victims, temples, and festivals.” Livy (45, 27) says that Athens “was full of the images of gods and men, adorned with every variety of material, and with all the skill of art.” And Petronius (Sat. xvii.) says humorously of the city, that “it was easier to find a god than a man there.” See Kuinoel. In this verse we may see how a splendid idolatrous city will strike a pious mind. Athens then had more that was splendid in architecture, more that was brilliant in science, and more that was beautiful in the arts, than any other city of the world; perhaps more than all the rest of the world united. Yet there is no account that the mind of Paul was filled with admiration; there is no record that he spent his time in examining the works of art; there is no evidence that he forgot his high purpose in an idle and useless contemplation of temples and statuary. His was a Christian mind; and he contemplated all this with a Christian heart. That heart was deeply affected in view of the amazing guilt of a people who were ignorant of the true God, who had filled their city with idols reared to the honour of imaginary divinities, and who, in the midst of all this splendour and luxury, were going down to destruction. So should every pious man feel who treads the streets of a splendid and guilty city. The Christian will not despise the productions of art, but he will feel, deeply feel, for the unhappy condition of those who, amidst wealth, and splendour, and outward adorning, are withholding their affections from the living God, and who are going unredeemed to eternal woe. Happy would it be if every Christian traveller who visits cities of wealth and splendour would, like Paul, be affected in view of their crimes and dangers; and happy if, like him, men could cease their unbounded admiration of magnificence and splendour in temples, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

palaces, and statuary, to regard the condition of mind, not perishable like marble—of the soul, more magnificent even in its ruins than all the works of Phidias or Praxiteles.

17. Therefore disputed he. Or reasoned. He engaged in an argument with them. ¶ With the devout persons. Those worshipping God after the manner of the Jews. They were Jewish proselytes, who had renounced idolatry, but who had not been fully admitted to the privileges of the Jews. See Notes on ch. x. 2. ¶ And in the market. In the forum. It was not only the place where provisions were sold, but was also a place of great public concourse. In this place the philosophers were not unfrequently found engaged in public discussion.

18. Then certain philosophers. Athens was distinguished, among all the cities of Greece and the world, for the cultivation of a subtle and refined philosophy. This was their boast, and the object of their constant search and study, 1 Co. i. 22. ¶ Of the Epicureans. This sect of philosophers was so named from Epicurus, who lived about 300 years before the Christian era. They denied that the world was created by God, and that the gods exercised any care or providence over human affairs, and also the immortality of the soul. Against these positions of the sect Paul directed his main argument in proving that the world was created and governed by God. One of the distinguishing doctrines of Epicurus was that pleasure was the summum bonum, or chief good, and that virtue was to be practised only as it contributed to pleasure. By pleasure, however, Epicurus did not mean sensual and grovelling appetites and degraded vices, but rational pleasure, properly regulated and governed. See Good's Book of Nature. But whatever his views were, it is certain that his followers had embraced the doctrine that the pleasures of sense were to be practised without restraint. Both in principle and practice, therefore, they devoted themselves to a life of gaiety and sensuality, and sought happiness only in indolence, effeminity, and voluptuousness. Confident the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him. And some said, What will this <sup>3</sup>babblersay? Other some, He seemeth to be a setter in the belief that the world was not under the administration of a God of justice, they gave themselves up to the indulgence of every passion—the infidels of their time, and the exact example of the gay and fashionable multitudes of all times, that live without God, and that seek pleasure as their chief good. ¶ And of the Stoics. This was a sect of philosophers, so named from the Greek στοά, stoa, a porch or portico, because Zeno, the founder of the sect, held his school and taught in a porch, in the city of Athens. Zeno was born in the island of Cyprus, but the greater part of his life was spent at Athens in teaching philosophy. After having taught publicly forty-eight years, he died at the age of ninety-six, two hundred and sixty-four years before Christ. The doctrines of the sect were, that the universe was created by God; that all things were fixed by Fate; that even God was under the dominion of fatal necessity; that the Fates were to be submitted to; that the passions and affections were to be suppressed and restrained; that happiness consisted in the insensibility of the soul to pain; and that a man should gain an absolute mastery over all the passions and affections of his nature. They were stern in their views of virtue, and, like the Pharisees, prided themselves on their own righteousness. They supposed that matter was eternal, and that God was either the animating principle or soul of the world, or that all things were a part of God. They fluctuated much in their views of a future state; some of them holding that the soul would exist only until the destruction of the universe, and others that it would finally be absorbed into the divine essence and become a part of God. It will be readily seen, therefore, with what pertinacity Paul discoursed to them. The leading doctrines of both sects were met by him. ¶ Encountered him. Contented with him; opposed themselves to him. ¶ And some said. This was said in scorn and contempt. He had excited attention; but they scorned such doctrines as they supposed would be delivered by an unknown foreigner from forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection.

Judea. ¶ What will this babbler say? Margin, base fellow. Greek, στρεψολόγος. The word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It properly means one who collects seeds, and was applied by the Greeks to the poor persons who collected the scattered grain in the fields after harvest, or to gleaners; and also to the poor who obtained a precarious subsistence around the markets and in the streets. It was also applied to birds that picked up the scattered seeds of grain in the field or in the markets. The word came hence to have a twofold signification: (1) It denoted the poor, the needy, and the vile—the refuse and offscouring of society; and (2) From the birds which were thus employed, and which were troublesome by their continual unmusical sounds, it came to denote those who were talkative, garrulous, and opinionated—those who collected the opinions of others, or scraps of knowledge, and retailed them fluently, without order or method. It was a word, therefore, expressive of their contempt for an unknown foreigner who should pretend to instruct the learned men and philosophers of Greece. Doddridge renders it “retailer of scraps.” Syriac, “collector of words.” ¶ Others. ¶ He seemeth to be a setter forth. He announces or declares the existence of strange gods. The reason why they supposed this was, that he made the capital points of his preaching to be Jesus and the resurrection, which they mistook for the names of divinities. ¶ Of strange gods. Of foreign gods, or demons. They worshipped many gods themselves, and as they believed that every country had its own peculiar divinities, they supposed that Paul had come to announce the existence of some such foreign, and to them unknown gods. The word translated gods (δαιμονίων) denotes properly the genii, or spirits who were superior to men, but inferior to the gods. It is, however, often employed to denote the gods themselves, and is evidently so used here. The gods among the Greeks were such as were supposed to have that rank by nature. The demons were such as had been exalted to divinity from being heroes and distinguished men. ¶ He preached unto them Jesus. He proclaimed him as the Messiah. The mistake which they made by supposing that Jesus was a foreign divinity was one which was perfectly natural for minds degraded like theirs by idolatry. They had no idea of a pure God; they knew nothing of the doctrine of the Messiah; and they naturally supposed, therefore, that he of whom Paul spoke so much must be a god of some other nation, of a rank similar to their own divinities. ¶ And the resurrection. The resurrection of Jesus, and through him the resurrection of the dead. It is evident, I think, that by the resurrection (τὴν ἀνάστασιν) they understood him to refer to the name of some goddess. Such was the interpretation of Chrysostom. The Greeks had erected altars to Shame, and Famine, and Desire (Paus., i. 17), and it is probable that they supposed “the resurrection,” or the Anastasis, to be the name also of some unknown goddess who presided over the resurrection. Thus they regarded him as a setter forth of two foreign or strange gods, Jesus, and the Anastasis, or resurrection.

19. And brought him unto Areopagus. Margin, or Mars' hill. This was the place or court in which the Areopagites, the celebrated supreme judges of Athens, assembled. It was on a hill almost in the middle of the city; but nothing now remains by which we can determine the form or construction of the tribunal. The hill is almost entirely a mass of stone, and is not easily accessible, its sides being steep and abrupt. On many accounts this was the most celebrated tribunal in the world. Its decisions were distinguished for justice and correctness; nor was there any court in Greece in which so much confidence was placed. This court took cognizance of murders, impieties, and immoralities; they punished vices of all kinds, including idleness; they rewarded the virtuous; they were peculiarly attentive to blasphemies against the gods, and to the performance of the sacred mysteries of religion. It was, therefore, with the greatest propriety that Paul was brought before this tribunal, as being regarded as a setter forth of strange gods, and as being supposed to wish to introduce a new mode of worship. See Potter's Antiquities of Greece, b. i. ch. xix.; and Travels of Anacharsis, vol. i. 136, 185; ii. 292-295. ¶ May we know. We would know. This seems to have been a respectful inquiry; and it does not appear that Paul was brought there for the sake of trial. There are no accusations; no witnesses; none of the forms of trial. They seem to have resorted thither because it was the place where the subject of religion was usually discussed, and because it was a place of confluence for the citizens, and judges, and wise men of Athens, and of foreigners. The design seems to have been, not to try him, but fairly to canvass the claims of his doctrines. See ver. 21. It was just an instance of the inquisitive spirit of the people of Athens, willing to hear before they condemned, and to examine before they approved.

20. Certain strange things. Literally, something pertaining to a foreign country or people. Here it means something unusual or remarkable—something different from what they had been accustomed to hear from their philosophers. ¶ What these things mean. We would understand more clearly what is affirmed respecting Jesus and the resurrection.

21. For all the Athenians. This was their general character. ¶ And strangers which were there. Athens was greatly distinguished for the celebrity of its schools of philosophy. It was at that time at the head of the literary world. Its arts and its learning were celebrated in all lands. It is known, therefore, that it was the favourite resort of men of other nations, who came there to become acquainted with its institutions and to listen to its sages. ¶ Spent their time in nothing else. The learned and subtle Athenians gave themselves much to speculation, and employed themselves in examining the various new systems of philosophy that were proposed. Strangers and foreigners who were there, having much leisure, would also give themselves to the same inquiries. ¶ But either to tell or to hear some new thing. Greek, something never—καινότερον. The latest news; or the latest subject of inquiry proposed. This is well known to have been the character of the people of Athens at all times. "Many of the ancient writers bear witness to the garrulity, and curiosity, and intemperate desire of novelty among the Athenians, by which they inquired respecting all things, even those in which they had no interest, whether of a public or private nature (Kuinioel). Thus Thucyd. (3, 38) says of them, "You excel in suffering yourselves to be deceived with novelty of speech." On which the old scholiast makes this remark, almost in the words of Luke: "He (Thucydides) here blames the Athenians, who care for nothing else but to tell or to hear something new." Thus Aelian (5, 13) says of the Athenians that they are versatile in novelties. Thus Demosthenes represents the Athenians "as inquiring in the place of public resort if there were any NEWS"—η νέατερον. Meursius has shown, also, that there were more than three hundred public places in Athens of public resort, where the principal youth and reputable citizens were accustomed to meet for the purpose of conversation and inquiry.

22. Then Paul. This commences Paul's explanation of the doctrines which he had stated. It is evident that Luke has recorded but a mere summary or outline of the discourse; but it is such as to enable us to see clearly his course of thought, and the manner in which he met the two principal sects of their philosophers. ¶ In the midst of Mars' hill. Greek, Areopagus. This should have been retained in the translation. ¶ Ye men of Athens. This language was perfectly respectful, notwithstanding his heart had been deeply affected by their idolatry. Everything about this discourse is calm, grave, cool, argumentative. Paul understood the character of his auditors, and did not commence his discourse by denouncing them, nor did he suppose that they would be convinced by mere dogmatical assertion. No happier instance can be found of cool, collected argumentation than is furnished in this discourse. ¶ I perceive. He perceived this by his observations of their forms of worship in passing through their city, ver. 23. ¶ In all things. In respect to all events. ¶ Ye are too superstitious—δεινῶς μονομαρτίουσι. This is a most unhappy translation. We use the word superstitious always in a bad sense, to denote being over-scrupulous and rigid in religious observances, particularly in smaller matters, or a zealous devotion to rites and observances which are not commanded. But the word here is designed to convey no such idea. It properly means reverence for the gods. It is used in the classic writers in a good sense, to denote piety toward the gods, or suitable fear and reverence for them; and also in a bad sense, to denote improper fear or excessive dread of their anger; and in this sense it accords with our word superstitious. But it is altogether improbable that Paul would have used it in a bad sense. For, (1) It was not his custom needlessly to blame or offend his auditors. (2) It is not probable that he would commence his discourse in a manner that would only excite prejudice and opposition. (3) In the thing which he specifies (ver. 23) as proof on the subject, he does not introduce it as a matter of blame, but rather as a proof of their devotedness to the cause of religion and of their regard for God. (4) The whole speech is calm, dignified, and argumentative—such as became such a place, such a speaker, and such an audience. The meaning of the expression is, therefore, “I perceive that you are greatly devoted to reverence for religion; that it is a characteristic of the people to honour the gods, to rear altars to them, and to recognize the divine agency in times of trial.” The proof of this was the altar reared to the unknown God; its bearing on his purpose was, that such a state of public sentiment must be favourable to an inquiry into the truth of what he was about to state.

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your <sup>6</sup>devotions, I found an altar
“or, gods that ye worship, Ga.4.8.

23. For as I passed by. Greek, “For I, coming through, and seeing,” &c. ¶ And beheld. Diligently contemplated; attentively considered (ἀνατελών). The worship of an idolatrous people will be an object of intense and painful interest to a Christian. ¶ Your devotions—τὰ σεβάσματα. Our word devotions refers to the act of worship—to prayers, praises, &c. The Greek word here used means properly any sacred thing; any object which is worshipped, or which is connected with the place or rites of worship. Thus it is applied either to the gods themselves, or to the temples, altars, shrines, sacrifices, statues, &c., connected with the worship of the gods. This is its meaning here. It does not denote that Paul saw them engaged in the act of worship, but that he was struck with the numerous temples, altars, statues, &c., which were reared to the gods, and which indicated the state of the people. Syriac, “the temple of your gods.” Vulgate, “your images.” Margin, “gods that ye worship.” ¶ I found an altar. An altar usually denotes a place for sacrifice. Here, however, it does not appear that any sacrifice was offered; but it was probably a monument of stone, reared to commemorate a certain event, and dedicated to the unknown God. ¶ To the unknown God—ἄγνωστη Θεῷ. Where this altar was reared, or on what occasion, has been a subject of much debate with expositors. That there was such an altar in Athens, though it may not have been specifically mentioned by the Greek writers, is rendered probable by the following circumstances. (1) It was customary to rear such altars. Minutius Felix says of the Romans, “They build altars to unknown divinities.” (2) The term unknown God was used in relation to the worship of the Athenians. Lucian, in his Philopatris, uses this form of an oath: “I swear by the unknown God at Athens,” the very expression used by the apostle. And again he says (ch. xxix. 180), “We have found out the unknown God at Athens, and worshipped him with our hands stretched up to heaven,” &c. (3) There were altars at Athens inscribed to the unknown gods. Philostratus says (in Vita Apol., vi. 3), “And this at Athens, where with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

there are even altars to the unknown gods." Thus Pausanias (in Attic., ch. i.) says, that "at Athens there are altars of gods which are called the UNKNOWN ones." Jerome, in his commentary (Tit. i. 12), says that the whole inscription was, "To the gods of Asia, Europe, and Africa; to the unknown and strange gods." (4) There was a remarkable altar reared in Athens in a time of pestilence, in honour of the unknown god which had granted them deliverance. Diogenes Laertius says that Epimenides restrained the pestilence in the following manner: "Taking white and black sheep, he led them to the Areopagus, and there permitted them to go where they would, commanding those who followed them to sacrifice (τῷ ἀγνοήσκοντι θεῷ) to the god to whom these things pertained [or who had the power of averting the plague, whoever he might be, without adding the name], and thus to allay the pestilence. From which it has arisen that at this day, through the villages of the Athenians, altars are found without any name" (Diog. Laert., b. i. § 10). This took place about 600 years before Christ, and it is not improbable that one or more of those altars remained until the time of Paul. It should be added that the natural inscription on those altars would be, "To the unknown God." None of the gods to whom they usually sacrificed could deliver them from the pestilence. They therefore reared them to some unknown Being who had the power to free them from the plague. ¶ Whom therefore. The true God, who had really delivered them from the plague. ¶ Ye ignorantly worship. Or worship without knowing his name. You have expressed your homage for him by rearing to him an altar. ¶ His declare I unto you. I make known to you his name, attributes, &c. There is remarkable tact in Paul's seizing on this circumstance; and yet it was perfectly fair and honest. God only could deliver in the time of the pestilence. This altar had, therefore, been really reared to him, though his name was unknown. The same Being who had interposed at and all things therein, seeing that he is "Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; that time, and whose interposition was recorded by the building of this altar, was He who had made the heavens; who ruled over all; and whom Paul was now about to make known to them. There is another feature of skill in the allusion to this altar. In other circumstances it might seem to be presumptuous for an unknown Jew to attempt to instruct the sages of Athens. But here they had confessed and proclaimed their ignorance. By rearing this altar they acknowledged their need of instruction. The way was, therefore, fairly open for Paul to address even these philosophers, and to discourse to them on a point on which they acknowledged their ignorance.

24. God that made the world. The main object of this discourse of Paul is to convince them of the folly of idolatry (ver. 29), and thus to lead them to repentance. For this purpose he commences with a statement of the true doctrine respecting God as the Creator of all things. We may observe here, (1) That he speaks here of God as the Creator of the world, thus opposing indirectly their opinions that there were many gods. (2) He speaks of him as the Creator of the world, and thus opposes the opinion that matter was eternal; that all things were controlled by Fate; and that God could be confined to temples. The Epicureans held that matter was eternal, and that the world was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms. To this opinion Paul opposed the doctrine that all things were made by one God. Comp. ch. xiv. 15. ¶ Seeing that, &c. Greek, "He being Lord of heaven and earth." ¶ Lord of heaven and earth. Proprietor and Ruler of heaven and earth. It is highly absurd, therefore, to suppose that he who is present in heaven and in earth at the same time, and who rules over all, should be confined to a temple of an earthly structure, or dependent on man for anything. ¶ Dwelleth not, &c. See Notes on ch. vii. 48.

shipped (σηρινεῖν) denotes to serve; to wait upon; and then to render religious service or homage. There is reference here, undoubtedly, to a notion prevalent among the heathen, that the gods were fed or nourished by the offerings made to them. The idea is prevalent among the Hindoos that the sacrifices which are made, and which are offered in the temples, are consumed by the gods themselves. Perhaps, also, Paul had reference to the fact that so many persons were employed in their temples in serving them with their hands; that is, in preparing sacrifices and feasts in their honour. Paul affirms that the great Creator of all things cannot be thus dependent on his creatures for happiness, and consequently, that that mode of worship must be highly absurd. The same idea occurs in Ps. 1. 10-12:

For every beast of the forest is mine;
And the cattle upon a thousand hills.
I know all the fowls of the mountain;
And the wild beasts of the field are mine.
If I were hungry, I would not tell thee;
For the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

¶ Seeing he giveth. Greek, he having given to all, &c. ¶ Life. He is the source of life, and therefore he cannot be dependent on that life which he has himself imparted. ¶ And breath. The power of breathing, by which life is sustained. He not only originally gave life, but he gives it at each moment; he gives the power of drawing each breath by which life is supported. It is possible that the phrase "life and breath" may be the figure hendyades, by which one thing is expressed by two words. It is highly probable that Paul here had reference to Ge. ii. 7: "And the Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." The same idea occurs in Job xii. 10:

In whose hand is the life (margin) of every living thing;
And the breath of all mankind.

¶ And all things. All things necessary to sustain life. We may see here how dependent man is on God. There can be no more absolute dependence than that for every breath. How easy it would be for God to suspend our breathing! How incessant the care, how unceasing the providence, by which, whether we sleep or wake—whether we remember or forget him, he heaves our chest, fills our lungs, restores the vitality of our blood, and infuses vigour into our frame! Comp. Notes on Ro. xi. 36.

26. And hath made of one blood. All the families of men are descended from one origin or stock. However different their complexion, features, or language, yet they are derived from a common parent. The word blood is often used to denote race, stock, kindred. This passage affirms that all the human family are descended from the same ancestor; and that, consequently, all the variety of complexion, &c., is to be traced to some other cause than that they were originally different races created. See Ge. i.; comp. Mal. ii. 10. The design of the apostle in this affirmation was probably to convince the Greeks that he regarded them all as brethren; that, although he was a Jew, yet he was not enslaved to any narrow notions or prejudices in reference to other men. It follows from the truth here stated that no one nation, and no individual, can claim any pre-eminence over others in virtue of birth or blood. All are in this respect equal; and the whole human family, however they may differ in complexion, customs, and laws, are to be regarded and treated as brethren. It follows, also, that no one part of the race has a right to enslave or oppress any other part, on account of difference of complexion. No man has a right because

Not coloured like his own; and having power
To enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
Doom and devote him as his lawful prey.

¶ For to dwell, &c. To cultivate and till the earth. This was the original command (Ge. i. 28); and God, by his providence, has so ordered it that the descendants of one family have found their way to all lands, and have become adapted to the climate where he has placed them. ¶ And hath determined. Greek, ἀπέστασις. Having fixed, or marked out a boundary. See Notes on Ro. i. 4. The word is usually applied to a field. It means here that God marked out, or designated in his purpose, their future abodes. ¶ The determined "the times before appointed, and "the bounds of their habitation;

27 That they should seek the times before appointed. This evidently refers to the dispersion and migration of nations. And it means that God had, in his plan, fixed the times when each country should be settled, and the rise, the prosperity, and the fall of each nation. The different continents and islands have not, therefore, been settled by chance, but by a wise rule, and in accordance with God's arrangement and design. ¶ And the bounds of their habitation. Their limits and boundaries as a people. By customs, laws, inclinations, and habits he has fixed the boundaries of their habitations, and disposed them to dwell there. We may learn, (1) That the revolutions and changes of nations are under the direction of infinite wisdom; (2) That men should not be restless and dissatisfied with the place where God has located them; (3) That God has given sufficient limits to all, so that it is not needful to invade others; and, (4) That wars of conquest are evil. God has given to men their places of abode, and we have no right to disturb those abodes, or to attempt to displace them in a violent manner. This strain of remark by the apostle was also opposed to all the notions of the Epicurean philosophers, and yet so obviously true and just that they could not gainsay or resist it.

27. That they should seek the Lord. Greek, to seek the Lord. The design of thus placing them on the earth—of giving them their habitation among his works—was, that they should contemplate his wisdom in his works, and thus come to a knowledge of his existence and character. All nations, though living in different regions and climates, have thus the opportunity of becoming acquainted with God, Ro. i. 19, 20. The fact that the nations did not thus learn the character of the true God shows their great stupidity and wickedness. The design of Paul in this was doubtless to reprove the idolatry of the Athenians. The argument is this: "God has given to each nation its proper opportunity to learn his character. Idolatry, therefore, is folly and wickedness, since it is possible to find out the existence of the one

Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us:

28 For <sup>g</sup> in him we live, and

God from his works." ¶ If haply — οὐ ἀρέτην. If perhaps—implying that it was possible to find God, though it might be attended with some difficulty. God has placed us here that we may make the trial, and has made it possible thus to find him. ¶ They might feel after him. The word used here (πλαστίουσαν) means properly to touch, to handle (Lu. xxiv. 39; He. xii. 18), and then to ascertain the qualities of an object by the sense of touch. And as the sense of touch is regarded as a certain way of ascertaining the existence and qualities of an object, the word means to search diligently, that we may know distinctly and certainly. The word has this sense here. It means to search diligently and accurately for God, to learn his existence and perfections. The Syriac renders it, "That they may seek for God, and find him from his creatures." ¶ And find him. Find the proofs of his existence. Become acquainted with his perfections and laws. ¶ Though he be not far, &c. This seems to be stated by the apostle to show that it was possible to find him; and that even those who were without a revelation need not despair of becoming acquainted with his existence and perfections. He is near to us, (1) Because the proofs of his existence and power are round about us everywhere, Ps. xix. 1-6. (2) Because he fills all things in heaven and earth by his essential presence, Ps. cxxxix. 7-10; Je. xxiii. 23, 24; Am. ix. 2-4; 1 Ki. viii. 27. We should learn then, (1) To be afraid of sin. God is present with us, and sees all. (2) He can protect the righteous. He is ever with them. (3) He can detect and punish the wicked. He sees all their plans and thoughts, and records all their doings. (4) We should seek him continually. It is the design for which he has made us; and he has given us abundant opportunities to learn his existence and perfections.

28. For in him we live. The expression "in him" evidently means by him; by his originally forming us, and continually sustaining us. No words can better express our constant dependence on God. He is the original fountain of life, and he upholds us each moment.

move, and have our being; 'as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

29 Forasmuch then as we are

A similar sentiment is found in Plautus (5. 4, 14): "O Jupiter, who dost cherish and nourish the race of man; by whom we live, and with whom is the hope of the life of all men" (Kuinol). It does not appear, however, that Paul designed this as a quotation; yet he doubtless intended to state a sentiment with which they were familiar, and with which they would agree. ¶ And move—κινοῦσθαί. Doddridge translates this, "And are moved." It may, however, be in the middle voice, and be correctly rendered as in our version. It means that we derive strength to move from him; an expression denoting constant and absolute dependence. There is no idea of dependence more striking than that we owe to him the ability to perform the slightest motion. ¶ And have our being—καὶ ἔχειν. And are. This denotes that our continued existence is owing to him. That we live at all is his gift; that we have power to move is his gift; and our continued and prolonged existence is his gift also. Thus Paul traces our dependence on him from the lowest pulsation of life to the highest powers of action and of continued existence. It would be impossible to express in more emphatic language our entire dependence on God. ¶ As certain also. As some. The sentiment which he quotes was found substantially in several Greek poets. ¶ Of your own poets. He does not refer particularly here to poets of Athens, but to Greek poets—poets who had written in their language. ¶ For we are also his offspring. This precise expression is found in Aratus (Phænom., v. 5), and in Cleanthus in a hymn to Jupiter. Substantially the same sentiment is found in several other Greek poets. Aratus was a Greek poet of Cilicia, the native place of Paul, and flourished about 277 years before Christ. As Paul was a native of the same country it is highly probable he was acquainted with his writings. Aratus passed much of his time at the court of Antigonus Gonatas, king of Macedonia. His principal work was the Phænomena, which is here quoted, and the offspring of God, 'we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.

30 And the times of this ignor-

was so highly esteemed in Greece that many learned men wrote commentaries on it. The sentiment here quoted was directly at variance with the views of the Epicureans; and it is proof of Paul's address and skill, as well as his acquaintance with his auditors and with the Greek poets, that he was able to adduce a sentiment so directly in point, and that had the concurrent testimony of so many of the Greeks themselves. It is one instance among thousands where an acquaintance with profane learning may be of use to a minister of the gospel.

29. Forasmuch then. Admitting or assuming this to be true. The argument which follows is drawn from the concessions of their own writers. ¶ We ought not to think. It is absurd to suppose. The argument of the apostle is this: "Since we are formed by God; since we are like him, living and intelligent beings; since we are more excellent in our nature than the most precious and ingenious works of art, it is absurd to suppose that the original source of our existence can be like gold, and silver, and stone. Man himself is far more excellent than an image of wood and stone; how much more excellent still must be the great Fountain and Source of all our wisdom and intelligence." See this thought pursued at length in Isa. xl. 18-23. ¶ The Godhead. The divinity (τὸ Θέλον), the divine nature, or essence. The word used here is an adjective employed as a noun, and does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. ¶ Is like unto gold, &c. All these things were used in making images or statues of the gods. It is absurd to think that the source of all life and intelligence resembles a lifeless block of wood or stone. Even degraded heathen, one would think, might see the force of an argument like this.

30. And the times of this ignorance. The long period when men were ignorant of the true God, and when they worshipped stocks and stones. Paul here refers to the times preceding the gospel. ¶ *God winked at—ἰπτιθάνει.* Overlooked; connived at; did not come forth to punish. In ch. xiv. 16 it is expressed thus: "Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways." The sense is, he passed over those times without punishing them, as if he did not see them. For wise purposes he suffered them to walk in ignorance that there might be a fair experiment to show what men would do, and how much necessity there was for a revelation to instruct them in the true knowledge of God. We are not to suppose that God regarded idolatry as innocent, or the crimes and vices to which idolatry led as of no importance; but their ignorance was a mitigating circumstance, and he suffered the nations to live without coming forth in direct judgment against them. Comp. Notes on ch. iii. 17; xiv. 16. ¶ But now commandeth. By the gospel, Lu. xxiv. 47. ¶ All men. Not Jews only, who had been favoured with peculiar privileges, but all nations. The barrier was broken down, and the call to repentance was sent abroad into all the earth. ¶ To repent. To exercise sorrow for their sins, and to forsake them. If God commands all men to repent, we may observe, (1) That it is their duty to do it. There is no higher obligation than to obey the command of God. (2) It can be done. God would not command an impossibility. (3) It is binding on all. The rich, the learned, the great, the gay, are as much bound as the beggar and the slave. (4) It must be done, or the soul lost. It is not safe to neglect a plain law of God. It will not be well to die reflecting that we have all our life despised his commands. (5) We should send the gospel to the heathen. God calls on the nations to repent, and to be saved. It is the duty of Christians to make known to them the command, and to invite them to the blessings of pardon and heaven.

31. Because he hath appointed a day. This is given as a reason why God commands men to repent. They must be judged; and if they are not penitent and pardoned, they must be condemned. See Notes on Ro. ii. 16. ¶ Judge the world. The whole world—Jews and Gentiles. ¶ In righteousness. According to the principles of strict justice. ¶ Whom he hath ordained. Or whom he has constituted or appointed as judge. See Notes on chap. x. 42; Jn. v. 25. ¶ Hath given assurance. Has afforded evidence of this. That evidence consists, (1) In the fact that Jesus declared that he would judge the nations (Jn. v. 25, 26; Mat. xxv.); and (2) God confirmed the truth of his declarations by raising him from the dead, or gave his sanction to what the Lord Jesus had said, for God would not work a miracle in favour of an impostor.

32. Some mocked. Some of the philosophers derided him. The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was believed by none of the Greeks; it seemed incredible; and they regarded it as so absurd as not to admit of an argument. It has not been uncommon for even professed philosophers to mock at the doctrines of religion, and to meet the arguments of Christianity with a sneer. The Epicureans particularly would be likely to deride this, as they denied altogether any future state. It is not improbable that this derision by the Epicureans produced such a disturbance as to break off Paul's discourse, as that of Stephen had been by the clamour of the Jews, ch. vii. 54. ¶ And others said. Probably some of the Stoics. The doctrine of a future state was not denied by them; and the fact, affirmed by Paul, that one had been raised up from the dead, would appear more plausible to them, and it might be a matter worth inquiry to ascertain whether the alleged fact did not furnish a new argument for their views. They therefore proposed to examine this further at some future time. That the inquiry was prosecuted any further does not appear probable, for, (1) No church was organized at Athens. (2) There is no account of any future interview with Paul. (3) He departed almost immediately from them, ch. xviii. 1. Men who defer inquiry on the subject of religion seldom find the favourable period arrive. Those who propose to examine its doctrines at a future time often do it to avoid the inconvenience of becoming Christians now, and as a plausible and easy way of rejecting the gospel altogether, without appearing to be rude, or to give offence.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

34 Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed; among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

33. So Paul departed. Seeing there was little hope of saving them. It was not his custom to labour long in a barren field, or to preach where there was no prospect of success.

34. Clave unto him. Adhered to him firmly; embraced the Christian religion. ¶ Dionysius. Nothing more is certainly known of this man than is here stated. ¶ The Areopagite. Connected with the court of Areopagus, but in what way is not known. It is probable that he was one of the judges. The conversion of one man was worth the labour of Paul, and that conversion might have had an extensive influence on others.

In regard to this account of the visit of Paul to Athens—probably the only one which he made to that splendid capital—we may remark, (1) That he was indefatigable and constant in his great work. (2) Christians, amidst the splendour and gaieties of such cities, should have their hearts deeply affected in view of the moral desolations of the people. (3) They should be willing to do their duty, and to bear witness to the pure and simple gospel in the presence of the great and the noble. (4) They should not consider it their main business to admire splendid temples, statues, and paintings—the works of art; but their main business should be to do good as they may have opportunity. (5) A discourse, even in the midst of such wickedness and idolatry, may be calm and dignified; not an appeal merely to the passions, but to the understanding. Paul reasoned with the philosophers of Athens; he did not denounce them; he endeavoured calmly to convince them, not harshly to censure them. (6) The example of Paul is a good one for all Christians. In all places—cities, towns, or country; amidst all people—philosophers, the rich, the poor; among friends and countrymen, or among strangers and foreigners, the great object should be to do good, to instruct mankind, to seek to elevate the human character, and to promote human happiness by diffusing the pure precepts of the gospel of Christ.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1. After these things. After what occurred at Athens, as recorded in the previous chapter. ¶ Came to Corinth. Corinth was the capital of Achaia, called anciently Ephyra, and was seated on the isthmus which divides the Peloponnesus from Attica. The city itself stood on a little island; it had two ports, Lechæum on the west, and Cenchrea on the east. It was one of the most populous and wealthy cities of Greece, and at the same time one of the most luxurious, effeminate, ostentatious, and dissolute. Lasciviousness here was not only practised and allowed, but was consecrated by the worship of Venus; and no small part of the wealth and splendour of the city arose from the offerings made by licentious passion in the very temples of this goddess. No city of ancient times was more profligate. It was the Paris of antiquity; the seat of splendour, and show, and corruption. Yet even here, notwithstanding all the disadvantages of splendour, gaiety, and dissoluteness, Paul entered on the work of rearing a church; and here he was eminently successful. The two epistles which he afterwards wrote to this church show the extent of his success; and the well-known character and propensities of the people will account for the general drift of the admonitions and arguments in those epistles. Corinth was destroyed by the Romans 146 years before Christ; and during the conflagration several metals in a fused state, running together, produced the composition known as Corinthian brass. It was afterwards restored by Julius Cæsar, who planted in it a Roman colony. It soon regained its ancient splendour, and relapsed into its former dissipation and licentiousness. Paul arrived there A.D. 52 or 53.

2. And found a certain Jew. Aquila is elsewhere mentioned as the friend of Paul, Ro. xvi. 3; 2 Ti. iv. 19; 1 Co. xvi. 19. Though a Jew by birth, yet it is evident that he became a convert to the Christian faith. ¶ Born in Pontus. See Notes on ch. ii. 9. ¶ Lately come from Italy. Though the command of Claudius extended only to Rome, yet it was probably deemed not safe to remain, or it might have been difficult to procure occupation in any part of Italy. ¶ Because that Claudius. Claudius was the Roman emperor. He commenced his reign A.D. 41, and was poisoned A.D. 54. At what time in his reign this command was issued is not certainly known. ¶ Had commanded, &c. This command is not mentioned by Josephus, but it is recorded by Suetonius, a Roman historian (Life of Claudius, ch. 25), who says that "he expelled the Jews from Rome, who were constantly exciting tumults under their leader, Chrestus." Who this Chrestus was is not known. It might have been a foreign Jew, who raised tumults on some occasion of which we have no knowledge, as the Jews in all heathen cities were greatly prone to excitements and insurrections. Or it may be that Suetonius, little acquainted with Jewish affairs, mistook this for the name Christ, and supposed that he was the leader of the Jews. This explanation has much plausibility; for, (1) Suetonius could scarcely be supposed to be intimately acquainted with the affairs of the Jews. (2) There is every reason to believe that, before this, the Christian religion was preached at Rome. (3) It would produce there, as everywhere else, great tumult and contention among the Jews. (4) Claudius, the emperor, might suppose that such

tumults endangered the peace of the city, and resolve to remove the cause at once by the dispersion of the Jews. (5) A Roman historian might easily mistake the true state of the case; and while they were contending about Christ, he might suppose that it was under him, as a leader, that these tumults were excited. All that is material, however, here, is the fact, in which Luke and Suetonius agree, that the Jews were expelled from Rome during his reign.

3. The same craft. Of the same trade or occupation. ¶ And wrought. And worked at that occupation. ¶ Why he did it the historian does not affirm; but it seems pretty evident that it was because he had no other means of maintenance. He also laboured for his own support in Ephesus (Ac. xx. 34) and at Thessalonica, 2 Th. iii. 9, 10. The apostle was not ashamed of honest industry for a livelihood; nor did he deem it any disparagement that a minister of the gospel should labour with his own hands. ¶ For by their occupation. By their trade; that is, they had been brought up to this business. Paul had been designed originally for a lawyer, and had been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel. But it was a regular custom among the Jews to train up their sons to some useful employment, that they might have the means of an honest livelihood. Even though they were instructed in the liberal sciences, yet they deemed a handicraft trade, or some honourable occupation, an indispensable part of education. Thus Maimonides (in the Tract Talm. Tora, ch. i. § 9) says, "the wise generally practise some of the arts, lest they should be dependent on the charity of others." See Grotius. The wisdom of this is obvious; and it is equally plain that a custom of this kind now might preserve the health and lives of many professional men, and save from ignoble dependence or vice, in future years, many who are trained up in the lap of indulgence and wealth. ¶ They were tent-makers — στεγνοτοι. There have been various opinions about the meaning of this word. Many have supposed that it denotes a weaver of tapestry. Luther thus translated it. But it is probable that it denotes, as in our translation, a manufacturer of tents, made of skin or cloth. In Eastern countries, where there was much travel, where there were no inns, and where many were shepherds, such a business might be useful, and a profitable source of living. It was an honourable occupation, and Paul was not ashamed to be employed in it.

4. And he reasoned, &c. See Notes on ch. xvii. 2.

5. And when Silas and Timotheus, &c. They came to Paul according to the request which he had sent by the brethren who accompanied him from Thessalonica, ch. xvii. 15. ¶ Paul was pressed. Was urged; was borne away by an unusual impulse. It was deeply impressed on him as his duty. ¶ In spirit. In his mind; in his feelings. His love to Christ was so great, and his conviction of the truth so strong, that he laboured to make known to them the truth that Jesus was the Messiah. ¶ That Jesus was Christ. That Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah. Comp. ch. xvii. 16. The presence of Silas and Timothy animated him; and the certainty of aid in his work urged him to zeal in making known the Saviour.

6. And when they opposed themselves. To him and his message. ¶ And blasphemed. See Notes on ch. xiii. 45. ¶ He shook his raiment. As an expressive act of shaking off the guilt of their condemnation. Comp. ch. xiii. 45. He shook his raiment to show that he was resolved henceforward to have nothing to do with them; perhaps, also, to express the fact that God would soon shake them off, or reject them (Dodbridge). ¶ Your blood, &c. The guilt of your destruction is your own. You only are the cause of the destruction that is coming upon you. See Notes on Mat. xxvii. 25. ¶ I am clean. I am not to blame for your destruction. I have done my duty. The gospel had been fairly offered and deliberately rejected; and Paul was not to blame for their ruin, which he saw was coming upon them. ¶ I will go, &c. See ch. xiii. 46.

7. A certain man's house. Probably he had become a convert to the Christian faith. ¶ Joined hard. Was near to the synagogue.

8. And Crispus. He is mentioned in 1 Co. i. 14 as having been one of the few whom Paul baptized with his own hands. The conversion of such a man must have tended greatly to exasperate the other Jews, and to further the progress of the Christian faith among the Corinthians. ¶ With all his house. With all his family, ch. x. 2. ¶ And many of the Corinthians. Many even in this voluptuous and wicked city. Perhaps the power of the gospel was never more signal than in converting sinners in Corinth, and rearing a Christian church in a place so dissolute and abandoned. If it was adapted to such a place as Corinth; if a church, under the power of Christian truth, could be organized there, it is adapted to any city, and there is none so corrupt that the gospel cannot change and purify it.

9. By a vision. Comp. Notes on ch. ix. 10; xvi. 9. ¶ Be not afraid. Perhaps Paul might have been intimidated by the learning, refinement, and splendour of Corinth; perhaps embarrassed in view of his duty of addressing the rich, the afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this city.

polite, and the great. To this he may allude in 1 Co. ii. 3: "And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling." In such circumstances it pleased God to meet him, and disarm his fears. This he did by assuring him of success. The fact that God had much people in that city (ver. 10) was employed to remove his apprehensions. The prospect of success in the ministry, and the certainty of the presence of God, will take away the fear of the rich, the learned, and the great.

10. For I am with thee. I will attend, bless, and protect you. See Notes on Mat. xxviii. 20. ¶ No man shall set on thee. No one who shall rise up against thee will be able to hurt thee. His life was in God's hands, and he would preserve him in order that his people might be collected into the church. ¶ For I have. Greek, there is to me; that is, I possess, or there belongs to me. ¶ Much people. Many who should be regarded as his true friends, and who should be saved. ¶ In this city. In that very city that was so voluptuous, so rich, so effeminate, and where there had been already so decided opposition shown to the gospel. This passage evidently means that God had a design or purpose to save many of that people, for it was given to Paul as an encouragement to him to labour there, evidently meaning that God would grant him success in his work. It cannot mean that the Lord meant to say that the great mass of the people, or that the moral and virtuous part, if there were any such, was then regarded as his people; but that he intended to convert many of those guilty and profligate Corinthians to himself, and to gather a people for his own service there. We may learn from this, (1) That God has a purpose in regard to the salvation of sinners. (2) That that purpose is so fixed in the mind of God that he can say that those in relation to whom it is formed are his. (3) This is the ground of encouragement to the ministers of the gospel. Had God no purpose to save sinners, they could have no hope in their work. (4) This plan may have reference to the most gay, the most guilty, and the most abandoned, and ministers should not be deterred by the amount or the degree of wickedness from attempting to save them. (5) There may be more hope of success among a dissolute and profligate population, than among proud, cold, and sceptical philosophers. Paul had little success in philosophic Athens; he had great success in dissolute Corinth. There is often more hope of converting a man openly dissolute and abandoned, than one who prides himself on his philosophy, and is confident in his own wisdom.

11. And he continued, &c. Paul was not accustomed to remain long in a place. At Ephesus, indeed, he remained three years (Ac. xx. 31); and his stay at Corinth was caused by his success, and by the necessity of placing a church, collected out of such corrupt and dissolute materials, on a firm foundation.

12. And Gallio. After the Romans had conquered Greece they reduced it to two provinces, Macedonia and Achaia, which were each governed by a proconsul. Gallio was the brother of the celebrated philosopher Seneca, and was made proconsul of Achaia A.D. 53. His proper name was Marcus Annaeus Novatus, but, having been adopted into the family of Gallio, a rhetorician, he took his name. He is mentioned by ancient writers as having been of a remarkably mild and amiable disposition. His brother Seneca (Pref. Quest. Nat. 4) describes him as being of the most lovely temper: "No mortal," says he, "was ever so mild to anyone as he was to all; and in him there was such a natural power of goodness, that there was no semblance of art or dissimulation."

¶ Was deputy. See this word explained in the Notes on Ac. xiii. 7. It means here proconsul. ¶ Of Achaia. This word, in its largest sense, comprehended the whole of Greece. Achaia proper, however, was a province of which Corinth was the capital. It embraced that part of Greece lying between Thessaly and the southern part of the Pelopon-insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat,

ness. ¶ The Jews made insurrection. Excited a tumult, as they had in Philippi, Antioch, &c. ¶ And brought him to the judgment seat. The tribunal of Gallio; probably intending to arraign him as a disturber of the peace.

13. Contrary to the law. Evidently intending contrary to all law—the laws of the Romans and of the Jews. It was permitted to the Jews to worship God according to their own views in Greece; but they could easily pretend that Paul had departed from that mode of worshipping God. It was easy for them to maintain that he taught contrary to the laws of the Romans and their acknowledged religion; and their design seems to have been to accuse him of teaching men to worship God in an unlawful and irregular way, a way unknown to any of the laws of the empire.

14. About to open his mouth. In self-defence, ever ready to vindicate his conduct. ¶ A matter of wrong. Injustice, or crime, such as could be properly brought before a court of justice. ¶ Or wicked lewdness. Any flagrant and gross offence. The word used here occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It denotes properly an act committed by him who is skilled, facile, or an adept in iniquity—an act of a veteran offender. Such crimes Gallio was willing to take cognizance of. ¶ Reason would, &c. Greek, “I would bear with you according to reason.” There would be propriety or fitness in my hearing and trying the case. That is, it would fall within the sphere of my duty, as appointed to guard the peace, and to punish crimes.

15. Of words. A dispute about words, for such he would regard all their controversies about religion to be. ¶ And names. Probably he had heard something of the nature of the controversy, and understood it to be a dispute about ness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you:

15 But if it be a question of words and names, "and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And he drove them from the judgment seat.

17 Then all the Greeks "took Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the names; that is, whether Jesus was to be called the Messiah or not. To him this would appear as a matter pertaining to the Jews alone, and to be ranked with their other disputes arising from the difference of sect and name. ¶ Of your law. A question respecting the proper interpretation of the law, or the rites and ceremonies which it commanded. The Jews had many such disputes, and Gallio did not regard them as coming under his cognizance as a magistrate. ¶ Look ye to it. Judge this among yourselves; settle the difficulty as you can. Comp. Jn. xviii. 31. ¶ For I will be no judge, &c. I do not regard such questions as pertaining to my office, or deem myself called on to settle them.

16. And he drove them, &c. He refused to hear and decide the controversy. The word used here does not denote that there was any violence used by Gallio, but merely that he dismissed them in an authoritative manner.

17. Then all the Greeks. The Greeks who had witnessed the persecution of Paul by the Jews, and who had seen the tumult which they had excited. ¶ Took Sosthenes, &c. As he was the chief ruler of the synagogue, he had probably been a leader in the opposition to Paul, and in the prosecution. Indignant at the Jews; at their bringing such questions before the tribunal; at their bigotry, and rage, and contentious spirit, they probably fell upon him in a tumultuous and disorderly manner as he was leaving the tribunal. The Greeks would feel no small measure of indignation at these disturbers of the public peace, and they took this opportunity to express their rage. ¶ And beat him—τύρπον. This word is not that which is commonly used to denote a judicial act of scourging. It probably means that they fell upon him and beat

him with their fists, or with whatever was at hand. ¶ Before the judgment seat. Probably while leaving the tribunal. Instead of "Greeks" in this verse, some MSS. read "Jews," but the former is probably the true reading. The Syriac, Arabic, and Coptic read it "the Gentiles." It is probable that this Sosthenes afterward became a convert to the Christian faith, and a preacher of the gospel. See 1 Co. i. 1, 2, "Paul, and Sosthenes our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth." ¶ And Gallio cared, &c. This has been usually charged on Gallio as a matter of reproach, as if he were wholly indifferent to religion. But the charge is unjustly made, and his name is often most improperly used to represent the indifferent, the worldly, the careless, and the sceptical. By the testimony of ancient writers he was a most mild and amiable man, and an upright and just judge. There is not the least evidence that he was indifferent to the religion of his country, or that he was of a thoughtless and sceptical turn of mind. All that this passage implies is, (1) That he did not deem it to be his duty, or a part of his office, to settle questions of a theological nature that were started among the Jews. (2) That he was unwilling to make this subject a matter of legal discussion and investigation. (3) That he would not interfere, either on one side or the other, in the question about proselytes either to or from Judaism. So far, certainly, his conduct was exemplary and proper. (4) That he did not choose to interpose, and rescue Sosthenes from the hands of the mob. From some cause he was willing that he should feel the effects of the public indignation. Perhaps it was not easy to quell the riot; perhaps he was not unwilling that he who had joined in a furious and unprovoked persecution should feel the effect of it in the excited passions of the people. At all events, he was but following the common practice among the Romans, which was to regard the Jews with contempt, and to care little how much they were exposed to popular fury and rage. In this he was wrong; and it is certain, also, that he was indifferent to the disputes between Jews and Christians;

18 And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and but there is no propriety in defaming his name, and making him the type and representative of all the thoughtless and indifferent on the subject of religion in subsequent times. Nor is there propriety in using this passage as a text as applicable to this class of men.

18. And sailed thence into Syria. Or set sail for Syria. His design was to go to Jerusalem to the festival which was soon to occur, ver. 21. ¶ Having shorn his head. Many interpreters have supposed that this refers to Aquila, and not to Paul. But the connection evidently requires us to understand it of Paul, though the Greek construction does not with certainty determine to which it refers. The Vulgate refers it to Aquila, the Syriac to Paul. ¶ In Cenchrea. Cenchrea was the eastern port of Corinth. A church was formed in that place, Ro. xvi. 1. ¶ For he had a vow. A vow is a solemn promise made to God respecting anything. The use of vows is observable throughout the Scripture. Jacob, going into Mesopotamia, vowed the tenth of his estate, and promised to offer it at Bethel to the honour of God, Ge. xxviii. 22. Moses made many regulations in regard to vows. A man might devote himself or his children to the Lord. He might devote any part of his time or property to his service. The vow they were required sacredly to observe (De. xxiii. 21, 22), except in certain specified cases they were permitted to redeem that which had been thus devoted. The most remarkable vow among the Jews was that of the Nazarite, by which a man made a solemn promise to God to abstain from wine, and from all intoxicating liquors, to let the hair grow, not to enter any house polluted by having a dead body in it, or to attend any funeral. This vow generally lasted eight days, sometimes a month, sometimes during a definite period fixed by themselves, and sometimes during their whole lives. When the vow expired, the priest made an offering of a he-lamb for a burnt-offering, a she-lamb for an expiatory sacrifice, and a ram for a peace-offering. The priest then, or some other person, shaved the head of the Nazarite at the door of the tabernacle, and burnt the hair on the fire of the altar. Those who made the vow out of Palestine, and who could not come to the temple when the vow was expired, contented themselves with observing the abstinence required by the law, and cutting off the hair where they were. This I suppose to have been the case with Paul. His hair he cut off at the expiration of the vow at Cenchrea, though he delayed to perfect the vow by the proper ceremonies until he reached Jerusalem, Ac. xxi. 23, 24. Why Paul made this vow, or on what occasion, the sacred historian has not informed us, and conjecture, perhaps, is useless. We may observe, however, (1) That it was common for the Jews to make such vows to God, as an expression of gratitude or of devotedness to his service, when they had been raised up from sickness, or delivered from danger or calamity. See Josephus, i. 2, 15. Vows of this nature were also made by the Gentiles on occasions of deliverance from any signal calamity (Juvenal, Sat., 12, 81). It is possible that Paul may have made such a vow in consequence of signal deliverance from some of the numerous perils to which he was exposed. But, (2) There is reason to think that it was mainly with a design to convince the Jews that he did not despise their law, and was not its enemy. See ch. xxi. 22-24. In accordance with the custom of the nation, and in compliance with a law which was not wrong in itself, he might have made this vow, not for a time-serving purpose, but in order to conciliate them, and to mitigate their anger against the gospel. See 1 Co. ix. 19-21. But where nothing is recorded, conjecture is useless. Those who wish to see the subject discussed may consult Grotius and Kuinoel in loco; Spencer, De Legibus Hebraeorum, p. 862; and Calmet's Dict., art. "Nazarite."

Notes on Re. ii. 1-5. This was a celebrated city in Ionia, in Asia Minor, about 40 miles south of Smyrna. It was chiefly famous for the Temple of Diana, usually reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world. Pliny styles this city the ornament of Asia. In the times of the Romans it was the metropolis of the province of Asia. This city is now under the dominion of the Turks, and is almost in a state of ruin. Dr. Chandler, in his Travels in Asia Minor, says: "The inhabitants are a few Greek peasants, living in extreme wretchedness, dependence, and insensibility; the representatives of an illustrious people, and inhabiting the wreck of their greatness; some in the substructions of the glorious edifices which they raised; some beneath the vaults of the stadium, once the crowded scene of their diversions; and some in the sepulchres which received their ashes" (Travels, p. 131, Oxford, 1775). The Jews, according to Josephus, were very numerous in Ephesus, and had obtained the privilege of citizenship. ¶ Left them there. That is, Aquila and Priscilla, ver. 24-26. ¶ Reasoned with the Jews. See Notes on ch. xvii. 2.

21. Keep this feast. Probably the Passover is here referred to. Why he was so anxious to celebrate that feast at Jerusalem, the historian has not informed us. It is probable, however, that he wished to meet as many of his countrymen as possible, and to remove, if practicable, the prejudices which had everywhere been raised against him, ch. xxi. 20, 21. Perhaps, also, he supposed that there would be many Christian converts present, whom he might meet also. ¶ But I will return, &c. This he did (ch. xix. 1), and remained there three years, ch. xx. 31.

22. At Cesarea. See Notes on ch. viii. 40. ¶ And gone up. From the ship. ¶ And saluted the church. The church at Jerusalem. This was Paul's Cesarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of 'Galatia and Phrygia in order, "strengthening all the disciples.

main design; and though it is not distinctly specified, yet the whole narrative implies that he went there before returning to Antioch. The word saluted implies that he expressed for them his tender affection and regard. ¶ To Antioch. In Syria. See Notes on ch. xi. 19.

23. The country of Galatia and Phrygia. He had been over these regions before, preaching the gospel, ch. xvi. 6. ¶ Strengthening. Establishing them by exhortation and counsel. See Notes on ch. xiv. 22.

24. And a certain Jew named Apollos. Apollos afterward became a distinguished and successful preacher of the gospel, 1 Co. i. 12; iii. 5, 6; iv. 6; Tit. iii. 13. Nothing more is known of him than is stated in these passages. ¶ Born at Alexandria. Alexandria was a celebrated city in Egypt, founded by Alexander the Great. There were large numbers of Jews resident there. See Notes on ch. vi. 9. ¶ An eloquent man. Alexandria was famous for its schools, and it is probable that Apollos, in addition to his natural endowments, had enjoyed the benefit of these schools. ¶ Mighty in the scriptures. Well instructed, or able in the Old Testament. The foundation was thus laid for future usefulness in the Christian church. See Notes on Lu. xxiv. 19.

25. This man was instructed. Greek, was catechised. He was instructed, in some degree, into the knowledge of the Christian religion. By whom this was done we have no information. ¶ In the right way of the Lord. The word way often refers to doctrine, Mat. xxi. 32.

It means here that he had been correctly taught in regard to the Messiah, yet his knowledge was imperfect, ver. 26. The amount of his knowledge seems to have been, (1) He had correct views of the Messiah to come—views which he had derived from the study of the Old Testament. He was expecting a Saviour that would be humble, obscure, and a sacrifice, in opposition to the prevailing notions of the Jews. (2) He had heard of John; had embraced his doctrine; and probably had been baptized with reference to him that was to come. Comp. Mat. iii. 2; Ac. xix. 4. But it is clear that he had not heard that Jesus was the Messiah. With his correct views in regard to the coming of the Messiah he was endeavouring to instruct and reform his countrymen. He was just in the state of mind to welcome the announcement that the Messiah had come, and to embrace Jesus of Nazareth as the hope of the nation. ¶ Being fervent in the spirit. Being zealous and ardent. See Notes on Ro. xii. 11. ¶ Taught diligently. Defended with zeal and earnestness his views of the Messiah. ¶ The things of the Lord. The doctrines pertaining to the Messiah as far as he understood them. ¶ Knowing only the baptism of John. Whether he had himself heard John, and been baptized by him, has been made a question which cannot now be decided. It is not necessary, however, to suppose this, as it seems that the knowledge of John's preaching and baptism had been propagated extensively in other nations beside Judea, ch. xix. 1-3. The Messiah was expected about that time. The foreign Jews would be waiting for him; and the news of John's ministry, doctrine, and success would be rapidly propagated from synagogue to synagogue in the surrounding nations. John preached repentance, and baptized with reference to him that was to come after him (ch. xix. 4), and this doctrine Apollos seems to have embraced.

26. And expounded. Explained. ¶ The way of God. Gave him full and ample instructions respecting the Messiah as having already come, and respecting the nature of his work.

27. Into Achaia. See Notes on ch. xviii. 12. ¶ The brethren wrote. The brethren at Ephesus. Why he was disposed to go into Achaia the historian does not inform us. But he had heard of the success of Paul there; of the church which he had established; of the opposition of the Jews; and it was doubtless with a desire to establish that church, and with a wish to convince his unbelieving countrymen that their views of the Messiah were erroneous, and that Jesus of Nazareth corresponded with the predictions of the prophets, that he went there. Many of the Greeks at Corinth were greatly captivated with his winning eloquence (1 Co. i. 12; iii. 4, 5), and his going there was the occasion of some unhappy divisions that sprung up in the church. But in all this he retained the confidence and love of Paul, 1 Co. i. iii. It was thus shown that Paul was superior to envy, and that great success by one minister need not excite the envy, or alienate the confidence and good-will of another. ¶ Helped them much. Strengthened them, and aided them in their controversies with the unbelieving Jews. ¶ Which had believed through grace. The words "through grace" may either refer to Apollos, or to the Christians who had believed. If to him, it means that he was enabled by grace to strengthen the brethren there; if to them, it means that they had been led to believe by the grace or favour of God. Either interpretation makes good sense. Our translation has adopted that which is most natural and obvious.

28. For he mighty convinced the Jews. He did it by strong arguments; he bore down all opposition, and effectually si-

lenced them. ¶ And that publicly. In his public preaching in the synagogue and elsewhere. ¶ Showing by the scriptures. Proving from the Old Testament. Showing that Jesus of Nazareth corresponded with the account of the Messiah given by the prophets. See Notes on Jn. v. 39. ¶ That Jesus was Christ. See the margin. That Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah.

CHAPTER XIX.

1. While Apollos was at Corinth. It is probable that he remained there a considerable time. ¶ Paul, having passed through the upper coasts. The upper, or more elevated regions of Asia Minor. The writer refers here particularly to the provinces of Phrygia and Galatia, ch. xviii. 23. These regions were called upper, because they were situated on the high table-land in the interior of Asia Minor, while Ephesus was in the low maritime regions, and called the low country. ¶ Came to Ephesus. Agreeably to his promise, ch. xviii. 21. ¶ And finding certain disciples. Certain persons who had been baptized into John's baptism, and who had embraced John's doctrine that the Messiah was soon to appear, ver. 3, 4. It is very clear that they had not yet heard that he had come, or that the Holy Ghost was given. They were evidently in the same situation as Apollos. See Notes on ch. xviii. 25.

2. Have ye received the Holy Ghost? Have ye received the extraordinary effusions and miraculous influences of the Holy Ghost? Paul would not doubt that, if they had "believed," they had received the ordinary converting influences of the Holy Spirit—for it was one of his favourite doctrines that the Holy Spirit renews the heart. But, besides this, the miraculous influences believed? And they said unto him, 'We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.'

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, 'Unto John's baptism.'

4 Then said Paul, 'John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.'

5 When they heard this, 'they

of the Spirit were conferred on many societies of believers. The power of speaking with tongues, or of working miracles, was imparted as an evidence of the presence of God, and of their acceptance with him, ch. x. 45, 46; 1 Co. xiv. It was natural for Paul to ask whether this evidence of the divine favour has been granted to them. ¶ Since ye believed. Since you embraced the doctrine of John that the Messiah was soon to come. ¶ We have not so much as heard, &c. This seems to be a very strange answer. Yet we are to remember, (1) That these were mere disciples of John's doctrine, and that his preaching related particularly to the Messiah, and not to the Holy Ghost. (2) It does not even appear that they had heard that the Messiah had come, or had heard of Jesus of Nazareth, ver. 4, 5. (3) It is not remarkable, therefore, that they had no clear conceptions of the character and operations of the Holy Ghost. Yet, (4) They were just in that state of mind that they were willing to embrace the doctrine when it was proclaimed to them, thus showing that they were really under the influence of the Holy Spirit. God may often produce important changes in the hearts and lives of sinners, even where they have no clear and systematic views of religious doctrines. In all such cases, however, there will be a readiness of heart to embrace the truth where it is made known.

3. Unto what. Unto what faith or doctrine. What did you profess to believe when you were baptized? ¶ Unto John's baptism. See Notes on ch. xviii. 25.

4. John verily baptized. John did indeed baptize. ¶ With the baptism of repentance. Having special reference to repentance, or as a profession that they did repent of their sins. See Notes on Mat. iii. 6. ¶ Saying unto the people. The design of his preaching was to turn the people from their sins, and to prepare them for the coming of the Messiah. He therefore directed their attention principally to him that was to come, Jn. i. 15, 22-27. ¶ That is, on Christ Jesus. These are the words of Paul, explaining what John taught. John taught them to believe in the Messiah, and Paul now showed them that the Messiah was Jesus of Nazareth. The argument of Paul is, that it was highly proper for them now to profess publicly that Saviour to whom John had borne such explicit testimony. "Jesus is the Messiah for whom John came to prepare the way; and as you have embraced John's doctrine, you ought now publicly to acknowledge that Redeemer by baptism in his name."

5. When they heard this. When they heard what Paul had said respecting the nature of John's baptism. ¶ They were baptized, &c. As there is no other instance in the New Testament of any persons having been rebaptized, it has been made a question by some critics whether it was done here; and they have supposed that all this is the narrative of Luke respecting what took place under the ministry of John: to wit, that he told them to believe on Christ Jesus, and then baptized them in his name. But this is a most forced construction; and it is evident that these persons were rebaptized by the direction of Paul. For, (1) This is the obvious interpretation of the passage—that which would strike all persons as correct, unless there were some previous theory to support. (2) It was not a matter of fact that John baptized in the name of Christ Jesus. His was the baptism of repentance; and there is not the slightest evidence that he ever used the name of Jesus in the form of baptism. (3) If it be the sense of the passage that John baptized them in the name of Jesus, then this verse is a mere repetition of ver. 4; a tautology of which the sacred writers would not be guilty. (4) It is evident that the persons on whom Paul laid his hands (ver. 6), and those who were baptized, were the same. But these were the persons who heard (ver. 5)

were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, <sup>b</sup>the Holy Ghost came on them; <sup>a</sup>and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, <sup>c</sup>disputing, and <sup>d</sup>persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

what was said. The narrative is continuous, all parts of it cohering together as relating to a transaction that occurred at the same time. If the obvious interpretation of the passage be the true one, it follows that the baptism of John was not strictly Christian baptism. It was the baptism of repentance; a baptism designed to prepare the way for the introduction of the kingdom of the Messiah. It will not follow, however, from this that Christian baptism is now ever to be repeated. For this there is no warrant in the New Testament. There is no command to repeat it, as in the case of the Lord's supper; and the nature and design of the ordinance evidently supposes that it is to be performed but once. The disciples of John were rebaptized, not because baptism is designed to be repeated, but because they never had been, in fact, baptized in the manner prescribed by the Lord Jesus. ¶ In the name of the Lord Jesus. See Notes on ch. ii. 38.

6. And when Paul laid his hands, &c. See Notes on ch. viii. 17. ¶ And they spake with tongues. See Notes on ch. ii. 4; x. 46. ¶ And prophesied. See Notes on ch. ii. 17; xi. 27.

7. And all the men. The whole number.

8. Persuading the things. Endeavouring to persuade them of the truth of what was affirmed respecting the kingdom of God.

9. But when divers. When some were hardened. ¶ Were hardened. When their hearts were hardened, and they became violently opposed to the gospel. When the truth made no impression on them. The word harden, as applied to the heart, is often used to denote insensibility, and opposition to the gospel. ¶ But spake evil of that way. Of the gospel—the way, path, or manner in which God saves men. See Acts xvi. 17; xviii. 26; Mat. vii. 13, 14. ¶ Separated the disciples. Removed them from the influence and society of those who were seeking to draw them away from the faith.

This is often the best way to prevent the evil influence of others. Christians, if they wish to preserve their minds calm and peaceful; if they wish to avoid the agitations of conflict, and the temptations of those who would lead them astray, should withdraw from their society, and seek the fellowship of their Christian brethren. ¶ Disputing daily. This is not a happy translation. The word used here (διατριβέων) does not of necessity denote disputation or contention, but is often used in a good sense of reasoning (Ac. xvii. 2; xviii. 4, 19; xxiv. 25), or of public preaching, Ac. xx. 7, 9. It is used in this sense here, and denotes that Paul taught publicly, or reasoned on the subject of religion in this place. ¶ In the school of one Tyrannus. Who this Tyrannus was is not known. It is probable that he was a Jew, who was engaged in this employment, and who might not be unfavourably disposed toward Christians. In his school, or in the room which he occupied for teaching, Paul instructed the people when he was driven from the synagogue. Christians at that time had no churches, and they were obliged to assemble in any place where it might be convenient to conduct public worship.

10. This continued. This public instruction. ¶ By the space, &c. For two whole years. ¶ So that all. That is, the great mass of the people. ¶ That dwelt in Asia. In that province of Asia Minor of which Ephesus was the principal city. The name Asia was used sometimes to denote that single province. See Notes on Ac. ii. 9. Ephesus was the capital; and there was, of course, a constant and large influx of people there for the purposes of commerce and worship. ¶ Heard the word of the Lord Jesus. Heard the doctrine respecting the Lord Jesus.

they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

11. Special miracles. Miracles that were remarkable; that were not common, or that were very unusual (οὐ τὰς τυχοῖσας). This expression is classic Greek. Thus Longinus says of Moses that he was no common man—οὐχ' οὐ τύχων ἄνθης.

12. So that from his body. That is, those handkerchiefs which had been applied to his body, which he had used, or which he had touched. An instance somewhat similar to this occurs in the case of the woman who was healed by touching the hem of the Saviour's garment, Mat. ix. 20-22. ¶ Unto the sick. The sick who were at a distance, and who were unable to go where he was. If it be asked why this was done, it may be observed, (1) That the working of miracles in that region would greatly contribute to the spread of the gospel. (2) We are not to suppose that there was any efficacy in the aprons thus brought, or in the mere fact that they had touched the body of Paul, any more than there was in the hem of the Saviour's garment which the woman touched, or in the clay which he made use of to open the eyes of the blind man, Jn. viii. 6. (3) In this instance, the fact that the miracles were wrought in this manner by garments which had touched his body, was a mere sign, or an evidence to the persons concerned, that it was done by the instrumentality of Paul, as the fact that the Saviour put his fingers into the ears of a deaf man, and spit and touched his tongue (Mar. vii. 33), was an evidence to those who saw it that the power of healing came from him. The bearing of these aprons to the sick was, therefore, merely evidence to all concerned that miraculous power was given to Paul. ¶ Hand-chiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13 Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, "took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, kerchiefs. The word used here (σουδάγια) is of Latin origin, and properly denotes a piece of linen with which sweat was wiped from the face; and then any piece of linen used for tying up, or containing anything. In Lu. xix. 20, it denotes the "napkin" in which the talent of the unprofitable servant was concealed; in Jn. xi. 44; xx. 7, the "napkin" which was used to bind up the face of the dead applied to Lazarus and to our Saviour. ¶ Or aprons—σφυρινθία. This is also a Latin word, and means literally a half girdle, or covering half the person—a piece of cloth which was girded round the waist to preserve the clothes of those who were engaged in any kind of work. The word aprons expresses the idea. ¶ And the diseases departed. The sick were healed. ¶ And the evil spirits. See Notes on Mat. iv. 24. It is evident that this power of working miracles would contribute greatly to Paul's success among the people.

13. The vagabond Jews. Greek, Jews going about—τρέμενοι περιπάτων. The word vagabond with us is now commonly used in a bad sense, to denote a vagrant; a man who has no home; an idle, worthless fellow. The word, however, properly means one wandering from place to place, without any settled habitation, from whatever cause it may be. Here it denotes those Jews who wandered from place to place, practising exorcism. ¶ Exorcists—ἰκετοῦτον. This word properly denotes those who went about pretending to be able to expel evil spirits, or to cure diseases by charms, incantations, &c. The word is derived from ορκίω, orkizo, to bind with an oath. It was applied in this sense, because those who pretended to be able to expel demons used the formula of an oath, or adjured them, to compel them to leave the possessed persons. Comp. Mat. xii. 27. They commonly used the name of God, or called on the demons in the name of God to leave the person. Here they used the name Jesus to command saying, "We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth."

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

them to come out. Such wanderers and pretenders are common in Oriental countries now. See Land and the Book, vol. i. 224, 510. ¶ To call over them. To name, or to use his name as sufficient to expel the evil spirit. ¶ The name of the Lord Jesus. The reasons why they attempted this were, (1) That Jesus had expelled many evil spirits; and (2) That it was in his name that Paul had wrought his miracles. Perhaps they supposed there was some charm in this name to expel them. ¶ We adjure you. We bind you by an oath; we command you as under the solemnity of an oath, Mar. v. 7; 1 Th. v. 27. It is a form of putting one under oath, 1 Ki. ii. 43; Ge. xxiv. 37; 2 Ki. xi. 4; Ne. xiii. 25 (Septuagint). That this art was practised then, or attempted, is abundantly proved from Irenaeus, Origen, and Josephus (Antiq., b. viii. ch. 2, § 5). See Doddridge. The common name which was used was the incommunicable name of God, JEHOVAH, by pronouncing which, in a peculiar way, it was pretended they had the power of expelling demons.

14. One Sceva. Sceva is a Greek name, but nothing more is known of him. ¶ Chief of the priests. This cannot mean that he was high-priest among the Jews, as it is wholly improbable that his sons would be wandering exorcists. But it denotes that he was of the sacerdotal order. He was a Jewish chief priest; a priest of distinction, and had held the office of a ruler. The word chief priest, in the New Testament, usually refers to men of the sacerdotal order who were also rulers in the Sanhedrim.

ye? What power have you over evil spirits? By what right do you attempt to expel them? The meaning is, "You belong neither to Jesus nor Paul, and you have no right or authority to attempt to work miracles in the name of either."

16. Leaped on them. Several such instances are recorded of the extraordinary power and rage of those who were possessed with evil spirits, Mar. v. 3; ix. 29; Lu. ix. 42.

17. The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified. Acquired increasing honour. The transaction showed that the miracles performed in the name of the Lord Jesus by Paul were real, and were wrought in attestation of the truth of the doctrine which he taught. Impostors could not work such miracles; and they who pretended to be able to do it only exposed themselves to the rage of evil spirits. It was thus shown that there was a real, vital difference between Paul and these impostors, and their failure only served to extend his reputation and the power of the gospel.

18. Their deeds. Their actions; their evil course of life. The direct reference here is to the magical arts which had been used, but the word may also be designed to denote iniquity in general. They who make a profession of religion will be willing to confess their transgressions, and no man can have evidence that he is truly renewed who is not willing to confess as well as to forsake his sins, Ro. x. 10; Pr. xxviii. 13, "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy."

19. Curious arts. Arts or practices requiring skill, address, cunning. The word used here (μείγηται) denotes properly those things that require care or skill, and was thus applied to the arts of magic, jugglery, and sleight of hand, that were practised so extensively in Eastern countries. That such arts were practised at Ephesus is well known. The Ephesian letters, by which incantations and charms were supposed to be produced, were much celebrated. They seem to have consisted of certain combinations of letters or words, which, by being pronounced with certain intonations of voice, were believed to be effectual in expelling diseases, or evil spirits; or which, by being written on parchment and worn, were supposed to operate as amulets, or charms, to guard from evil spirits or from danger. Thus Plutarch (Sypos., 7) says, "The magicians compel those who are possessed with a demon to recite and pronounce the Ephesian letters, in a certain order, by themselves." Thus Clemens Alex. (Strom. ii.) says, "Androcycles, a Pythagorean, says that the letters which are called Ephesian, and which are so celebrated, are symbols," &c. Erasmus says (Adagg. Cent., 2) that there were certain marks and magical words among the Ephesians, by using which they succeeded in every undertaking. Eustath. ad Hom., Odys. 7, says "that those letters were incantations which Creesus used when on the funeral pile, and which greatly befriended him." He adds that, in the war between the Milesians and Ephesians, the latter were thirteen times saved from ruin by the use of these letters. See Grotius and Kuinoel. ¶ Brought their books. Books which explained the arts, or which contained the magical forms and incantations—perhaps pieces of parchment, on which were written the letters which were to be used in the incantations and charms. ¶ And burned them before all men. Publicly. Their arts and offences had been public, and they sought now to undo the evil, as much as lay in their power, as extensively as they had done it. ¶ And they counted. The price was estimated. By whom this was done does not appear. Probably it was not done by those who had been engaged in this business, and who had suffered the loss, but by the people, who were amazed at the sacrifice, and who were astonished at their folly in thus destroying their own property. ¶ Fifty thousand pieces of silver. What coin the word (ἀργυρίον) here translated silver denotes, it is impossible to tell, and consequently the precise value of this sacrifice cannot be ascertained. If it refers to the Jewish shekel, the sum would be $25,000 (about £5420), as the shekel was worth about half a dollar. If it refers to Grecian or Roman coin—which is much more probable, as this was a heathen country, where the Jewish coin would not, probably, be much used—the value would be much less. Probably, however, it refers to the Attic drachm, which was a silver coin worth about 9d. sterling, or not far from 17 cents, and then the value would be about $8500 (£1875). The precise value is not material. It was a large sum; and it is recorded to show that Christianity had power to induce men to forsake arts that were most lucrative, and to destroy the means of extending and perpetuating those arts, however valuable in a pecuniary point of view they might be. We are to remember, however, that this was not the intrinsic value of these books, but only their value as books of incantation. In themselves they might have been of very little worth. The universal prevalence of Christianity would make much that is now esteemed valuable property utterly worthless, as, for example, all that is used in gambling, in fraud, in counterfeiting, in distilling ardent spirits for drink, in the slave-trade, and in attempts to impose on and defraud mankind.

20. So mightily grew the word of God. So powerfully. It had such efficacy and power in this wicked city. That power must have been mighty which would thus make them willing not only to cease to practise imposition, but to give up all hopes of future gains, and to destroy their property. On this instructive narrative we may remark, (1) That religion has power to break the hold of sinners on unjust and dishonest means of living. (2) That those who have been engaged in an unchrishe had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I<sup>b</sup> must also see Rome.

tian and dishonourable practice will abandon it when they become Christians. (3) That their abhorrence of their former course will be, and ought to be, expressed as publicly as was the offence. (4) That the evil practice will be abandoned at any sacrifice, however great. The question will be, what is right; not what will it cost. Property, in the view of a converted man, is nothing when compared with a good conscience. (5) This conduct of those who had used curious arts shows us what ought to be done by those who have been engaged in any evil course of life, and who are then converted. If what they did when they were converted was right—and who can doubt it?—it settles a great principle on which young converts should act. If a man has been engaged in the slave-trade, he will abandon it, and his duty will not be to sell his ship to one who he knows will continue the traffic. His property should be withdrawn from the business publicly, either by being destroyed, or by being converted to a useful purpose. If a man has been a distiller of ardent spirits as a drink, his duty will be to forsake his evil course. Nor will it be his duty to sell his distillery to one who will continue the business, but to withdraw his property from it publicly, either by destroying it, or converting it to some useful purpose. If a man has been engaged in the traffic in ardent spirits, his duty is not to sell his stock to those who will continue the sale of the poison, but to withdraw it from public use—converting it to some useful purpose, if he can; if not, by destroying it. All that has ever been said by money-loving distillers, or vendors of ardent spirits, about the loss which they would sustain by abandoning the business, might have been said by these practitioners of curious arts in Ephesus. And if the excuses of rum-selling men are valid, their conduct was folly; and they should either have continued the business of practising “curious arts” after they were converted, or should have sold their “books” to those who would have continued it. For assuredly it was not worse to practise jugglery and fortune-telling than it is to destroy the bodies and souls of men by the traffic in ardent spirits. And yet, how few men there are in Christian lands who practise on the principle of these honest, but comparatively unenlightened men at Ephesus.

21. After these things were ended. After the gospel was firmly established at Ephesus, so that his presence there was no longer necessary. ¶ Purposed in the spirit. Resolved in his mind. ¶ When he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia. In these places he had founded flourishing churches. It is probable that his main object in this visit was to take up a collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem. See Notes on Ro. xv. 25, 26. ¶ To go to Jerusalem. To bear the contribution of the Gentile churches to the poor and oppressed Christians in Judea. ¶ I must also see Rome. See Notes on Ro. xv. 24. He did go to Rome, but he went in chains, as a prisoner.

22. Timotheus. Timothy. He was a proper person to send there to visit the churches, as he had been there before with Paul, when they were established, ch. xvi. 3; xvii. 14. ¶ And Erastus. Erastus was chamberlain of Corinth (Ro. xvi. 23), or, more properly, the treasurer of the city (see Notes on that place), and he was, therefore, a very proper person to be sent with Timothy for the purpose of making the collection for the poor at Jerusalem. Paul had wisdom enough to employ a man accustomed to monied transactions in making a collection. On this collection his heart was intent, and he afterward went up with it to Jerusalem. See 2 Co. viii. ix., and Notes on Ro. xv. 25, 26. ¶ Staid in Asia. At Ephesus. ¶ For a season. How long is uncertain. He waited for a convenient opportunity to follow them, probably intending to do it as soon as they had fully prepared the way for the collection. See Paley’s Hora Paulinæ, p. 1, ch. ii.

24. A silversmith. The word used here denotes one who works in silver in any way, either in making money, in stamping silver, or in forming utensils of it. It is probable that the employment of this man was confined to the business here specified, that of making shrines, as his complaint (ver. 26, 27) implied that destroying this would be sufficient to throw them out of all employment. Silver shrines—ναοις. Temples. The word shrine properly means a case, small chest, or box; particularly applied to a box in which sacred things are deposited. Hence we hear of the shrines for relics (Webster). The word shrines here denotes small portable temples, or edifices, made of silver, so as to represent the temple of Diana, and probably containing a silver image of the goddess. Such shrines would be purchased by devotees and by worshippers of the goddess, and by strangers, who would be desirous of possessing a representation of one of the seven wonders of the world. See Notes on ver. 27. The great number of persons that came to Ephesus for her worship would constitute an ample sale for productions of this kind, and make the manufacture a profitable employment. It is well known that pagans everywhere are accustomed to carry with them small images, or representations of their gods, as an amulet or charm. The Romans had such images in all their houses, called penates, or household gods. A similar thing is mentioned as early as the time of Laban (Ge. xxxi. 19), whose images Rachel had stolen and taken with her. Comp. Ju. xvii. 5, "The man Micah had an house of gods;" 1 Sa. xix. 13; Ho. iii. 4. These images were usually inclosed in a box, case, or chest, made of wood, iron, or silver; and probably, as here, usually made to resemble the temple where the idol was worshipped. ¶ Diana. This was a celebrated goddess of the heathen, and one of the twelve superior deities. In the heavens she was Luna, or Meni (the moon); on earth, Diana; and in hell, Hecate. She was sometimes represented with a crescent on her head, a bow in her hand, and dressed in a hunting habit; at other times with a triple face, and with instruments of torture. She was commonly regarded as the goddess of hunting. She was also worshipped under the various names of Lucina, Proserpine, Trivia, &c. She was also represented with a great number of breasts, to denote her being the fountain of blessings, or as distributing her benefits to each in their proper station. She was worshipped in Egypt, Athens, Cilicia, and among heathen nations generally; but the most celebrated place of her worship was Ephesus, a city peculiarly dedicated to her. ¶ To the craftsmen. To the labourers employed under Demetrius in the manufacture of shrines.

25. With the workmen of like occupation. Those who were in his employ, and all others engaged in the same business. As they would be all affected in the same way, it was easy to produce an excitement among them all. ¶ Sirs. Greek, Men. ¶ By this craft. By this business or occupation. This is our trade. ¶ Our wealth. Greek, our acquisition; our property. We are dependent on it for a living. It does not mean that they were rich, but that they relied on this for a subsistence. That it was a lucrative business is apparent, but it is not affirmed that they were in fact rich.

We have here the noble testimony of a heathen to the zeal and success of the ministry of Paul. It is an acknowledgement that his labours had been most strikingly successful in turning the people from idolatry. ¶ Saying that they be no gods, &c. See Notes on ch. xiv. 14, 15.

27. So that not only, &c. The grounds of the charge which Demetrius made against Paul were two: first, that the business of the craftsmen would be destroyed—usually the first thing that strikes the mind of a sinner who is influenced by self-interest alone; and, second, that the worship of Diana would cease if Paul and his fellow-labourers were suffered to continue their efforts. ¶ This our craft. This business in which we are engaged, and on which we are dependent. Greek, this part (τὸ μίσθιον) which pertains to us. ¶ To be set at nought. To be brought into contempt. It will become so much an object of ridicule and contempt that we shall have no further employment. Greek, “Is in danger of coming into refutation”—ἴδιος ἀπάλληλον. As that which is refuted by argument is deemed useless, so the word comes also to signify that which is useless, or which is an object of contempt or ridicule. We may here remark, (1) That the extensive prevalence of the Christian religion would destroy many kinds of business in which men now engage. It would put an end to all that now ministers to the pride, vanity, luxury, vice, and ambition of men. Let religion prevail, and wars would cease, and all the preparations for war which now employ so many hearts and hands would be useless. Let religion prevail, and temperance would prevail also; and consequently all the capital and labour now employed in distilling and vending ardent spirits would be withdrawn, and the business be broken up. Let religion prevail, and licentiousness would cease, and all the arts which minister to it would be useless. Let Christianity prevail, and all that goes now to minister to idolatry, and the corrupt passions of men, would be destroyed. No small part of the talent, also, that is now worse than wasted in corrupting others by ballads and songs,

by fiction and licentious tales, would be withdrawn. A vast amount of capital and talent would thus be at once set at liberty, to be employed in nobler and better purposes. (2) The effect of religion is often to bring the employments of men into shame and contempt. A revival of religion often makes the business of distilling an object of abhorrence. It pours shame on those who are engaged in ministering to the vices and luxuries of the world. Religion reveals the evil of such a course of life, and those vices are banished by the mere prevalence of better principles. Yet, (3) The talent and capital thus disengaged is not rendered useless. It may be directed to other channels and other employments. Religion does not make men idle. It leads men to devote their talents to useful employments, and opens fields in which all may toil usefully to themselves and to their fellow-men. If all the capital, the genius, and the learning which are now wasted, and worse than wasted, were to be at once withdrawn from their present pursuits, they might be profitably employed. There is not now a useless man who might not be useful; there is not a cent wasted which might not be employed to advantage in the great work of making the world better and happier. ¶ But also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised. This temple, so celebrated, was regarded as one of the seven wonders of the world. It was two hundred and twenty years in building before it was brought to perfection. It was built at the expense of all Asia Minor. The original object of worship among the Ephesians was a small statue of Dianna, made of wood, but of what kind of wood is unknown. Pliny says that the temple was made of cedar, but that it was doubtful of what kind of wood the image was made. Some have said that it was of ebony. Mucian, who was three times consul, says that the image was made of vine, and was never changed, though the temple was rebuilt seven times (Pliny, xvi. 79). See Vitruvius, ii. 9. It was merely an Egyptian hieroglyphic, with many breasts, representing the goddess of Nature—under which idea Diana was probably worshipped at Ephesus. As the original figure became decayed by age, it was propped up by two rods of iron like spits, which were carefully copied in the image which was afterward made in imitation of the first. A temple, most magnificent in structure, was built to contain the image of Diana, which was several times built and rebuilt. The first is said to have been completed in the reign of Servius Tullius, at least 570 years before Christ. Another temple is mentioned as having been designed by Ctesiphon, 540 years before the Christian era, and which was completed by Daphnis of Miletus and a citizen of Ephesus. This temple was partially destroyed by fire on the very day on which Socrates was poisoned, 400 years b.c., and again 356 years b.c., by the philosopher Herostratus, on the day on which Alexander the Great was born. He confessed, on being put to the torture, that the only motive he had was to immortalize his name. The four walls, and a few columns only, escaped the flames. The temple was repaired, and restored to more than its former magnificence, in which, says Pliny (lib. xxxvi. c. 14), 220 years were required to bring it to completion. It was 425 feet in length, 220 in breadth, and was supported by 127 pillars of Parian marble, each of which was 60 feet high. These pillars were furnished by as many princes, and 36 of them were curiously carved, and the rest were finely polished. Each pillar, it is supposed, with its base, contained 150 tons of marble. The doors and panelling were made of cypress wood, the roof of cedar, and the interior was rendered splendid by decorations of gold, and by the finest productions of ancient artists. This celebrated edifice, after suffering various partial demolitions, was finally burned by the Goths, in their third naval invasion, in A.D. 260. Travellers are now left to conjecture where its site was. Amidst the confused ruins of ancient Ephesus, it is now impossible to tell where was this celebrated temple, once one of the wonders of the world. "So passes away the glory of this world." See Edinburgh Encycl., art. "Ephesus;" also Anacharsis's Travels, vol. vi. p. 188; Ancient Universal Hist., vol. vii. p. 416; and Pococke's Travels. ¶ And her magnificence. Her majesty and glory; that is, the splendour of her temple and her worship. ¶ Whom all Asia. All Asia Minor. ¶ And the world. Other parts of the world. The temple had been built by contributions from a great number of princes, and doubtless multitudes from all parts of the earth came to Ephesus to pay their homage to Diana.

28. Were full of wrath. Were greatly enraged—probably at the prospect of losing their gains. ¶ Great is Diana, &c. The term great was often applied by the Greeks to Diana. Thus, in Xenophon (Ephes. i.), he says, "I adjure you by your own goddess, the great (την μεγάλην) Diana of the Ephesians." The design of this clamour was doubtless to produce a persecution against Paul, and thus to secure a continuance of their employment. Often, when men have no arguments, they raise a clamour; when their employments are in danger of being ruined, they are filled with rage. We may learn, also, that when men's pecuniary interests are affected, they often show great zeal for religion, and expect by clamour in behalf of some doctrine to maintain their own interest, and to secure their own gains.

29. Confusion. Tumult; disorder. ¶ Gaius. He had lived at Corinth, and had kindly entertained Paul at his house, 1 Co. i. 14; Ro. xvi. 23. ¶ Aristarchus. He attended Paul to Rome, and was there a prisoner with him, Col. iv. 10. ¶ With one accord. Tumultuously; or with one mind or purpose. ¶ Into the theatre. The theatres of the Greeks were not only places for public exhibitions, but also for holding assemblies, and often for courts, elections, &c. The people, therefore, naturally rushed there, as being a suitable place to decide this matter.

31. Certain of the chief of Asia—τῶν Ἀσιαρχῶν. Of the Asiarchs. These were persons who presided over sacred things and over the public games. It was their business to see that the proper services of religion were observed, and that proper honour was rendered to the Roman emperor in the public festivals, at the games, &c. They were annually elected, and their election was confirmed at Rome before it was valid. They held a common council at the principal city within their province, as at Ephesus, Smyrna, Sardis, &c., to consult and deliberate about the interests committed to their charge in their various provinces (Kuinoel and Schleusner). Probably they were assembled on such an occasion now; and during their remaining there they had heard Paul preach, and were friendly to his views and doctrines. ¶ Which were his friends. It does not appear from this that they were Christian converts; but they probably had feelings of respect toward him, and were disposed to defend him and his cause. Perhaps, also, there might have existed a personal acquaintance and attachment. ¶ Would not adventure. Would not risk his life in the tumult, and under the excited feelings of the multitude.

32. Some therefore cried one thing, &c. This is an admirable description of a mob, assembled for what purpose they knew not; but agitated by passions, and strifes, and tumults. ¶ And the most part knew not, &c. The greater part did not know. They had been drawn together by the noise and excitement, and but a small part would know the real cause of the commotion. This is usually the case in tumultuous meetings.

33. And they drew Alexander. Who this Alexander was is not known. Gro-tius supposes that it was "Alexander the coppersmith," who had in some way done Paul much harm (2 Ti. iv. 14); and whom, with Philetus, Paul had excommunicated. He supposes that it was a device of the Jews to put forward one who had been of the Christian party, in order to accuse Paul, and to attempt to cast the odium of the tumult on him. But it is not clear that the Alexander whom Paul had excommunicated was the person concerned in this transaction. All that appears in this narrative is, that Alexander was one who was known to be a Jew, and who wished to defend the Jews from being regarded as the authors of this tumult. It would be supposed by the heathen that the Christians were only a sect of the Jews, and the Jews wished, doubtless, to show that they had not been concerned in giving occasion to this tumult, but that it was to be traced wholly to Paul and his friends. ¶ The Jews putting him forward. That he might have a convenient opportunity to speak to the people. ¶ Would have made his defence. Our translation, by the phrase "his defence," would seem to imply that he was personally accused. But it was not so. The Greek is simply, "was about to apologize to the people;" that is, to make a defence, not of himself particularly, but of the Jews in general. The translation should have been "a defence."

34. But when they knew. When they perceived or ascertained. ¶ That he was a Jew. There was a general prejudice against the Jews. They were disposed to charge the whole difficulty on Jews—esteeming Christians to be but a sect of the Jews. They were, therefore, indiscriminate in their wrath, and unwilling to listen to any defence. ¶ With one voice. Unitedly, in one continual shout and clamour. ¶ About the space of two hours. The day, from sun-was a Jew, all with one voice, about the space of two hours, cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians!

35 And when the town-clerk had rise to sunset, among the Greeks and Romans, was divided into twelve equal parts, Jn. xi. 9. An hour, therefore, did not differ materially from an hour with us. It is not at all improbable that the tumult would continue for so long a time, before it would be possible to allay the excitement. ¶ Cried out, &c. This they at first did to silence Alexander. The shouting, however, was continued in order to evince their attachment to Diana, as would be natural in an excited and tumultuous mob of heathen worshippers.

35. And when the town-clerk—οὗτος γραμματίς. The scribe; the secretary. This word is often used in the Bible, and is commonly translated scribe, and is applied to public notaries in the synagogues; to clerks; to those who transcribed books, and hence to men skilled in the law or in any kind of learning. Comp. 2 Sa. viii. 17; 2 Ki. xii. 11; Ezr. vii. 6, 11, 12; Mat. v. 20; xii. 38; xiii. 52; xv. 1; xxiii. 34; 1 Co. i. 20. It is, however, nowhere else applied to a heathen magistrate. It probably denoted a recorder; or a transcriber of the laws; or a chancellor (Kuinoel, Doddridge). This officer had a seat in their deliberative assemblies, and on him it seems to have devolved to keep the peace. The Syriac, “Prince of the city.” The Vulgate and Arabic, “Scribe.” ¶ Had appeased the people—κατέστησεν. Having restrained, quieted, tranquillized, so as to be able to address them. ¶ What man is there. Who is there that can deny this? It is universally known and admitted. This is the language of strong confidence, of reproof, and of indignation. It implied that the worship of Diana was so well established that there was no danger that it could be destroyed by a few Jews, and he therefore reproved them for what he deemed their unreasonable fears. But he little knew the power of that religion which had been the innocent cause of all this tumult; nor that, at no very distant period, this despised religion would overturn not only the worship of Diana at Ephesus, but the splendid idolatry of the mighty Roman empire. ¶ Is a worshipper—μυστής. Margin, temple-keeper. The word here used does not occur elsewhere in the

New Testament. It is derived from μάς, for μάς, a temple, and μαῖνω, to sweep, to cleanse. But among the ancients, the office of keeping their temples was by no means as humble as that of sexton is with us. It was regarded as an office of honour and dignity to have charge of the temples of the gods, and to keep them in order. The term was also given to the cities that were regarded as the peculiar patrons or worshippers of certain gods and goddesses. They esteemed it an honour to be regarded as the peculiar keepers of their temples and images, or as having adopted them as their tutelar divinities. Such was Ephesus in regard to Diana. It was considered to be a high honour that the city was everywhere regarded as being intrusted with the worship of Diana, or with keeping the temple regarded by the whole world as peculiarly her own. See Schleusner on this word. ¶ And of the image. A special guardian of the image, or statue of Diana. ¶ Which fell down, &c. Which was feigned or believed to have been sent down from heaven. See Notes on ver. 27. It is probable that the image was so ancient that the maker of it was unknown, and it was therefore feigned to have fallen from heaven. It was for the interest of the priest to keep up this impression. Many cities pretended to have been favoured in a similar manner with images or statues of the gods, sent directly from heaven. The safety of Troy was supposed to depend on the Palladium, or image of Pallas Minerva, which was believed to have fallen from heaven. Numa pretended that the ancilia, or sacred shields, had descended from heaven. Herodian expressly affirms that “the Phœnicians had no statue of the sun polished by the hand, but only a certain large stone, circular below, and terminated acutely above in the figure of a cone, of a black colour, and that they believed it to have fallen from heaven.” The same thing was affirmed of the ancient Minerva of the Athenian Acropolis (Paus., Att. 26); of the Paeanian Venus, and the Ceres of Sicily (Cic. in Verr., v. 187). It has been supposed by some that this image at Eph-

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to "do nothing rashly."

sus was merely a conical or pyramidal stone which fell from the clouds—a meteorite—and that it was regarded with superstitious reverence, as having been sent from heaven. See the Edinburgh Encycl. art. "Meteorites." ¶ From Jupiter. See Notes on ch. xiv. 12.

36. Seeing then, &c. Since no one can call in question the zeal of the Ephesians on this subject, or doubt the sincerity of their belief, and since there can be no danger that this well-established worship is to be destroyed by the efforts of a few evil-disposed Jews, there is no occasion for this tumult. ¶ Be quiet. Be appeased. The same Greek word which is used in ver. 35, "had appeased the people." ¶ To do nothing rashly. To do nothing in a heated, inconsiderate manner. There is no occasion for tumult and riot. The whole difficulty can be settled in perfect consistency with the maintenance of order.

37. For ye, &c. Demetrius and his friends. The blame was to be traced to them. ¶ Which are neither robbers of churches. The word churches we now apply to edifices reared for purposes of Christian worship. As no such churches had then been built, this translation is unhappy, and is not at all demanded by the original. The Greek word (ιερούλων) is applied properly to those who commit sacrilege; who plunder temples of their sacred things. The meaning here is that Paul and his companions had not been guilty of robbing the temple of Diana, or any other temple. The charge of sacrilege could not be brought against them. Though they had preached against idols and idol worship, yet they had offered no violence to the temples of idolaters, nor had they attempted to strip them of the sacred utensils employed in their service. What they had done, they had done peaceably. ¶ Nor yet blasphemers of your goddess. They had not used harsh or reproachful language of Diana. This had not been charged on them, nor is there the least evidence that they had done it. They had opposed idolatry; had reasoned against it; and had endeavoured to turn the people from it. But there is not the least evidence that they had ever done it in harsh or reproachful language. This shows that men should employ reason, and not harsh or reproachful language against a pervading evil; and that the way to remove it is to enlighten the minds of men, and to convince them of the error of their ways. Men gain nothing by bitter and reviling words; and it is much to obtain the testimony of even the enemies of religion—as Paul did of the chancellor of Ephesus—that no such words had been used in describing their crimes and follies.

38. Have a matter against any man. Have a complaint of injury; if injustice has been done them by anyone. ¶ The law is open. See the margin. 'Αγόρασι ἀγοραῖ, i.e. ἵπισαι. There are court-days; days which are open, or appointed for judicial trials, where such matters can be determined in a proper manner. Perhaps the courts were then held, and the matter might be immediately determined. ¶ And there are deputies. Roman proconsuls. See Notes on ch. xiii. 7. The cause might be brought before them with the certainty that it would be heard and decided. The Syriac reads this in the singular number—"Lo, the proconsul is in the city." ¶ Let them implead one another. Let them accuse each other in the court. The laws are equal, and impartial justice will be done.

39. But if we inquire. If you seek to determine any other matters than that pertaining to the alleged wrong which Demetrius has suffered in his business.

¶ Other matters. Anything respecting public affairs; anything pertaining to the government and the worship of 39 But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a <sup>3</sup>lawful assembly.

Diana. ¶ In a lawful assembly. In an assembly convened, not by tumult and riot, but in conformity to law. This was a tumultuous assemblage, and it was proper in the public officer to demand that they should disperse; and that, if there were any public grievances to be remedied, it should be done in an assembly properly convened. It may be remarked here that the original word rendered assembly is that which is usually in the New Testament rendered church—κοινωνία. It is properly rendered by the word assembly—not denoting here a mixed or tumultuous assemblage, but one called out, or convened in the legal manner. The proper meaning of the word is that which is called out. The church, the Christian assembly of the faithful, is made up of those who are called out from the world.

40. To be called in question. By the government; by the Roman authority. Such a tumult, continued for so long a time, would be likely to attract the attention of the magistrates, and expose them to their displeasure. Popular commotions were justly dreaded by the Roman government; and such an assembly as this, convened without any good cause, would not escape their notice. There was a Roman law which made it capital for anyone to be engaged in promoting a riot. Sui cæstum, et concursum fecerit, capite puniatur: “He who raises a mob, let him be punished with death.”

41. Dismissed the assembly—τὴν ικανησίαν. The word usually translated church. Here it is applied to the irregular and tumultuous assemblage which had convened in a riotous manner.

CHAPTER XX.

1. The uproar. The tumult excited by Demetrius and the workmen. After it had been quieted by the town-clerk, ch. xix. 40, 41. ¶ Embraced them. Saluted them; gave them parting expressions of kindness. Comp. Notes on Lu. vii. 45; Ro. xvi. 16; 1 Co. xvi. 20; 2 Co. xiii. 12; 1 Th. v. 26; 1 Pe. v. 14. The Syriac translates this, “Paul called the disciples, and consoled them, and kissed them.” ¶ To go to Macedonia. On his way to Jerusalem, agreeably to his purpose, as recorded in ch. xix. 21.

2. Over those parts. The parts of country in and near Macedonia. He probably went to Macedonia by Troas, where he expected to find Titus (2 Co. ii. 12); but, not finding him there, he went by himself to Philippi, Thessalonica, &c., and then returned to Greece proper. ¶ Into Greece. Into Greece proper, of which Athens was the capital. While in Macedonia he had great anxiety and trouble, but was at length comforted by the coming of Titus, who brought him intelligence of the liberal disposition of the churches of Greece in regard to the collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem, 2 Co. vii. 5-7. It is probable that the second epistle to the Corinthians was written during this time in Macedonia, and sent to them by Titus.

3. And there abode. Why he remained here is unknown. It is probable that while in Greece he wrote the epistle to the Romans. Comp. Ro. xv. 25-27.

he was about to sail. It would seem from this, that the design of the Jews was to attack the ship in which he was about to sail, or to arrest him on ship-board. This fact determined him to take a much more circuitous route by land, so that the churches of Macedonia were favoured with another visit from him. ¶ Into Syria. On his way to Jerusalem. ¶ He purposed, &c. He resolved to avoid the snare which they had laid for him, and to return by the same way in which he had come into Greece..

4. And there accompanied him. It was usual for some of the disciples to attend the apostles in their journeys. ¶ Into Asia. It is not meant that they attended him from Greece through Macedonia, but that they went with him to Asia, having gone before him, and joined him at Troas. ¶ Sopater of Berea. Perhaps the same person who, in Ro. xvi. 21, is called Sosipater, and who is there said to have been a kinsman of Paul. ¶ Aristarchus. Ch. xix. 29. ¶ Gaius of Derbe. See Notes on ch. xix. 29. ¶ Tychicus. This man was high in the confidence and affection of Paul. In Ep. vi. 21, 22 he styles him “a beloved brother, and faithful minister in the Lord.” ¶ And Trophimus. Trophimus was from Ephesus, ch. xx. 29. When Paul wrote his second epistle to Timothy he was at Miletum, sick, 2 Ti. iv. 20.

5. These going before. Going before Paul and Luke. Dr. Doddridge supposes that only Tychicus and Trophimus went before the others. Perhaps the Greek most naturally demands this interpretation. ¶ Tarried for us. The word “us,” here, shows that Luke had again joined Paul as his companion. In ch. xvi. 12 it appears that Luke was in Philippi, in the house of Lydia. Why he remained there, or why he did not attend Paul in his journey to Athens, Corinth, Ephesus, &c., is not known. It is evident, however, that he here joined him again. ¶ At Troas. See Notes on ch. xvi. 8.

6. After the days of unleavened bread. After the seven days of the Passover, during which they ate only unleavened bread. See Ex. xii. ¶ In five days. They crossed the Aegean Sea. Paul, when he crossed it on a former occasion, did it in two days (ch. xvi. 11, 12); but the navigation of the sea is uncertain, and they were now probably hindered by contrary winds.

7. And upon the first day of the week. Showing thus that this day was then observed by Christians as holy time. Comp. 1 Co. xvi. 2; Re. i. 10. ¶ To break bread. Evidently to celebrate the Lord’s supper. Comp. ch. ii. 46. So the Syriac understands it, by translating it, “to break the eucharist;” that is, the eucharistic bread. It is probable that the apostles and early Christians celebrated the Lord’s supper on every Lord’s day. ¶ And continued his speech until midnight. The discourse of Paul continued until the breaking of day, ver. 11. But it was interrupted about midnight by the accident that occurred to Eutychus. The fact that Paul was about to leave them on the next day, probably to see them no more, was the principal reason why his discourse was so long continued. We are not to suppose, however, that it was one continued or set discourse. No small part of the time might have been passed in hearing and answering questions, though Paul was the chief speaker. The case proves that such seasons of extraordinary devotion may, in peculiar circumstances, be proper. Occasions may arise where it will be proper for Christians to spend a much longer time than usual in public worship. It is evident, however, that such seasons do not often occur.

8 And there were many lights in the "upper chamber where they were gathered together.

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep; and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

8. And there were many lights. Why this circumstance is mentioned is not apparent. It, however, meets one of the slanders of the early enemies of Christianity, that the Christians in their assemblies were accustomed to extinguish all the lights, and to commit every kind of abomination. Perhaps the mention of many lights here is designed to intimate that it was a place of public worship, as not only the Jews, but the Gentiles were accustomed to have many lights burning in such places. ¶ In the upper chamber. See Notes on ch. i. 13.

9. And there sat in a window. The window was left open, probably to avoid the malice of their enemies, who might be disposed otherwise to charge them with holding their assemblies in darkness for purposes of iniquity. The window was probably a mere opening in the wall to let in light, as glass was not common at that time. As the shutters of the window were not closed, there was nothing to prevent Eutychus from falling down. ¶ The third loft. The third story. ¶ And was taken up dead. Some have supposed that he was merely stunned with the fall, and that he was still alive. But the obvious meaning is, that he was actually killed by the fall, and was miraculously restored to life. This is an instance of sleeping in public worship that has some apology. The late hour of the night, and the length of the services, were the excuse. But, though the thing is often done now, yet how seldom is a sleeper in a church furnished with an excuse for it. No practice is more shameful, disrespectful, and abominable than that 11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul; for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

so common of sleeping in the house of God.

10. And fell on him, &c. Probably stretching himself on him as Elisha did on the Shunammite's son, 2 Ki. iv. 33-35. It was an act of tenderness and compassion, evincing a strong desire to restore him to life. ¶ Trouble not yourselves. They would doubtless be thrown into great consternation by such an event. Paul therefore endeavoured to compose their minds by the assurance that he would live. ¶ For his life is in him. He is restored to life. This has all the appearance of having been a miracle. Life was restored to him as Paul spoke.

11. Come up again. To the upper room, ver. 8. ¶ And had broken bread, and eaten. Had taken refreshment. As this is spoken of Paul only, it is evidently distinguished from the celebration of the Lord's supper.

12. Not a little comforted. By the fact that he was alive; perhaps also strengthened by the evidence that a miracle had been wrought.

13. Sailed unto Assos. There were several cities of this name. One was in Lycia; one in the territory of Eolis; one in Mysia; one in Lydia; and another in Epirus. The latter is the one intended here. It was between Troas and Mitylene. The distance to it from Troas by land was about 20 miles, while the voyage round Cape Lectum was nearly twice as far, and accordingly Paul chose to go to it on foot. ¶ Minding himself. Choosing or preferring to go on foot. Most of his journeys were probably performed in this way.

14. Came to Mitylene. This was the capital of the island of Lesbos. It was distinguished by the beauty of its situa-

Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogylgium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would

tion, and the splendour and magnificence of its edifices. The island on which it stood, Lesbos, was one of the largest in the Aegean Sea, and the seventh in the Mediterranean. It is a few miles distant from the coast of Aeolia, and is about 168 miles in circumference. The name of the city now is Castro.

15. Over against Chios. Opposite to. Into the neighbourhood of; or near to it. Chios, called also Coos, is an island in the Archipelago, between Lesbos and Samos. It is on the coast of Asia Minor, and is now called Scio. It will long be remembered as the seat of a dreadful massacre of almost all its inhabitants by the Turks in 1823. ¶ At Samos. This was also an island of the Archipelago, lying off the coast of Lydia, from which it is separated by a narrow strait. These islands were celebrated among the ancients for their extraordinary wines. ¶ Trogylgium. This was the name of a town and promontory of Ionia in Asia Minor, between Ephesus and the mouth of the river Meander, opposite to Samos. The promontory is a spur of Mount Mycale. ¶ Miletus. Called also Miletum. It was a city and seaport, and the ancient capital of Ionia. It was originally composed of a colony of Cretans. It became extremely powerful, and sent out colonies to a great number of cities on the Euxine Sea. It was distinguished for a magnificent temple dedicated to Apollo. It is now called by the Turks Melas. It was the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven wise men of Greece. It was about 40 or 50 miles from Ephesus.

16. To sail by Ephesus. The word by in our translation is ambiguous. We say to go by a place, meaning either to take it in our way and to go to it, or to go past it. Here it means the latter. He intended to sail past Ephesus without going to it. ¶ For he hasted, &c. Had he gone to Ephesus, he would pro-not spend the time in Asia; for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.

17 And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, 'Ye know, q ch.18.21; 24.17. r ch.2.1; 1 Co.16.8. s ch.19.1,10.

bably have been so delayed in his journey that he could not reach Jerusalem at the time of Pentecost. ¶ The day of Pentecost. See Notes on ch. ii. 1.

17. He sent to Ephesus. Perhaps a distance of twenty or thirty miles. ¶ The elders of the church. Who had been appointed while he was there to take charge of the church. See Notes on ch. xv. 2.

18. And when they were come unto him. The discourse which follows is one of the most tender, affectionate, and eloquent which is anywhere to be found. It is strikingly descriptive of the apostle's manner of life while with them; evinces his deep concern for their welfare; is full of tender and kind admonition; expresses the firm purpose of his soul to live to the glory of God, and his expectation to be persecuted still; and is a most affectionate and solemn farewell. No man can read it without being convinced that it came from a heart full of love and kindness; and that it evinces a great and noble purpose to be entirely employed in one great aim and object—the promotion of the glory of God, in the face of danger and of death. ¶ Ye know. From your own observation. He had been with them three years, and could make this solemn appeal to themselves that he had led a faithful and devoted life. How happy is it when a minister can thus appeal to those with whom he has laboured in proof of his own sincerity and fidelity! How comforting to himself, and how full of demonstration to a surrounding world, of the truth and power of the gospel which is preached!

We may further remark that this appeal furnishes strong proof of the purity and holiness of Paul's life. The elders at Ephesus must have had abundant opportunity to know him. They had seen him, and heard him publicly, and in their private dwellings. A man does not make such an appeal unless he has a consciousness of integrity, nor unless there is conclusive proof of his integrity. It is strong evidence of the holiness of the character of the apostles, and proof that they were not impostors, that they could thus appeal with the utmost assurance to those who had every opportunity of knowing them. ¶ From the first day. He was with them three years, ver. 31. ¶ Into Asia. Asia Minor. They would probably know not only how he had demeaned himself while with them, but also how he had conducted in other places near them. ¶ After what manner I have been with you. How I have lived and acted. What has been my manner of life. What had been his mode of life he specifies in the following verses. ¶ At all seasons. At all times.

19. Serving the Lord. In the discharge of the appropriate duties of his apostolic office, and in private life. To discharge aright our duties in any vocation is serving the Lord. Religion is often represented in the Bible as a service rendered to the Lord. ¶ With all humility. Without arrogance, pride, or a spirit of dictation; without a desire to “lord it over God’s heritage,” without being elated with the authority of the apostolic office, the variety of the miracles which he was enabled to perform, or the success which attended his labours. What an admirable model for all who are in the ministry; for all who are endowed with talents and learning; for all who meet with remarkable success in their work! The proper effect of such success, and of such talent, will be to produce true humility. The greatest endowments are usually connected with the most simple and child-like humility. ¶ And with many tears. Paul not unfrequently gives evidence of the tenderness of his heart, of his regard for the souls of men, and of his deep solicitude for the salvation of sinners, ver. 31; Phi. iii. 18; 2 Co. ii. 4. The particular thing, however, here specified as producing weeping was the opposition of the Jews. But it cannot be supposed that those tears were shed from an apprehension of personal danger. It was rather because the opposition of the Jews impeded his work, and retarded his progress in winning souls to Christ. A minister of the gospel will, (1) Feel, and deeply feel for the salvation of his people. He will weep over their condition when he sees them going astray, and in danger of perishing. He will, (2) Be specially affected with opposition, because it will retard his work, and prevent the progress and the triumph of the gospel. It is not because it is a personal concern, but because it is the cause of his Master. ¶ And temptations. Trials arising from their opposition. We use the word temptation in a more limited sense, to denote inducements offered to one to lead him into sin. The word in the Scriptures most commonly denotes trials of any kind. ¶ Which befell me. Which happened to me; which I encountered. ¶ By the lying in wait, &c. By their snares and plots against my life. Comp. ver. 3. Those snares and plans were designed to blast his reputation and to destroy his usefulness.

20. I kept back nothing, &c. No doctrine, no admonition, no labour. Whatever he judged would promote their salvation, he faithfully and fearlessly delivered. A minister of the gospel must be the judge of what will be profitable to the people of his charge. His aim should be to promote their real welfare—to preach that which will be profitable. His object will not be to please their fancy, to gratify their taste, to flatter their pride, or to promote his own popularity. “All Scripture is profitable” (2 Ti. iii. 16); and it will be his aim to declare that only which will tend to promote their real welfare. Even if it be unpalatable; if it be the language of reproof and admonition; if it be doctrine to which the heart is by nature opposed; if it run counter to the native prejudices and passions of men; yet, by the grace of God, it should be, and will be delivered. No doctrine that will be profitable should be kept back; no labour that may promote the welfare of the flock should be withheld. ¶ But have showed you. Have announced or declared to you. The word here used (ἀναγγέλω) is most commonly applied to preaching in public assemblies, or in a public manner. ¶ Have taught you publicly. In the public assembly; by public preaching. ¶ And from house to house. Though Paul preached in public, and though his time was much occupied in manual labour for his own support (ver. 34), yet he did not esteem his public preaching to be all that was required of him, nor his daily occupation to be an excuse for not visiting from house to house. We may observe here, (1) That Paul's example is a warrant and an implied injunction for family visitation by a pastor. If proper in Ephesus, it is proper still. If practicable in that city, it is in other cities. If it was useful there, it will be elsewhere. If it furnished to him consolation in the retrospect when he came to look over his ministry, and if it was one of the things which enabled him to say, "I am pure from the blood of all men," it will be so in other cases. (2) The design for which ministers should visit should be a religious design. Paul did not visit for mere ceremony; for idle gossip, or chit-chat; or to converse on the news or politics of the day. His aim was to show the way of salvation, and to teach in private what he taught in public. (3) How much of this is to be done is, of course, to be left to the discretion of every minister. Paul, in private visiting, did not neglect public instruction. The latter he evidently considered to be his main or chief business. His high views of preaching are evinced in his life, and in his letters to Timothy and Titus. Yet, while public preaching is the main, the prime, the leading business of a minister, and while his first efforts should be directed to preparation for that, he may and should find time to enforce his public instructions by going from house to house; and often he will find that his most immediate and apparent success will result from such family instructions. (4) If it is his duty to visit, it is the duty of his people to receive him as becomes an ambassador of Christ. They should be willing to listen to his instructions; to treat him with kindness, and to aid his endeavours in bringing a family under the influence of religion.

21. Testifying. Bearing witness to the necessity of repentance toward God. Or teaching them the nature of repentance, and exhorting them to repent and believe. Perhaps the word testifying includes both ideas of giving evidence, and of urging with great earnestness and affection that repentance and faith were necessary. See 1 Ti. v. 21; 2 Ti. ii. 14; where the word here used, and here translated testify, is there translated, correctly, charge, in the sense of strongly urging, or entreating with great earnestness. ¶ And to the Greeks. To all who were not Jews. The Greeks properly denoted those who lived in Greece, and who spoke the Greek language. But the phrase, "Jews and Greeks," among the Hebrews, denoted the whole human race. He urged the necessity of repentance and faith in all. Religion makes no distinction, but regards all as sinners, and as needing salvation by the blood of the Redeemer. ¶ Repentance toward God. See Notes on Mat. iii. 2. Repentance is to be exercised "toward God," because, (1) Sin has been committed against him, and it is proper that we express our sorrow to the Being whom we have offended; and, (2) Because God only can pardon. Sincere repentance exists only where there is a willingness to make acknowledgment to the very Being whom we have offended or injured. ¶ And faith. See Notes on Mar. xvi. 16. ¶ Toward—us. In regard to; in confidence in the work and merits of the Lord Jesus. This is required, because there is no other one who can save from sin. See Notes on ch. iv. 12.

22. Bound in the spirit. Strongly urged or constrained by the influences of the Holy Spirit on my mind. Not by any desire to see the place where my fathers worshipped, and not urged merely by reason, but by the convictions and mighty promptings of the Holy Spirit to do my duty in this case. The expression “bound in the spirit” (διδεμένος τῷ πνεύματι) is one of great strength and emphasis. The word δια, to bind, is usually applied to confinement by cords, fetters, or bands (Mat. xiii. 30; xiv. 3; xxi. 2); and then it denotes any strong obligation (Ro. vii. 2), or anything that strongly urges or impels, Mat. xxi. 2. When we are strongly urged by the convictions of duty, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, we should not shrink from danger or from death. Duty is to be done at all hazards. It is ours to follow the directions of God; results we may safely and confidently leave with him. ¶ Not knowing the things that shall befall me there. He knew that calamities and trials of some kind awaited him (ver. 23), but he did not know, (1) Of what particular kind they would be; nor, (2) Their issue, whether it would be life or death. We should commit our way unto God, not knowing what trials may be before us in life; but knowing that, if we are found faithful at the post of duty, we have nothing to fear in the result.

23. Save that. Except that. This was all that he knew, that bonds and afflictions were to be his portion. ¶ The Holy Ghost witnesseth. Either by direct revelation to him, or by the predictions of inspired men whom Paul might meet. An instance of the latter mode occurs in ch. xxi. 11. It is probable that the meaning here is that the Holy Ghost had deeply impressed the mind of Paul by his direct influences, and by his experience in every city, that bonds and trials were to be his portion. Such had been his experience in every city where he had preached the gospel by the direction of the Holy Ghost, that he regarded it as his certain portion that he was thus to be afflicted. ¶ In every city. In almost every city where Paul had been, he had been subjected to these trials. He had been persecuted, stoned, and scourged. So uniform was this, so constant had been his experience in this way, that he regarded it as his certain portion to be thus afflicted, and he approached Jerusalem, and every other city, with a confident expectation that such trials awaited him there. ¶ Saying. In his experience, by direct revelation, and by the mouth of prophets, ch. xxi. 11. When Paul was called to the apostleship it was predicted that he would suffer much, ch. ix. 16. ¶ Bonds. Chains. That I would be bound, as prisoners are who are confined. ¶ Abide me. See the margin. They remain or wait for me; that is, I must expect to suffer them.

24. Move me. Alarm me, or deter me from my purpose. Greek, “I make an account of none of them.” I do not regard them as of any moment, or as worth consideration in the great purpose to which I have devoted my life. ¶ Neither count I my life. I do not consider my life as so valuable as to be retained by turning away from bonds and persecutions. I am certain of bonds and afflictions; I am willing also, if it be necessary, to lay down my life in the prosecution of the same purpose. ¶ Dear unto myself. So precious or valuable as to be retained at the sacrifice of duty. I am willing to sacrifice it if it be necessary. This was the spirit of the Saviour, and of all the early Christians. Duty is of more importance than life; and when either duty or life is to be sacrificed, life is to be cheerfully surrendered. ¶ So that. This is my main object, to finish my course with joy. It is implied here, (1) That this was the great purpose which Paul had in view. (2) That if he should even lay down his life in this cause, it would be a finishing his course with joy. In the faithful discharge of duty, he had nothing to fear. Life would be ended with peace whenever God should require him to finish his course. ¶ Finish my course. Close my career as an apostle and a Christian. Life is thus represented as a course, or race that is to be run, 2 Ti. iv. 7; He. xii. 1; 1 Co. ix. 24; Ac. xiii. 25. ¶ With joy. With the approbation of conscience and of God, with peace in the recollection of the past.

of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

25 And now, behold, I know

Man should strive so to live that he will have nothing to regret when he lies on a bed of death. It is a glorious privilege to finish life with joy. It is most sad when the last hours are embittered with the reflection that life has been wasted. The only way in which life may be finished with joy is by meeting faithfully every duty, and encountering, as Paul did, every trial, with a constant desire to glorify God. ¶ And the ministry. That I may fully discharge the duty of the apostolic office, the preaching of the gospel. In 2 Ti. iv. 5, he charges Timothy to make full proof of his ministry. He here shows that this was the ruling principle of his own life. ¶ Which I have received of the Lord Jesus. Which the Lord Jesus has committed to me, Ac. ix. 15-17. Paul regarded his ministry as an office intrusted to him by the Lord Jesus himself. On this account he deemed it to be peculiarly sacred, and of high authority, Ga. i. 12. Every minister has been intrusted with an office by the Lord Jesus. He is not his own; and his great aim should be to discharge fully and entirely the duties of that office. ¶ To testify the gospel. To bear witness to the good news of the favour of God. This is the great design of the ministry. It is to bear witness to a dying world of the good news that God is merciful, and that his favour may be made manifest to sinners. From this verse we may learn, (1) That we all have a course to run, a duty to perform. Ministers have an allotted duty; and so have men in all ranks and professions. (2) We should not be deterred by danger, or the fear of death, from the discharge of that duty. We are safe only when we are doing the will of God. We are really in danger only when we neglect our duty, and make the great God our enemy. (3) We should so live as that the end of our course may be joy. It is, at best, a solemn thing to die; but death may be a scene of triumph and of joy. (4) It matters little when, or where, or how we die, if we die in the discharge of our duty to God. He will order the circumstances of our departure, and He can sustain us in the last conflict. Happy is that life which is spent in doing the will of God, and peaceful that death which closes a life of toil and trial in the service of the Lord Jesus.

25. I know that ye all. Perhaps this means simply, "I have no expectation of seeing you again; I have every reason to suppose that this is my final interview with you." He expected to visit Ephesus no more. The journey to Jerusalem was dangerous. Trials and persecutions he knew awaited him. Besides, it is evident that he designed to turn his attention to other countries, and to visit Rome; and probably he had already formed the purpose of going into Spain. See Ac. xix. 21; comp. Ro. xv. 23-28. From all these considerations it is evident that he had no expectation of being again at Ephesus. It is probable, however, that he did again return to that city. See Notes on ch. xxvii. 31. ¶ Among whom I have gone preaching. Among whom I have preached. The parting of a minister and people is among the most tender and affecting of the separations that occur on earth. ¶ The kingdom of God. Making known the nature of the reign of God on earth by the Messiah. See Notes on Mat. iii. 2.

26. Wherfore. In view of the past, of my ministry and labours among you, I appeal to your own selves to testify that I have been faithful. ¶ I take you to record. Greek, I call you to witness. If any of you are lost; if you prove unfaithful to God, I appeal to yourselves that the fault is not mine. It is well when a minister can make this appeal, and call his hearers to bear testimony to his own faithfulness. Ministers who preach the gospel with fidelity may thus appeal to their hearers; and in the day of judgment may call on themselves to witness that the fault of the ruin of the soul is not to be charged to them. ¶ That I am pure. I am not to be charged with the guilt of your condemnation, as owing to my unfaithfulness. This does not mean that he set up a claim to absolute perfection; but that, in the matter under consideration, he had a conscience void of offence. ¶ The blood of all men. The word blood is used often in the sense of death, of blood shed; and hence of the guilt or crime of putting one to death, Mat. xxiii. 35; xxvii. 25; Ac. v. 28; xviii. 6. It here means that if they should die the second death; if they should be lost for ever, he would not be to blame. He had discharged his duty in faithfully warning and teaching them; and now, if they were lost, the fault would be their own, not his. ¶ All men. All classes of men—Jews and Gentiles. He had warned and instructed all alike. Ministers may have many fears that their hearers will be lost. Their aim, however, should be, (1) To save them, if possible; and, (2) If they are lost, that it should be by no neglect or fault of theirs.

27. For. This verse contains a reason for what had been said in the previous verse. It shows why Paul regarded himself as innocent if they should be lost. ¶ I have not shunned. I have not kept back; I have not been deterred by fear, by the desire of popularity, by the fact that the doctrines of the gospel are unpalatable to men, from declaring them fully. The proper meaning of the word translated here, “I have not shunned” (ὑπερυπάμην), is to disguise any important truth; to withdraw it from public view; to decline publishing it from fear, or an apprehension of the consequences. Paul means that he had not disguised any truth; he had not withdrawn or kept it from open view, by any apprehension of the effect which it might have on their minds. Truth may be disguised or kept back, (1) By avoiding the subject altogether from timidity, or from an apprehension of giving offence if it is openly proclaimed; or, (2) By giving it too little prominence, so that it shall be lost in the multitude of other truths; or, (3) By presenting it amidst a web of metaphysical speculations, and entangling it with other subjects; or, (4) By making use of other terms than the Bible does, for the purpose of involving it in a mist, so that it cannot be understood. Men may resort to this course, (1) Because the truth itself is unpalatable; (2) Because they may apprehend the loss of reputation or support; (3) Because they may not love the truth themselves, and choose to conceal its prominent and offensive points; (4) Because they may be afraid of the rich, the great, and the gay, and apprehend that they shall excite their indignation; and, (5) By a love of metaphysical philosophy, and a constant effort to bring everything to the test of their own reason. Men often preach a philosophical explanation of a doctrine instead of the doctrine itself. They deserve the credit of ingenuity, but not that of being open and bold proclaimers of the truth of God. ¶ The whole counsel — τὰς πάσας τὰς βουλὰς. The word counsel (βουλὴ) denotes proper consolation, deliberation, and then will or purpose, Lu. xxiii. 51; Ac. ii. 23. It means here the will or purpose of God, as revealed in regard to the salvation of men. Paul had made a full statement of that plan—of the guilt of men, of the claims of the law, of the need of a Saviour, of the provisions of mercy, and of the state of future rewards and punishments. Ministers ought to declare all that counsel, because God commands it; because it is needful for the salvation of men; and because the message is not theirs, but God’s, and they have no right to change, to disguise, or to withhold it. And if it is the duty of ministers to declare that counsel, it is the duty of a people to listen to it with respect and candour, and with a desire to know the truth, and to be saved by it. Declaring the counsel of God will do no good unless it is received into honest and humble hearts, and with a disposition to know what God has revealed for salvation.

28. Take heed, therefore. Attend to; be on your guard against the dangers which beset you, and seek to discharge your duty with fidelity. ¶ To yourselves. To your own piety, opinions, and mode of life. This is the first duty of a minister; for without this all his preaching will be vain. Comp. Col. iv. 17; 1 Ti. iv. 14. Ministers are beset with peculiar dangers and temptations, and against them they should be on their guard. In addition to the temptations which they have in common with other men, they are exposed to those peculiar to their office—arising from

flattery, and ambition, and despondency, and worldly-mindedness. And just in proportion to the importance of their office is the importance of the injunction of Paul, to take heed to themselves. ¶ And to all the flock. The church; the charge intrusted to them. The church of Christ is often compared to a flock. See Notes on Jn. x. 1-20; also Jn. xxi. 15-17. The word flock here refers particularly to the church, and not to the congregation in general, for it is represented to be that which was purchased with the blood of the atonement. The command here is, (1) To take heed to the church; that is, to instruct, teach, and guide it; to guard it from enemies (ver. 29), and to make it their special object to promote its welfare. (2) To take heed to ALL the flock—the rich and the poor, the bond and the free, the old and the young. It is the duty of ministers to seek to promote the welfare of each individual of their charge—not to pass by the poor because they are poor, and not to be afraid of the rich because they are rich. A shepherd regards the interest of the tenderest of the fold as much as the strongest; and a faithful minister will seek to advance the interest of all. To do this he should know all his people; should be acquainted, as far as possible, with their peculiar wants, character, and dangers, and should devote himself to their welfare as his first and main employment. ¶ Over the which the Holy Ghost. Though they had been appointed, doubtless, by the church, or by the apostles, yet it is here represented as having been done by the Holy Ghost. It was by him, (1) Because he had called and qualified them for their work; and, (2) Because they had been set apart in accordance with his direction and will. ¶ Overseers—ἐπίσκοποι. Bishops. The word properly denotes those who are appointed to oversee or inspect anything. This passage proves that the name bishop was applicable to elders; that in the time of the apostles, the name bishop and presbyter, or elder, was given to the same class of officers, and, of course, that there was no distinction between them. One term was originally used to denote office, the other age, and both were applied to the same persons in the church.

The same thing occurs in Tit. i. 5-7, where those who in ver. 5 are called elders, are in ver. 7 called bishops. See also 1 Ti. iii. 1-10; Phi. i. 1. ¶ *To feed—τροφεῖν.* This word is properly applied to the care which a shepherd exercises over his flock. See Notes on Jn. xxi. 15, 16. It is applicable not only to the act of feeding a flock, but also to that of protecting, guiding, and guarding it. It here denotes not merely the duty of instructing the church, but also of governing it; of securing it from enemies (ver. 29), and of directing its affairs so as to promote its edification and peace. ¶ The church of God. This is one of three passages in the New Testament in regard to which there has been a long controversy among critics, which is not yet determined. The controversy is, whether this is the correct and genuine reading. The other two passages are, 1 Ti. iii. 16, and 1 Jn. v. 7. The MSS. and versions here exhibit three readings: the church of GOD (τοῦ Θεοῦ); the church of THE LORD (τοῦ Κυρίου); and the church of THE LORD and GOD (Κυρίου καὶ Θεοῦ). The Latin Vulgate reads it God. The Syriac, the Lord. The Arabic, the Lord God. The Ethiopic, the Christian family of God. The reading which now occurs in our text is found in no ancient MSS. except the Vatican Codex, and occurs nowhere among the writings of the fathers except in Athanasius, in regard to whom also there is a various reading. It is retained, however, by Beza, Mill, and Whitby as the genuine reading. The most ancient MSS., and the best, read the church of the Lord, and this probably was the genuine text. It has been adopted by Griesbach and Wetstein; and many important reasons may be given why it should be retained. See those reasons stated at length in Kuinoel in loco; see also Griesbach and Wetstein. It may be remarked, that a change from Lord to God might easily be made in the transcribing, for in ancient MSS. the words are not written at length, but are abbreviated. Thus, the name Christ (Χριστός) is written ΧΟΣ; the name God (Θεός) is written ΘΟΣ; the name Lord (Κυρίος) is written ΚΟΣ; and a mistake, therefore, of a single letter would lead to the variations observable in the manuscripts. Comp. in this place the note of Mill in his Greek Testament. The authority for the name God is so doubtful that it should not be used as a proof text on the divinity of Christ, and is not necessary, as there are so many undisputed passages on that subject. ¶ Which he hath purchased. The word here used (πιστωσατε) occurs but in one other place in the New Testament: 1 Ti. iii. 13, "For they that have used the office of deacon well, purchase to themselves a good degree and great boldness in the faith." The word properly means to acquire or gain anything; to make it ours. This may be done by a price, or by labour, &c. The noun (περινοία) derived from this verb is several times used in the New Testament, and denotes acquisition: 1 Th. v. 9, "God hath appointed us to obtain [unto the obtaining or acquisition of] salvation;" 2 Th. ii. 14, "Whereunto he called you by our gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ;" 1 Pe. ii. 9; Tit. ii. 14; Ep. i. 14. In this place it means that Christ had acquired, gained, or procured, the church for himself by paying his own life as the price. The church is often represented as having thus been bought with a price, 1 Co. vi. 20; vii. 23; 2 Pe. ii. 1. ¶ With his own blood. With the sacrifice of his own life; for blood is often put for life, and to shed the blood is equivalent to taking the life. See Notes on Ro. iii. 25. The doctrines taught here are, (1) That the death of Christ was an atoning sacrifice; that he offered himself to purchase a people to his own service. (2) That the church is, therefore, of peculiar value—a value to be estimated by the price paid for it. Comp. 1 Pe. i. 18, 19. (3) That this fact should make the purity and salvation of the church an object of special solicitude with ministers of the gospel. They should be deeply affected in view of that blood which has been shed for the church; and they should guard and defend it as having been bought with the highest price in the universe. The chief consideration that will make ministers faithful and self-denying is, that the church has been bought with a price. If the Lord Jesus so loved it; if he gave himself for it, they should be willing to deny themselves; to watch, and toil, and pray, that the great object of his death—the purity and the salvation of that church—may be obtained.

29. For I know this. By what he had seen in other places; by his knowledge of human nature, and of the dangers to which they were exposed; and by the guidance of inspiration. ¶ After my departure. His presence had been the means of guarding the church, and preserving it from these dangers. Now that the founder and guide of the church was to be removed, they would be exposed to dissensions and dangers. ¶ Grievous wolves. Heavy (βαρύς), strong, mighty, dangerous wolves—so strong that the feeble flock would not be able to resist them. The term wolves is used to denote the enemies of the flock—false, and hypocritical, and dangerous teachers. Comp. Mat. x. 16. ¶ Enter in among you. From abroad; doubtless referring particularly to the Jews, who might be expected to distract and divide them. ¶ Not sparing the flock. Seeking to destroy the church. The Jews would regard it with peculiar hostility, and would seek to destroy it in every way. Probably they would approach them with great professed friendship for them, and expressing a desire only to defend the laws of Moses.

30. Also of your own selves. From your own church; from those who profess to be Christians. ¶ Speaking perverse things. Crooked, perverted, distracting doctrines (διστρεπτικά). Comp. Notes on Ac. xiii. 10. They would proclaim doctrines tending to distract and divide the church. The most dangerous enemies which the church has had have been nurtured in its own bosom, and have consisted of those who have perverted the true doctrines of the gospel. Among the Ephesians, as among the Corinthians (1 Co. i. 11-13), there might be parties formed; there might be men influenced by ambition, like Diotrophes (3 Jn. 9), or like Phygellus or Hermogenes (2 Ti. i. 15), or like Hymenaeus and Alexander, 1 Ti. i. 20.

31 Therefore watch, and remember that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.

Men under the influence of ambition, or from the love of power or popularity, form parties in the church, produce divisions and distractions, and greatly retard its internal prosperity, and mar its peace. The church of Christ would have little to fear from external enemies if it nurtured no foes in its own bosom; and all the power of persecutors is not so much to be dreaded as the plans, the parties, the strifes, the heartburnings, and the contentions which are produced by those who love and seek power, among the professed friends of Christ.

31. Therefore watch. Mat. xxiv. 42. In view of the dangers which beset yourselves (ver. 28), the danger from men not connected with the church (ver. 29), and the danger which will arise from the love of power among yourselves (ver. 30), be on your guard. Observe the approach of danger, and set yourselves against it. ¶ Remember. Recall my counsels and admonitions in reference to these dangers. ¶ By the space of three years. In ch. xix. 10, we are told that Paul spent two years in the school of Tyrannus. In ch. xix. 8, it is said that he was teaching in the synagogue at Ephesus three months. In addition to this, it is not improbable that he spent some months more in Ephesus in instructing the church in other places. Perhaps, however, by the phrase three years, he meant to use merely a round number, denoting about three years; or, in accordance with the Jewish custom, part of each of the three years—one whole year, and a considerable portion of the two others. Comp. Notes on Mat. xii. 40. ¶ I ceased not. I continued to do it. ¶ To warn. To admonish; to place before the mind (νουθετῶ); setting the danger and duty of each individual before him. ¶ Every one. He had thus set them an example of what he had enjoined, ver. 28. He had admonished each individual, whatever was his rank or standing. It is well when a minister can refer to his own example as an illustration of what he meant by his precepts. ¶ Night and day. Continually; by every opportunity. ¶ With tears. Expressive of his deep feeling, and his deep interest in their welfare. See Notes on ver. 19.

32. And now, brethren. About to leave them, probably to see them no more, he committed them to the faithful care and keeping of God. Amidst all the dangers of the church, when human strength fails or is withdrawn, we may commit that church to the safe keeping and tender care of God. ¶ I commend you. I commit you; I place you (ταξιδιώσω) in his hands and under his protection. See Notes on Ac. xiv. 23. ¶ And to the word of his grace. That is, to his gracious word; to his merciful promise. Paul refers, doubtless, to the gospel, including its promises of support, its consoling truths, and its directions to seek all needful help and comfort in God. ¶ Which is able. Which has power. Τὸ δύναμις. Which word, or gospel, has power to build you up, He. iv. 12, "For the word of God is quick [living, life-giving, ζῶντας], and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword," &c. Comp. Is. llix. 2; Je. xxiii. 29, "Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" It is implied here that the gospel is not a dead letter; that it has power to accomplish a great work; that it is adapted to the end in view, the conversion and sanctification of the soul. There is no danger in representing the gospel as mighty, and as fitted by infinite wisdom to secure the renovation and salvation of man. Comp. Ro. i. 16; 1 Co. i. 18; 2 Co. x. 4. ¶ To build you up. The word used here is properly applied to a house which is reared and completed by slow degrees, and by toil. It here means to establish, make firm, or permanent, and hence to instruct, to establish in doctrine and in hope. The idea is, that the word of God was able to confirm and establish them, amidst the dangers to which they would be exposed. ¶ And to give you an inheritance. To make you heirs, or to make you joint partakers with the saints of the blessings in reserve for the children of God. Those blessings are often represented as an inheritance, or heirship, which God will confer on his adopted children, Mat. xix. 29; xxv. 34; Mar. x. 17; He. vi. 12; Re. xxi. 7; Ep. i. 11; v. 5; Col. i. 12; iii. 24; Ro. viii. 17; Ga. iii. 29. ¶ Among all them which are sanctified. With all who are holy; with all the saints. See Notes on Jn. x. 36. Those who shall be saved are made holy. They who receive a part in the inheritance beyond the grave will have it only among the sanctified and the pure. They must, therefore, be pure themselves, or they can have no part in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

33. I have coveted. I have not desired. I have not made it an object of my living among you to obtain your property. Thus (2 Co. xii. 14) he says, "I seek not yours, but you." Paul had power to demand support in the ministry as the reward of his labour, 1 Co. ix. 13, 14. Yet he did not choose to exercise it, lest it should bring the charge of avarice against the ministry, 1 Co. ix. 12, 15. He also had power in another respect. He had a vast influence over the people. The early Christians were disposed to commit their property to the disposal of the apostles. See Ac. iv. 34, 35, 37. The heathen had been accustomed to devote their property to the support of religion. Of this propensity, if the object of Paul had been to make money, he might have availed himself, and have become enriched. Deceivers often thus impose on people for the purpose of amassing wealth; and one of the incidental but striking proofs of the truth of the Christian religion is here furnished in the appeal which the apostle Paul made to his hearers, that this had not been his motive. If it had been, how easy would it have been for them to have contradicted him! and who, in such circumstances, would have dared to make such an appeal? The circumstances of the case, therefore, prove that the object of the apostle was not to amass wealth. And this fact is an important proof of the truth of the religion which he defended. What should have induced him to labour and toil in this manner but a conviction of the truth of Christianity? And if he really believed it was true, it is, in his circumstances, a strong proof that this religion is from heaven. See this proof stated in Faber's Difficulties of Infidelity, and in Lord Lyttleton's Letter on the Conversion of St. Paul. ¶ Or apparel. Raiment. Changes of raiment among the ancients, as at present among the Orientals, constituted an important part of their property. See Notes on Mat. vi. 19.

34. Yea, ye yourselves know. By your own acquaintance with my manner of life. In Corinth he had lived and laboured with Apollos (Note, ch. xviii. 3); and he refers elsewhere to the fact that he had supported himself, in part at least, by his own labour, 1 Co. iv. 12; 1 Th. ii. 9; 2 Th. iii. 8. We may hence learn that it is no discredit to a minister to labour. Whatever it may be to a people who put him under a necessity to toil for his support, yet the example of Paul shows that a man should rejoice in the privilege of preaching the gospel, even if it is done while he is obliged to resort to labour for his daily bread. It is well when a minister of the gospel can make an appeal to his people like this of Paul, and say, "I have coveted no man's gold, or silver, or apparel." Every minister should so live that he can make this appeal to their own consciences of the sincerity and disinterestedness of his labours from the pulpit; or when called to separate from them as Paul did; or when on a dying bed. Every minister of the gospel, when he comes to lie down to die, will desire to be able to make this appeal, and to leave a solemn testimony there, that it was not for gold, or ease, or fame, that he toiled in the ministerial office. How much more influence will such a man have than he who has been worldly-minded; he who has sought to become rich; and he, the only memorials of whose life is, that he has sought "the fleece, not the flock"—that he has gained the property, not the souls of men.

35. I have showed you. I have taught you by instruction and example. I have not merely discoursed about it, but have shewed you how to do it. ¶ All things. Or, in respect to all things. In everything that respects preaching and the proper mode of life, I have for three years set you an example, illustrating the design, nature, and duties of the office by my own self-denials and toil. ¶ How that. Or, that—ēti. I have showed you that ye should by so labouring support the weak. ¶ So labouring. Labouring as I have done. Setting this example, and ministering in this way to the wants of others. ¶ To support the weak. To provide for the wants of the sick and feeble members of the flock, who are unable to labour for themselves. The weak here denote the poor, the needy, the infirm. ¶ And to remember. To call to mind for encouragement, and with the force of a command. ¶ The words of the Lord Jesus. These words are nowhere recorded by the evangelists. But they did not pretend to record all his sayings and instructions. Comp. Jn. xxi. 25. There is the highest reason to suppose that many of his sayings which are not recorded would be treasured up by those who heard them; would be transmitted to others; and would be regarded as a precious part of his instructions. Paul evidently addresses the elders of Ephesus as if they had heard this before, and were acquainted with it. Perhaps he had himself reminded them of it. This is one of the Redeemer's most precious sayings; and it seems even to have a peculiar value from the fact that it is not recorded in the regular and professed histories of his life. It comes to us recovered, as it were, from the great mass of his unrecorded sayings; rescued from that oblivion to which it was hastening if left to mere tradition, and placed in permanent form in the sacred writings by the act of an apostle who had never seen the Saviour before his crucifixion. It is a precious relic—a memento of the Saviour—and the effect of it is to make us regret that more of his words were not recovered from an uncertain tradition, and placed in a permanent form by an inspired penman. God, however, who knows what is requisite to guide us, has directed the

Jesus, how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

words which are needful for the welfare of the church, and has preserved by inspiration the doctrines which are adapted to convert and bless man. ¶ It is more blessed to give. It is a higher privilege; it tends more to the happiness of the individual and of the world. The giver is more blessed or happy than the receiver. This appears, (1) Because it is a condition for which we should be thankful when we are in a situation to promote the happiness of others. (2) Because it tends to promote the happiness of the benefactor himself. There is pleasure in the act of giving when it is done with pure motives. It promotes our own peace; is followed by happiness in the recollection of it; and will be followed by happiness for ever. That is the most truly happy man who is most benevolent. He is the most miserable who has never known the luxury of doing good, but who lives to gain all he can, and to hoard all he gains. (3) It is blessed in the reward that shall result from it. Those who give from a pure motive God will bless. They will be rewarded, not only in the peace which they shall experience in this life, but in the higher bliss of heaven, Mat. xxv. 34-36. We may also remark that this is a sentiment truly great and noble. It is worthy of the Son of God. It is that on which he himself acted when he came to give pardon to the guilty, comfort to the disconsolate and the mourner, peace to the anxious sinner, sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, life to the dead, and heaven to the guilty and the lost. Acting on this, he gave his own tears to weep over human sorrows and human guilt; his own labours and toils to instruct and save man; his own life a sacrifice for sin on the cross. Loving to give, he has freely given us all things. Loving to give, he delights in the same character in his followers, and seeks that they who have wealth, and strength, and influence, should be willing to give all to save the world. Imitating his great example, and complying with his command, the church shall yet learn more and more to give its wealth to bless the poor and needy; its sons and its daughters to bear the gospel to the benighted heathen; its undivided and constant efforts to save a lost world. Here closes this speech of Paul; an address of inimitable tenderness and beauty. Happy would it be if every minister could bid such an adieu to his people, when called to part from them; and happy if, at the close of life, every Christian could leave the world with a like consciousness that he had been faithful in the discharge of his duty. Thus dying, it will be blessed to leave the world; and thus would the example of the saints live in the memory of survivors long after they themselves have ascended to their rest.

36. He kneeled down. The usual attitude of prayer. It is the proper posture of a suppliant. It indicates reverence and humility; and is represented in the Scriptures as the usual attitude of devotion, 2 Ch. vi. 13; Da. vi. 10; Lu. xxii. 41; Ac. vii. 60; ix. 40; xxi. 5; Ro. xi. 4; Phi. ii. 10; Ep. iii. 14; Mar. i. 40.

37. Wept sore. Wept much. Greek, "There was a great weeping of all." ¶ And fell on Paul's neck. Embraced him, as a token of tender affection. The same thing Joseph did when he met his aged father Jacob, Ge. xlvi. 29. ¶ And kissed him. This was the common token of affection. See Notes on Mat. xxvi. 48; Lu. xv. 20; Ro. xvi. 16; 1 Co. xvi. 20.

38. Sorrowing most of all, &c. This was a most tender and affectionate parting scene. It can be more easily imagined than described. We may learn from it, (1) That the parting of ministers and people is a most solemn event, and should be one of much tenderness and affection. (2) The effect of true religion is to make the heart more tender; to make friendship more affectionate and sacred; and to unite more closely the bonds of love. (3) Ministers of the gospel should be prepared to leave their people with the same consciousness of fidelity and the same kindness and love which Paul evinced. They should live such lives as to be able to look back upon their whole ministry as pure and disinterested, and as having been employed in guarding the flock, and in making known to them the whole counsel of God. So parting, they may separate in peace; and so living and acting, they will be prepared to give up their account with joy, and not with grief. May God grant to every minister the spirit which Paul evinced at Ephesus, and enable each one, when called to leave his people by death or otherwise, to do it with the same consciousness of fidelity which Paul evinced when he left his people to see their face no more.

CHAPTER XXI.

1. After we were gotten from them. After we had left the elders at Miletus, ch. xx. 38. They were on their way to Jerusalem. ¶ Unto Coos. This was a small island in the Grecian Archipelago, a short distance from the south-western point of Asia Minor. It is now called Stan-co. It was celebrated for its fertility, and for the wine and silk-worms which it produced. It was about 40 miles south of Miletus. ¶ Unto Rhodes. This was also an island in the Grecian Archipelago. On the island was a city of the same name, which was principally distinguished for its brazen Colossus, which was built by Chares of Lyndus. It stood across the mouth of the harbour, and was so high that vessels could pass between its legs. It stood fifty-six years, and was then thrown down by an earthquake. It was reckoned as one of the seven wonders of the world. When the Saracens took possession of this island they sold this prostrate image to a Jew, who loaded 900 camels with the brass of it. This was A.D. 600, about 900 years after it had been thrown down. The ancient name of the island was Asteria. Its name, Rhodes, was given from the great quantity of roses which it produced. ¶ Unto Patara.

the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

This was a maritime city of Lycia, in Asia Minor, over against Rhodes.

2. Into Phenicia. See Notes on ch. xi. 19. Phenicia was on their way to Jerusalem. ¶ Set forth. Sailed.

3. Had discovered Cyprus. See Notes on ch. iv. 36. ¶ Into Syria. See Notes on Mat. iv. 24. ¶ And landed at Tyre. See Notes on Mat. xi. 21. ¶ To unlade her burden. Her cargo. Tyre was formerly one of the most commercial cities of the world; and it is probable that in the time of Paul its commercial importance had not entirely ceased.

4. And finding disciples. Christians. This is the first mention of there being Christians at Tyre, but there is no improbability in supposing that the gospel had been preached there, though it is not expressly recorded by Luke. ¶ Who said to Paul. Comp. ver. 12. Their deep interest in his welfare, and their apprehension of his danger, was the reason why they admonished him not to go. ¶ Through the Spirit. There is some difficulty in understanding this. In solving this difficulty, we may remark, (1) That it is evident that the Holy Spirit is meant, and that Luke means to say that this was spoken by his inspiration. The Holy Spirit was bestowed on Christians at that time in large measures, and many appear to have been under his inspiring guidance. (2) It was not understood by Paul as a positive command that he should not go up to Jerusalem; for had it been, it would not have been disobeyed. He evidently understood it as expressive of their earnest wish that he should not go, as apprising him of danger, and as a kind expression in regard to his own welfare and safety. Comp. ver. 13. Paul was in better circumstances to understand this than we are, and his interpretation was doubtless correct. (3) It is to be understood, therefore, simply as an inspired prophetic warning, that if he went, he went at the risk of his life

4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days; <sup>a</sup> who said to Paul through the Spirit that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way with wives

—a prophetic warning, joined with their individual personal wishes that he would not expose himself to this danger. The meaning evidently is that they said by inspiration of the Spirit that he should not go unless he was willing to encounter danger, for they foresaw that the journey would be attended with the hazard of his life. Grotius renders it, "That he should not go unless he was willing to be bound." Michaelis and Stolzius, "They gave him prophetic warning that he should not go to Jerusalem." Doddridge, "If he tendered his own liberty and safety, not to go up to Jerusalem, since it would certainly expose him to very great hazard." The inspiration in the case was that of admonition and warning, not of positive command. Paul was simply apprised of the danger, and was then left to the free determination of his own will. He chose to encounter the danger of which he was thus apprised. He did not despise the intimations of the Spirit, but he judged that his duty to God called him thus to meet the perils of the journey. We may be apprised of danger in a certain course, either by our friends or by the word of God, and still it may be our duty to meet it. Our duty is not to be measured by the fact that we shall experience danger, in whatever way that may be made known to us. Duty consists in following the will of God, and encountering whatever trials may be in our way.

5. Had accomplished those days. When those days were passed. ¶ They all brought us on our way. They attended us. See Notes on ch. xv. 3; Ro. xv. 24; 1 Co. xvi. 6, 11; 3 Jn. 6. This was an expression of tender attachment, and of a deep interest in the welfare of Paul and his fellow-travellers. ¶ We kneeled down. See Notes on ch. xx. 36. ¶ On the shore. Any place may be proper for prayer. See Notes on Jn. iv. 21-24. God is everywhere, and can as easily hear and children, till we were out of the city; and we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned home again.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day, we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cesarea; and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy.

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet named Agabus.

prayer on the sea-shore as in the most magnificent temple. This is an instance, as well as that in ch. xx. 36, where the apostle evidently prayed with the church without a form of prayer. No man can believe that he thus poured forth the desires of his heart at parting, and commended them to God in a prescribed form of words. Scenes like this show more clearly than abstract arguments could do that such a form was not needed, and would not be used. Paul and his fellow-Christians, on the sand of the sea-shore, would pour forth the gushing emotions of their souls in language such as their circumstances would suggest, and no man can read this narrative in a dispassionate manner without believing that they offered an extempore prayer.

7. We came to Ptolemais. This was a city situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, on the north angle of a bay which extends, in a semicircle of three leagues, as far as the point of Mount Carmel. At the south and west sides the city was washed by the sea, and was surrounded by triple walls. It was in the tribe of Asher (Ju. i. 31), and was originally called ACCHO; but was called Ptolemais in honour of one of the Ptolemies, who beautified and adorned it. The Christian crusaders gave it the name of Acre, or St. John of Acre, from a magnificent church which was built in it, and which was dedicated to the apostle John. It is still called Akha by the Turks. The Syriac and Arabic render it Accho in this place. It sustained several sieges during the Crusades, and was the last fortified place wrested from the Christians by the Turks. It sustained a memorable siege under Bonaparte, and since then it has been much increased and strengthened. Its present population is estimated at from 18,000 to 20,000. ¶ And saluted the brethren. Embraced them; gave them expressions of affection and regard.

8. We that were of Paul's company. From this it would appear that they had been attended thus far by some persons who were going only to Ptolemais. This clause, however, is wanting in many MSS., and has been omitted by Bengel, Griesbach, Knapp, and others as spurious. It is also wanting in the Syriac and the Vulgate. ¶ Unto Cesarea. See Notes on ch. viii. 40. ¶ Into the house of Philip. One of the seven deacons, ch. vi. 5. After his conversation with the eunuch of Ethiopia, he went to Cesarea, and probably there abode. ¶ The evangelist. This word properly means one who announces good news. In the New Testament it is applied to a preacher of the gospel, or one who declares the glad tidings of salvation. It occurs only in two other places, Ep. iv. 11; 2 Ti. iv. 5. What was the precise rank of those who bore this title in the early Christian church cannot perhaps be determined. It is evident, however, that it is used to denote the office of preaching the gospel; and as this title is applied to Philip, and not to any other of the seven deacons, it would seem probable that he had been intrusted with a special commission to preach, and that preaching did not pertain to him as a deacon, and does not properly belong to that office. The business of a deacon was to take care of the poor members of the church, ch. vi. 1-6. The office of preaching was distinct from this, though, as in this case, it might be conferred on the same individual.

9. Which did prophesy. See Notes on ch. ii. 17; xi. 27. That females sometimes partook of the prophetic influence, and foretold future events, is evident 11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, "So shall the Jews at Jersusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard these from various places in the New Testament. See Notes on ch. ii. 17.

10. There came down. See Notes on ch. xv. 1. ¶ Named Agabus. See Notes on ch. xi. 28.

11. He took Paul's girdle. The loose, flowing robes, or outer garments, which were worn in Eastern countries, were bound by a girdle, or sash, around the body when they ran, or laboured, or walked. Such a girdle was therefore an indispensable part of dress. ¶ And bound his own hands and feet. As emblematic of what would be done by the Jews to Paul. It was common for the prophets to perform actions which were emblematic of the events which they predicted. The design was to make the prediction more forcible and impressive by representing it to the eye. Thus Jeremiah was directed to bury his girdle by the Euphrates, to denote the approaching captivity of the Jews, Je. xiii. 4. Thus he was directed to make bands and yokes, and to put them around his neck, as a sign to Edom and Moab, &c., Je. xxvii. 2, 3. Thus the act of the potter was emblematic of the destruction that was coming upon the nation of the Jews, Je. xviii. 4. So Isaiah walked naked and barefoot as a sign of the captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia, Is. xx. 3, 4. Comp. Eze. iv. xii. &c. ¶ So shall the Jews, &c. This was fulfilled. See ver. 33, and ch. xxiv. ¶ Into the hands of the Gentiles. To be tried; for the Romans then had jurisdiction over Judea.

13. What mean ye. Greek, What do ye. A tender and affectionate, but firm reproach. ¶ To weep and to break mine heart? To afflict me, and distract my mind by alarms, and by the expressions of tenderness. His mind was fixed on going to Jerusalem; and he felt that he was prepared for whatever awaited him. Expressions of tenderness among friends are proper. Tears may be inevitable at parting from those whom things, both we, and they of that place, 'besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

we love. But such expressions of love ought not to be allowed to interfere with the convictions of duty in their minds. If they have made up their minds that a certain course is proper, and have resolved to pursue it, we ought neither to attempt to divert them from it, nor to distract their minds by our remonstrances or our tears. We should resign them to their convictions of what is demanded of them with affection and prayer, but with cheerfulness. We should lend them all the aid in our power, and then commend them to the blessing and protection of God. These remarks apply especially to those who are engaged in the missionary enterprise. It is trying to part with a son, a daughter, or a beloved friend, in order that they may go to proclaim the gospel to the benighted and dying heathen. The act of parting—for life, and the apprehension of the perils which they may encounter on the ocean, and in heathen lands, may be painful; but if they, like Paul, have looked at it calmly, candidly, and with much prayer; if they have come to the deliberate conclusion that it is the will of God that they should devote their lives to this service, we ought not to weep and to break their hearts. We should cheerfully and confidently commit them to the protection of the God whom they serve, and remember that the parting of Christians, though for life, will be short. Soon, in a better world, they will be united again, to part no more; and the blessedness of that future meeting will be greatly heightened by all the sorrows and self-denials of separation here, and by all the benefits which such a separation may be the means of conveying to a dying world. That mother will meet, with joy, in heaven, the son from whom, with many tears, she was sundered when he entered on a missionary life; and, surrounded with many ransomed heathen, heaven will be made more blessed.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, 'The will of the Lord be done.'

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cesarea, and brought with them one Mnas-and eternity more happy. ¶ But also to die. This was the true spirit of a martyr. This spirit reigned in the hearts of all the early Christians. ¶ For the name of the Lord Jesus. For his sake; in making his name known.

14. Would not be persuaded. To remain. He was resolved to go. ¶ We ceased. We ceased remonstrating with him, and urging him to remain. ¶ The will of the Lord be done. They were now assured that it was the will of God that he should go, and they were now ready to submit to that will. This is an instance and an evidence of true piety. It was the expression of a wish that whatever God might judge to be necessary for the advancement of his cause might take place, even though it should be attended with many trials. They commended their friend to the protection of God, confident that whatever should occur would be right. Comp. Notes on Mat. vi. 10; xxvi. 42.

15. After those days. After what had occurred, as related in the previous verses. ¶ We took up our carriages. This is a most unhappy translation. The word carriage we apply now exclusively to a vehicle for conveying anything—as a coach, chariot, gig, cannon carriage, &c. The original word means simply that they prepared themselves; made themselves ready; put their baggage in order, &c.—ἀποτινάχισαντες. They prepared for the journey. The English word carriage was formerly used in the sense of that which is carried, baggage, burden, vessels, furniture, &c. Thus it was used in the time that our translation was made; and in this sense it is to be understood in 1 Sa. xvii. 22, "And David left his carriage [baggage] in the hand of the keeper of the carriage," &c. See ver. 20, margin; Is. x. 28, "At Michmash he hath laid up his carriages" [his baggage, &c.].

16. One Mnason of Cyprus. The original in this place would be better translated, "And brought us to Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple," &c. It is evident that, though Mnason was originally of Cyprus, yet he was now an inhabitant of Jerusalem, and was well known to the disciples at Cesarea. It is possible that he might have been at Cesarea, and accompanied Paul to Jerusalem; but the more correct interpretation of the passage is, that Paul and his fellow-travellers were conducted to his house in Jerusalem, and that he was not with them in the journey. ¶ Of Cyprus. See Notes on ch. iv. 36. ¶ An old disciple. An early convert to Christianity—perhaps one who was converted before the crucifixion of the Saviour. ¶ With whom we should lodge. In whose house we were to take up our abode. The rites of hospitality were shown in a distinguished manner by the early Christians.

17. The brethren. Christians. ¶ Received us gladly. They had been long absent. They had been into distant regions, and had encountered many dangers. It was a matter of joy that they had now returned in safety.

18. Unto James. James the Less. See Notes on ch. xv. 13. He resided at Jerusalem. Comp. Ga. i. 19. It is not improbable that he was the only one of the apostles then at Jerusalem; and there is reason to believe that the church at Jerusalem was left under his particular care. It was natural, therefore, that Paul and his companions should take an early opportunity to see him. James was the cousin of our Lord, and in Ga. i. 19 he is called the Lord's brother. On all accounts, therefore, he was entitled to, and would receive, particular respect from the early disciples.

19. Had saluted them. With the usual tokens of respect and affection. ¶ He declared particularly, &c. As an evidence that God had been with him. It is not improbable that there might have been some suspicion in regard to them, he <sup>2</sup>declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles <sup>2</sup>by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord; and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how

Paul among the disciples at Jerusalem, and he might have heard that they were prejudiced against him. This prejudice would be removed by his stating what had actually occurred under his ministry.

20. They glorified the Lord. They gave praise to the Lord for what he had done. They saw new proofs of his goodness and mercy, and they rendered him thanks for all that had been accomplished. There was no jealousy that it had been done by the instrumentality of Paul. True piety will rejoice in the spread of the gospel, and in the conversion of sinners, by whatever instrumentality it may be effected. ¶ Thou seest, brother. The language of tenderness in this address, recognizing Paul as a fellow-labourer and fellow-Christian, implies a wish that Paul would do all that could be done to avoid giving offence, and to conciliate the favour of his countrymen. ¶ How many thousands. The number of converts at this time must have been very great. Twenty-five years before this, three thousand had been converted at one time (ch. ii.), and afterward the number had swelled to some more thousands, ch. iv. 4. The assertion that there were then "many thousands," implies that the work so signally begun on the day of Pentecost in Jerusalem had not ceased, and that many more had been converted to the Christian faith. ¶ Which believe. Who are Christians. They are spoken of as believers, or as having faith in Christ, in contradistinction from those who rejected him, and whose characteristic trait it was that they were unbelievers.

¶ And they are all zealous of the law. They still observe the law of Moses. The reference here is to the law respecting circumcision, sacrifices, distinctions of meats and days, festivals, &c. It may seem remarkable that they should still continue to observe those rites, since it was the manifest design of Christianity to abolish them. But we are to remember, (1) That those many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and <sup>2</sup>they are all zealous of the law:

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, <sup>2</sup>saying that rites had been appointed by God, and that they were trained to their observance. (2) That the apostles conformed to them while they remained at Jerusalem, and did not deem it best to set themselves violently against them, ch. iii. 1; Lu. xxiv. 53. (3) That the question about their observance had never been agitated at Jerusalem. It was only among the Gentile converts that the question had risen, and there it must arise, for if they were to be observed, they must have been imposed upon them by authority. (4) The decision of the council (ch. xv.) related only to the Gentile converts. It did not touch the question whether those rites were to be observed by the Jewish converts. (5) It was to be presumed that as the Christian religion became better understood—that as its large, free, and catholic nature became more and more developed, the peculiar institutions of Moses would be laid aside of course, without agitation and without tumult. Had the question been agitated at Jerusalem, it would have excited tenfold opposition to Christianity, and would have rent the Christian church into factions, and greatly retarded the advance of the Christian doctrine. We are to remember also, (6) That, in the arrangement of divine Providence, the time was drawing near which was to destroy the temple, the city, and the nation, which was to put an end to sacrifices, and effectually to close for ever the observance of the Mosaic rites. As this destruction was so near, and as it would be so effectual an argument against the observance of the Mosaic rites, the Great Head of the church did not suffer the question of their obligation to be needlessly agitated among the disciples at Jerusalem.

21. And they are informed of thee. Reports respecting the conduct of Paul would be likely to be in circulation among all at Jerusalem. His remarkable conversion, his distinguished zeal, his success among the Gentiles, would make his conduct a subject of special interest. Evil-minded men among the Jews, who came up to Jerusalem from different places where he had been, would be likely to represent him as the decided enemy of the laws of Moses, and these reports would be likely to reach the ears of the Jewish converts. The reports, as they gained ground, would be greatly magnified, until suspicion might be excited among the Christians at Jerusalem that he was, as he was reputed to be, the settled foe of the Jewish rites and customs. ¶ That thou teachest all the Jews, &c. From all the evidence which we have of his conduct, this report was incorrect and slanderous. The truth appears to have been, that he did not enjoin the observance of those laws on the Gentile converts; that the effect of his ministry on them was to lead them to suppose that their observance was not necessary — contrary to the doctrines of the Judaizing teachers (see ch. xv.); and that he argued with the Jews themselves, where it could be done, against the obligation of those laws and customs since the Messiah had come. The Jews depended on their observance for justification and salvation. This Paul strenuously opposed; and this view he defended at length in the epistles which he wrote. See the epistles to the Romans, the Galatians, and the Hebrews. Yet these facts might be easily misunderstood and perverted, so as to give rise to the slanderous report that he was the enemy of Moses and the law. ¶ Which are among the Gentiles. Who live in heathen countries. The Jews were extensively scattered and settled in all the large towns and cities of the Roman empire. ¶ To forsake Moses. The law and authority of Moses. That is, to regard his laws as no longer binding. ¶ To walk after the customs. To observe the institutions of the Mosaic ritual. See Notes on ch. vi. 14. The word customs denotes the rites of the Mosaic economy—the offering of sacrifices, incense, the oblations, anointings, festivals, &c., which the law of Moses prescribed.

gether; for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: We have four men which have a vow on them;

24 Them take, and purify thy-

22. What is it therefore? What is to be done? What is it proper to do to avoid the effects of the evil report which has been circulated? What they deemed it proper to do is suggested in the following verses. ¶ The multitude. The multitude of Jews. ¶ Must needs come together. There will be inevitably a tumultuous assemblage. It will be impossible to prevent that. The reasons were, because the minds of the Jews were exceedingly agitated that one of their own countrymen had, as they understood, been advising apostasy from the religion of their fathers; because this had been extensively done in many parts of the world, and with great success; and because Paul, having, as they believed, himself apostatized from the national religion, had become very conspicuous, and his very presence in Jerusalem, as in other places, would be likely to excite a tumult. It was, therefore, the part of friendship to him and to the cause to devise some proper plan to prevent, if possible, the anticipated excitement.

23. We have four men. There are with us four men. It is evident that James and the elders meant to say that these men were connected with them in the Christian church; and the fact shows that the Christians at Jerusalem did not disregard the institutions of Moses, and had not been so far enlightened in the doctrines of Christianity as to forsake yet the ceremonial rites of the Jews. ¶ Which have a vow on them. Which have made a vow. See Notes on ch. xviii. 18. From the mention of shaving the head (in ver. 24), it is evident that the vow which they had taken was that of the Nazarite; and that as the time of their vow was about expiring, they were about to be shaven, in accordance with the custom usual on such occasions. See Notes on ch. xviii. 18. These persons Paul could join, and thus show decisively that he did not intend to undervalue or disparage the laws of Moses when those laws were understood as mere ceremonial observances.

self with them, and be at charges with them, that they may "shave their heads; and all may know that those things whereof they were informed concerning thee are nothing, but that thou thyself

24. Them take. Take with you. Join yourself with them. ¶ And purify thyself with them. Join them in observing the forms of purification prescribed by the law of Moses in the observance of the vow of the Nazarite. The purifying here refers to the vows of sanctity which the Nazarites were to observe. They were to abstain from wine and strong drink; they were to eat no grapes, moist or dried; they were to come near no dead body, nor to make themselves "unclean" for their father, mother, brother, or sister, when they died (Nu. vi. 3-7); and they were to present an offering when the days of the vow were completed, Nu. vi. 8. ¶ And be at charges with them. Share with them the expense of the offerings required when the vow is completed. Those offerings were a ram of a year old for a burnt-offering, a sheep of the same age for a sin-offering, a ram for a thank-offering, a basket of unleavened cakes, and a libation of wine. See Nu. vi. 18-20. ¶ That they may shave their heads. The shaving of the head, or the cutting off the hair which had been suffered to grow during the continuance of the vow (Nu. vi. 5), was an observance indicating that the vow had been performed. Paul was requested to join with them in the expense of the offerings, that thus, the whole of the ceremonies having been observed, their heads might be shaved as an indication that every part of the vow had been complied with. ¶ And all may know. By the fact of your observance of one of the rites of the Mosaic religion, all may have evidence that it is not your purpose or practice to speak contemptuously of those rites, or to undervalue the authority of Moses. ¶ Are nothing. Are untrue, or without any foundation. ¶ Walkest orderly. That you live in accordance with the real requirements of the law of Moses. To walk, in the Scriptures, often denotes to live, to act, to conduct in a certain manner. All, probably, that they wished Paul to show by this was, that he was not an enemy also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, "we have written, and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they

of Moses. They who gave this counsel were Christians, and they could not wish him to do anything which would imply that he was not a Christian.

25. As touching the Gentiles. In regard to the Gentile converts. It might be expedient for Paul to do what could not be enjoined on the Gentiles. They could not command the Gentile converts to observe those ceremonies, while yet it might be proper, for the sake of peace, that the converts to Christianity from among the Jews should regard them. The conduct of the Christians at Jerusalem in giving this advice, and of Paul in following it, may be easily vindicated. If it be objected, as it has been by infidels, that it looks like double-dealing; that it was designed to deceive the Jews in Jerusalem, and to make them believe that Paul actually conformed to the ceremonial law, when his conduct among the Gentiles showed that he did not, we may reply, (1) That the observance of that law was not necessary in order to salvation; (2) That it would have been improper to have enjoined its observance on the Gentile converts as necessary, and therefore it was never done; (3) That when the Jews urged its observance as necessary to justification and salvation, Paul strenuously opposed this view of it everywhere; (4) Yet that, as a matter of expediency, he did not oppose its being observed either by the Jews, or by the converts made among the Jews. In fact, there is other evidence besides the case before us that Paul himself continued to observe some, at least, of the Jewish rites, and his conduct in public at Jerusalem was in strict accordance with his conduct in other places. See ch. xviii. 18. The sum of the whole matter is this, that when the observance of the Jewish ceremonial law was urged as necessary to justification and acceptance with God, Paul resisted it; when it was demanded that its observance should be enjoined on the Gentiles, he opposed it; in all other cases he made no opposition to it, and was ready himself to comply keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul "took the men; and the next day, purifying himself with them, "entered into the temple, to signify "the accomplish-with it, and willing that others should also. ¶ We have written. Ch. xv. 20, 29.

26. Then Paul took the men. Took them to himself; united with them in observing the ceremonies connected with their vow. To transactions like this he refers in 1 Co. ix. 20: "And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law." Thus it has always been found necessary, in propagating the gospel among the heathen, not to offend them needlessly, but to conform to their innocent customs in regard to dress, language, modes of travelling, sitting, eating, &c. Paul did nothing more than this. He violated none of the dictates of honesty and truth. ¶ Purifying himself with them. Observing the ceremonies connected with the rite of purification. See Notes on ver. 24. This means evidently that he entered on the ceremonies of the separation according to the law of the Nazarite. ¶ To signify. Greek, signifying or making known. That is, he announced to the priests in the temple his purpose of observing this vow with the four men, according to the law respecting the Nazarite. It was proper that such an announcement should be made beforehand, in order that the priests might know that all the ceremonies required had been observed. ¶ The accomplishment, &c. The fulfilling, the completion. That is, he announced to them his purpose to observe all the days and all the rites of purification required in the law, in order that an offering might be properly made. It does not mean that the days had been accomplished, but that it was his intention to observe them, so that it would be proper to offer the usual sacrifice. Paul had not, indeed, engaged with them in the beginning of their vow of separation, but he might come in with hearty intention to share with them. It cannot be objected ment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

27 And when the seven days were almost ended, "the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up

that he meant to impose on the priests, and to make them believe that he had observed the whole vow with them, for it appears from their own writings (Bereshith Rabba, 90, and Kohelleth Rabba, 7) that in those instances where the Nazarites had not sufficient property to enable them to meet the whole expense of the offerings, other persons, who possessed more, might become sharers of it, and thus be made parties to the vow. See Jahn's Archaeology, § 395. This circumstance will vindicate Paul from any intention to take an improper advantage, or to impose on the priests or the Jews. All that he announced was his intention to share with the four men in the offering which they were required to make, and thus to show his approval of the thing, and his accordance with the law which made such a vow proper. ¶ Until that an offering, &c. The sacrifices required of all those who had observed this vow. See Notes on ver. 24. Comp. Nu. vi. 13. It is a complete vindication of Paul in this case that he did no more here than he had done in a voluntary manner (ch. xviii. 18), and as appears then in a secret manner, showing that he was still in the practice of observing this rite of the Mosaic institution. Nor can it be proved that Paul ever, in any way, or at any time, spoke against the vow of the Nazarite, or that a vow of a similar kind in spirit would be improper for a Christian in any circumstances.

27. And when the seven days were almost ended. Greek, as the seven days were about to be fulfilled—εἰςλλον συρτιλῆσθαι. The seven days which were to complete the observance of the vow, ver. 26. Perhaps the whole observance in this case was intended to be but seven days, as the time of such a vow was voluntary. The translation, "were almost ended," is not quite correct. The Greek implies no more than that the period of the seven days was about to be accomplished, without implying that it was near the close of them when he was seized. By comparing the following places, ch. xxi. 18, 26; xxii. 30; xxiii. 12, 32; xxiv. 1, 11, it appears that the time of his seizure must have been near the beginning of those days (Doddridge). ¶ The Jews which were of Asia. Who resided in Asia Minor, but who had come up to Jerusalem for purposes of worship. Comp. Notes on ch. ii.

28. Men of Israel. Jews. All who are the friends of the law of Moses. ¶ This is the man, &c. This implies that they had before given information to the Jews at Jerusalem that there was such a man, and they now exulted in the fact that they had found him. They therefore called on all these to aid in securing and punishing him. ¶ That teacheth, &c. See Notes on ch. vi. 13, 14. ¶ Against the people. The people of the Jews. That is, they pretended that he taught that the customs and laws of the Jewish nation were not binding, and endeavoured to prejudice all men against them. ¶ And the law. The law of Moses. ¶ And this place. The temple. Everything against the law would be interpreted also as being against the temple, as most of the ceremonies required in the law were celebrated there. It is possible also that Paul might have declared that the temple was to be destroyed. Comp. ch. vi. 13, 14. ¶ And further, brought Greeks, &c. The temple was surrounded by various areas called courts. See Notes on Mat. xxi. 12. The outermost of these courts was called the court of the Gentiles, and into that it was lawful for the Gentiles to enter. But the word "temple" here refers, doubtless, to the parts of the area appropriated especially to the Israelites, and which it was unlawful for a Gentile to enter. These parts are marked G G G G in the plan of the temple, Mat. xxi. 12. ¶ And hath polluted, &c. He has defiled the temple by thus introducing a Gentile. No greater defilement, in their view, could scarcely be conceived. No more effective appeal could be made to the passions of the people than this.

29. In the city. In Jerusalem. As he was with Paul, it was inferred that he would attend him everywhere. ¶ Trophimus. He had accompanied Paul on his way from Ephesus, ch. xx. 4. ¶ Whom they supposed, &c. This is a most striking illustration of the manner in which accusations are often brought against others. They had seen him with Paul in the city; they inferred, therefore, that he had been with him in the temple. They did not even pretend that they had seen him in the temple; but the inference was enough to inflame the angry and excitable passions of the multitude. So in the accusations which men now often make of others. They see one thing, they infer another; they could testify to one thing, but they conclude that another thing will also be true, and that other thing they charge on them as the truth. If men would state facts as they are, no small part of the slanderous accusations against others would cease. An end would be made of the most of the charges of falsehood, error, heresy, dishonesty, double-dealing, and immorality. If a statement is made, it should be of the thing as it was. If we attempt to say what a man has done, it should not be what we suppose he has done. If we attempt to state what he believes, it should not be what we suppose he believes.

30. The city was moved. Was agitated; was thrown into commotion. ¶ Drew him out of the temple. Under the pretence that he had defiled it. The evident design was to put him to death, ver. 31. ¶ The doors were shut. The doors leading into the courts of the temple.

31. And as they went about to kill him. Greek, they seeking to kill him. This was evidently done in a popular tumult, as had been done in the case of Stephen, ch. vii. They could not pretend that they had a right to do it by law. ¶ Tidings came. The news, or rumour came; he was told of it. ¶ The chief captain of the band. This band or body of Roman soldiers was stationed in the castle Antonia, on the north of the temple. This was built by John Hyrcanus, high-priest of the Jews, and was by him called Baris. It was beautified and strengthened by Herod the Great, and was called Antonia in honour of his friend, Mark Antony. Josephus describes this castle as consisting of four towers, one of which overlooked the temple, and which he says was 70 cubits high (Jewish Wars, b. v. ch. v. § 8). In this castle a guard of Roman soldiers was stationed to secure the temple and to maintain the peace. The commander of this cohort is here called "the chief captain." Reference is made to this guard several times in the New Testament, Mat. xvii. 65, 66; Jn. xviii. 12; Ac. v. 26. The word translated "chief captain" denotes properly one who commanded a thousand men. The band (οπίστας) was the tenth part of a legion, and consisted sometimes of four hundred and twenty-five soldiers, at others of five hundred, and at others of six hundred, according to the size of the legion. The name of this captain was Claudius Lysias, ch. xxiii. 26. ¶ In an uproar. That the whole city was in commotion.

32. Centurions. Captains of a hundred men.

33. To be bound with two chains. To show to the enraged multitude that he did not intend to rescue anyone from some another, among the multitude; and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers <sup>h</sup>for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, 'Away with him!

37 And as Paul was to be led justice, but to keep the peace. Paul's being thus bound would convince them of his determination that justice should be done in the case. Probably he was bound between two soldiers, his right arm to the left arm of the one, and his left arm to the right arm of the other. See Notes on ch. xii. 6. Or, if his hands and feet were bound, it is evident that it was so done that he was able still to walk, ver. 37, 38. This was in accordance with the prediction of Agabus, ch. xxi. 11.

34. Into the castle. The castle of Antonia, where the guard was kept. See Notes on ver. 31. Comp. ch. xxiii. 10, 16.

35. Upon the stairs. The stairs which led from the temple to the castle of Antonia. Josephus says (Jewish Wars, b. v. ch. v. § 8), that the castle of Antonia "was situated at the corner of two cloisters of the temple, of that on the west, and of that on the north; it was erected on a rock of 50 cubits [75 feet] in height, and was on a great precipice. On the corner where it joined to the two cloisters of the temple, it had passages down to them both, through which the guards went several ways among the cloisters with their arms, on the Jewish festivals, &c." It was on these stairs, as the soldiers were returning, that the tumult was so great, or the crowd so dense, that they were obliged to bear Paul along to rescue him from their violence. ¶ The violence of the people. The rush of the multitude.

36. Away with him! That is, to death. Comp. Lu. xxiii. 18.

37. May I speak unto thee? May I have the privilege of making my defence before thee; or of stating the

into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

case truly; the cause of my accusation; of this tumult, &c. ¶ Canst thou speak Greek? Implying that if he could, he might be permitted to speak to him. The Greek language was that which was then almost universally spoken, and it is not improbable that it was the native tongue of the chief captain. It is evident that he was not a Roman by birth, for he says (ch. xxii. 28) that he had obtained the privilege of citizenship by paying a great sum. The language which the Jews spoke was the Syro-Chaldaic; and as he took Paul to be an Egyptian Jew (ver. 38), he supposed, from that circumstance also, that he was not able to speak the Greek language.

38. Art not thou that Egyptian? That Egyptian was probably a Jew who resided in Egypt. Josephus has given an account of this Egyptian which strikingly accords with the statement here recorded by Luke. See Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii. § 6, and Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. xiii. § 5. The account which he gives is, that this Egyptian, whose name he does not mention, came from Egypt to Jerusalem, and said that he was a prophet, and advised the multitude of the common people to go with him to the Mount of Olives. He said further that he would show them from thence how the walls of Jerusalem would fall down; and he promised them that he would procure for them an entrance through those walls when they were fallen down. Josephus adds (Jewish Wars) that he got together thirty thousand men that were deluded by him; "these he led round about from the wilderness to the mount which was called the Mount of Olives, and was ready to break into Jerusalem by force from that place. But Felix, who was apprised of his movements, marched against him with the Roman soldiers, and discomfited him, and slew four hundred of them, and took two hundred alive. But the Egyptian escaped himself out of the fight, but did not appear any more." It was natural that the Roman tribune should suppose that Paul was this Egyptian, and that his return had produced this commotion and excitement

among the people. ¶ Madest an uproar. Producing a sedition, or a rising among the people. Gr., "That Egyptian, who before these days having risen up." ¶ Into the wilderness. This corresponds remarkably with the account of Josephus. He indeed mentions that he led his followers to the Mount of Olives, but he expressly says that "he led them round about from the wilderness." This wilderness was the wild and uncultivated mountainous tract of country lying to the east of Jerusalem, and between it and the river Jordan. See Notes on Mat. iii. 1. It is also another striking coincidence showing the truth of the narrative, that neither Josephus nor Luke mention the name of this Egyptian, though he was so prominent and acted so distinguished a part. ¶ Four thousand men. There is here a remarkable discrepancy between the chief captain and Josephus. The latter says that there were thirty thousand men. In regard to this, the following remarks may be made. (1) This cannot be alleged to convict Luke of a false statement, for his record is, that the chief captain made the statement, and it cannot be proved that Luke has put into his mouth words which he did not utter. All that he is responsible for is a correct report of what the Roman tribune said, not the truth or falsehood of his statement. It is certainly possible that that might have been the common estimate of the number then, and that the account given by Josephus might have been made from more correct information. Or it is possible, certainly, that the statement by Josephus is incorrect. (2) If Luke were to be held responsible for the statement of the number, yet it remains to be shown that he is not as credible a historian as Josephus. Why should Josephus be esteemed infallible, and Luke false? Why should the accuracy of Luke be tested by Josephus, rather than the accuracy of Josephus by Luke? Infidels usually assume that profane historians are infallible, and then endeavour to convict the sacred writers of falsehood. (3) The narrative of Luke is the more probable of the two. It is more probable that the number was only four wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul said, **I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city; and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.*

unto the people; and when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying, thousand than that it was thirty thousand; for Josephus says that four hundred were killed and two hundred taken prisoners, and that thus they were dispersed. Now, it is scarcely credible that an army of thirty thousand desperadoes and cut-throats would be dispersed by so small a slaughter and captivity. But if the number was originally but four thousand, it is entirely credible that the loss of six hundred would discourage and dissipate the remainder. (4) It is possible that the chief captain refers only to the organized Sicarii, or murderers that the Egyptian led with him, and Josephus to the multitude that afterward joined them—the rabble of the discontented and disorderly that followed them on their march. Or, (5) There may have been an error in transcribing Josephus. It has been supposed that he originally wrote four thousand, but that ancient copyists, mistaking the  $\Delta$  delta, four, for  $\Lambda$  lambda, thirty, wrote thirty thousand instead of four thousand. Which of these solutions is adopted is not material. ¶ Which were murderers. Greek, men of the Sicarii —σικαρίων. This is originally a Latin word, and is derived from sica, a short sword, sabre, or crooked knife, which could be easily concealed under the garment. Hence it came to denote assassins, and to be applied to banditti, or robbers. It does not mean that they had actually committed murder, but that they were desperadoes and banditti, and were drawn together for purposes of plunder and of blood. This class of people was exceedingly numerous in Judea. See Notes on Lu. x. 30.

39. A Jew of Tarsus. A Jew by birth. ¶ Of no mean city. Not obscure, or undistinguished. He could claim an honourable birth, so far as the place of his nativity was concerned. See Notes on ch. ix. 11. Tarsus was much celebrated for its learning, and was at one time the rival of Alexandria and Athens. Xenophon calls it a great and flourishing city. Josephus (Antiq., b. i. ch. vi. § 6) says that it was the metropolis, and most renowned city among them [the Cilicians].

40. Licence. Liberty; permission. ¶ On the stairs. See Notes on ver. 35. ¶ Beckoned with the hand. Waving the hand as a sign that he was about to address them, and to produce silence and attention. See ch. xii. 17. ¶ In the Hebrew tongue. The language which was spoken by the Jews, which was then a mixture of the Chaldee and Syriac, called Syro-Chaldaic. This language he doubtless used on this occasion in preference to the Greek, because it was understood better by the multitude, and would tend to conciliate them if they heard him address them in their own tongue. The following chapter should have been connected with this. The division here is unnatural.

CHAPTER XXII.

1. Men, brethren, and fathers. This defence was addressed to the Jews, and Paul commenced it with an expression of sincere respect for them. Stephen began his defence with the same form of address. See Notes on ch. vii. 2. ¶ My defence. Against the charges brought against me. Those charges were, that he had endeavoured to prejudice men everywhere against the Jews, the law, and the temple, ch. xxi. 28. In order to meet this charge, Paul stated (1) That he was a Jew by birth, and had enjoyed all the advantages of a Jewish education, ver. 3; (2) He recounted the circumstances of his conversion, and the reason why he believed that he was called to preach the gospel, ver. 4-16; (3) He proceeded

he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence; and he saith,) 3

I<sup>c</sup> am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city, at the feet of <sup>a</sup>Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and I<sup>b</sup> was zealous toward God, <sup>c</sup>as ye all are this day.

to state the reasons why he went among the Gentiles, and evidently intended to vindicate his conduct there, ver. 17-21; but at this point, at the name Gentiles, his defence was interrupted by the enraged multitude, and he was not permitted to proceed. What would have been his defence, therefore, had he been suffered to finish it, it is impossible to know with certainty. On another occasion, however, he was permitted to make a similar defence, and perhaps to complete the train of thought which he had purposed to pursue here. See ch. xxvi.

2. The Hebrew tongue. See Notes on ch. xxi. 40.

3. Born in Tarsus. See Notes on ch. ix. 11. ¶ Brought up in this city. In Jerusalem, sent there for the advantage of more perfect instruction in the law. ¶ At the feet of Gamaliel. As a scholar, or disciple of Gamaliel. The phrase to sit at the feet of one is expressive of the condition of a disciple or learner. Comp. De. xxxiii. 3; Lu. x. 39. It is probable that the expression arose from the fact that the learners occupied a lower place or seat than the teacher. On the character and rank of Gamaliel, see Notes on ch. v. 34. Paul mentions his having been instructed in this manner in order to show that he was entitled to the full privileges of a Jew, and that he had had every opportunity to become fully acquainted with the nature of the law. ¶ According to the perfect manner—κατὰ ἀναβίαν. By strict diligence or exact care; or in the utmost rigour and severity of that instruction. No pains were spared to make him understand and practise the law of Moses. ¶ The law of the fathers. The law of our fathers; that is, the law unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.

5 As also the high-priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders; from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

6 And it came to pass, that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, which they received and handed down to us. Paul was a Pharisee, and the law in which he had been taught was not only the written law of Moses, but the traditional law which had been handed down from former times. See Notes on Mat. iii. 6. ¶ And was zealous toward Gcd. Ga. i. 14. He had a constant burning zeal for God and his law, which was expressed not only by scrupulous adherence to its forms, but by persecuting all who opposed it, ver. 4, 5.

4. And I persecuted. Ch. viii. 3. ¶ This way. Those who were of this mode of worshipping God; that is, Christians. See Notes on Ac. ix. 2. ¶ Unto the death. Intending to put them to death. He did not probably put any to death himself, but he committed them to prison; he sought their lives; he was the agent employed in arresting them; and when they were put to death, he tells us that he gave his voice against them (Ac. xxvi. 10); that is, he joined in, and approved of their condemnation. ¶ Delivering into prisons, &c. Ch. viii. 3.

5. As also the high-priest, &c. See Notes on ch. ix. 2. ¶ All the estate of the elders. Greek, all the presbytery; that is, the whole body of the Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation. ¶ Unto the brethren. The Jewish brethren who were at Damascus. Paul here speaks as a Jew, and regards his countrymen as his brethren.

6. As I made my journey. As I was on my journey. ¶ About noon. Ch. xxvi. 13, “at mid-day.” This circumstance is omitted by Luke in his account in ch. ix. Paul mentions it as being the more remarkable since it occurred at mid-day, to show that he was not suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And<sup>x</sup> they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

deluded by any meteoric or natural appearances, which usually occur at night.

11. The glory of that light. The splendour, the intense brilliancy of the light. See this and its effects explained in the Notes on ch. ix. 8.

12, 13. See Notes on ch. ix. 17, 18.

14. Shouldst know his will. His will in the plan of salvation, and in regard to your future life. ¶ And see that Just One. The Messiah. See Notes on ch. iii. 14. As Paul was to be an apostle, and as it was the peculiar office of an apostle to bear witness to the person and deeds of the Lord Jesus (see Notes on ch. i. 21, 22), it was necessary that he should see him, that thus he might be a competent witness of his resurrection. ¶ Shouldst hear the voice of his mouth. Shouldst hear and obey his commands.

15. For thou shalt be his witness, &c. As an apostle—to testify to all men that the Messiah has come, that he has died, that he has risen, and that he is the Saviour of the world. ¶ Of what thou hast seen and heard. Of the remarkable proof which has been furnished you of the divine mission and character of the Lord Jesus.

16. And now why tarriest thou? Why led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12 And one <sup>l</sup>Ananias, a devout man according to the law, <sup>m</sup>having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

15 For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

dost thou delay, or wait any longer? These words are not recorded by Luke in ch. ix., where he has given an account of the conversion of Paul; but there is nothing here contradictory to his statement. ¶ And wash away thy sins. Receive baptism as emblematic of the washing away of sins. It cannot be intended that the external rite of baptism was sufficient to make the soul pure, but that it was an ordinance divinely appointed as expressive of the washing away of sins, or of purifying the heart. Comp. He. x. 22. Sinners are represented in the Scriptures as defiled or polluted by sin. To wash away the sins denotes the purifying of the soul from this polluted influence, 1 Co. vi. 11; Re. i. 5; vii. 14; Is. i. 16; Ps. li. 2, 7. ¶ Calling on the name of the Lord. For pardon and sanctification, Ro. x. 13, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." It was proper that this calling on the name of the Lord should be connected with the ordinance of baptism. That ordinance was emblematic of a purifying which the Lord only could produce. It is proper that the rite of baptism should be attended with extraordinary prayer; that he who is to be baptized should make it the occasion of peculiar and very solemn religious exercises.

arise, and be baptized, and 'wash away thy sins,' calling on the name of the Lord.

17. And it came to pass, that when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, "I was in a trance;

18. And" saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem; for they

17. When I was come again to Jerusalem. That is, three years after his conversion. See Ga. i. 17, 18. ¶ While I prayed in the temple. Paul, like other converts to Christianity from among the Jews, would naturally continue to offer his devotions in the temple. We meet with repeated instances of their continuing to comply with the customs of the Jewish people. ¶ I was in a trance. Greek, ecstasy. See Notes on ch. x. 10. It is possible that he may here refer to what he elsewhere mentions (2 Co. xii. 1-5) as "visions and revelations of the Lord." In that place he mentions his being "caught up to the third heaven" (ver. 2) and "into paradise," where he heard words which it was "not lawful (marg. possible) for a man to utter," ver. 4. It is not certain, however, that he alludes in this place to that remarkable occurrence. The narrative would rather imply that the Lord Jesus appeared to him in the temple in a remarkable manner, in a vision, and gave him a special command to go to the Gentiles. Paul had now stated the evidence of his conversion, which appears to have been satisfactory to them—at least they made no objection to his statement; he had shown, by his being in the temple, his respect for their institutions; and he now proceeds to show that in his other conduct he had been directed by the same high authority by which he had been called into the ministry, and that the command had been given to him in their own temple and in their own city.

18. And saw him. Evidently the Lord Jesus, ver. 14. He had received his commission from him, and he now received a distinct command to go to the Gentiles. ¶ For they will not receive. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, probably will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19. And I said, Lord, "they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee:

20. And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, "I also was standing by, and "consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

including both Jews and Christians. The Jews would not listen to him because he had become, in their view, an apostate, and they would hate and persecute him. The Christians would not be likely to receive him, for they would remember his former persecutions, and would be suspicious of him because he had been so long in Arabia, and had not sooner connected himself with them. See Notes on ch. ix. 26, "And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples; but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple."

19. And I said, Lord. This shows that it was the Lord Jesus whom Paul saw in a trance in the temple. The term Lord is usually applied to him in the Acts. See Notes on ch. i. 24. ¶ They know. Christians know; and they will therefore be not likely to receive to their fellowship their former enemy and persecutor. ¶ Beat in every synagogue. Beating, or scourging, was often done in the synagogue. See Notes on Mat. x. 17. Comp. Ac. xxvi. 11. It was customary for those who were converted to Christianity still to meet with the Jews in their synagogues, and to join with them in their worship.

20. The blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed. See ch. vii. 58; viii. 1. ¶ I was standing by. Ch. vii. 58. ¶ And consenting unto his death. Ch. viii. 1. ¶ And kept the raiment. The outer robes or garments, which were usually laid aside when they engaged in running or labour. See ch. vii. 58. All this showed that, though Paul was not engaged in stoning Stephen, yet he was with them in spirit, and fully accorded with what they did. These circumstances are mentioned here by him as reasons why he knew that he would not be received by Christians as one of their number, and 21 And he said unto me, Depart; for "I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth; <sup>b</sup>for it is not fit that he should live.

23 And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air,

24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined; why it was necessary, therefore, for him to turn to the Gentile world.

21. And he said unto me, Depart. Because the Christians at Jerusalem would not receive him. ¶ Far hence. Paul travelled far in the heathen nations. A large part of his ministry was spent in remote countries, and in the most distant regions then known. See Ro. xv. 19.

22. And they gave him audience. They heard him patiently. ¶ Unto this word. The word Gentiles. ¶ Away with such a fellow. Greek, take such a man from the earth; that is, put him to death. It is language of strong indignation and abhorrence. The reasons of their indignation were, not that they supposed that the Gentiles could not be brought into covenant with God, for they would themselves compass sea and land to make one proselyte, but, (1) That they believed that Paul taught that they might be saved without conforming to the law of Moses; and, (2) His speech implied that the Jews were more hardened than the Gentiles, and that he had a greater prospect of success in bringing them to God than he had in regard to the Jews.

23. Cast off their clothes. Their outer garments. Probably they did it now intending to stone him, ch. vii. 58. ¶ And threw dust into the air. As expressive of their abhorrence and indignation. This was a striking exhibition of rage and malice. Paul was guarded by Roman soldiers so that they could not injure him; and their only way of expressing their wrath was by menaces and threats, and by these tokens of furious indignation. Thus Shimei ex-ined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest; for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, pressed his indignation against David by cursing him, throwing stones at him, and casting dust, 2 Sa. xvi. 13.

24. The castle. The castle of Antonia. He would be there removed entirely from the wrath of the Jews. ¶ Should be examined—ἀνατίκτωσαι. The word examine with us commonly means to inquire, to question, to search for, to look carefully into a subject. The word here used is commonly applied to metals whose nature is tested, or examined by fire; and then it means to subject to torture or torments, in order to extort a confession where persons were accused of crime. It was often resorted to among the ancients. A common mode has been by the rack, but various kinds of torments have been invented in order to extort confessions of guilt from those who were accused. The whole practice has been one of the most flagrant violations of justice, and one of the foulest blots on human nature. In this case, the tribune saw that Paul was accused violently by the Jews; he was probably ignorant of the Hebrew language, and had not understood the address of Paul; he supposed from the extraordinary excitement that Paul must have been guilty of some flagrant offence, and he therefore resolved to subject him to torture to extort from him a confession. ¶ By scourging. By the scourge or whip. Comp. He. xi. 36. This was one mode of torture, in order to extort a secret from those who were accused.

25. Bound him with thongs. With cords, preparatory to scourging. ¶ Is it lawful, &c. It was directly contrary to the Roman law to bind and scourge a Roman citizen. See Notes on ch. xvi. 36, 37.

and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have <sup>1</sup>examined him; and the chief captain also was afraid, after

28. With a great sum obtained I this freedom. The freedom or privilege of Roman citizenship. From this it would seem that the privilege of being a Roman citizen might be purchased, unless perhaps he refers to the expenses which were necessarily attendant in passing through the proper forms of becoming a Roman citizen. The argument of the tribune in this case is this: "I obtained this privilege at a great price. Whence did you, Paul, thus poor and persecuted, obtain the means of becoming a Roman citizen?" Paul had informed him that he was a native of Tarsus (ch. xxi. 39); and the chief captain supposed that that was not a free city, and that Paul could not have derived the privilege of citizenship from his birth. ¶ But I was free born. I was born a Roman citizen, or I am such in virtue of my birth. Various opinions have been formed on the question in what way or for what reasons Paul was entitled to the privileges of a Roman citizen. Some have supposed that Tarsus was a Roman colony, and that he thus became a Roman citizen. But of this there does not appear to be sufficient proof. Pliny says (v. 27) that it was a free city. Appian says that it was endowed with the privileges of a free city by Augustus Cæsar after it had been greatly afflicted and oppressed by wars. Dio Chrysost. says to the people of Tarsus, "He(Augustus) has conferred on you everything which anyone could bestow on his friends and companions, a country (that is, a free country), laws, honour, authority over the river (Cydranus) and the neighbouring sea." Free cities were permitted in the Roman empire to use their own laws, customs, and magistrates, and they were free from being subject to Roman guards. They were required only to acknowledge the supremacy and authority of the Roman people, and to aid them in their wars.

he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.

30 On the morrow, "because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

Such a city was Tarsus; and, having been born there, Paul was entitled to these privileges of a free man. Many critics have supposed that this privilege of Roman citizenship had been conferred on some of the ancestors of Paul in consequence of some distinguished military service. Such a conferring of the rights of citizenship was not unusual, and possibly might have occurred in this case. But there is no direct historical proof of it; and the former fact, that he was born in a free city, will amply account for his affirmation that he was free born. Comp. Notes on ch. xvi. 37.

29. Then straightway. Immediately. They saw that by scourging him they would have violated the Roman law, and exposed themselves to its penalty. ¶ Which should have examined him. Who were about to torture him by scourging him, ver. 24. ¶ Because he had bound him. Preparatory to scourging him. The act of binding a Roman citizen with such an intent, untried and uncondemned, was unlawful. Prisoners who were to be scourged were usually bound by the Romans to a pillar or post; and a similar custom prevailed among the Jews. That it was unlawful to bind a man with this intent, who was uncondemned, appears from an express declaration in Cicero (against Verres): "It is a heinous sin to bind a Roman citizen; it is wickedness to beat him; it is next to parricide to kill him, and what shall I say to crucify him?"

30. On the morrow. After he had arrested Paul. Paul was still a prisoner; and if suffered to go at liberty among the Jews, his life would have been in danger. ¶ And commanded the chief priests, &c. Summoned a meeting of the Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation. He did this, as he was prevented from scourging Paul, in order to know what he had done, and that he might learn from the Jews themselves the nature of the charge against him. This was necessary for the safety of Paul and for the ends of justice. This should have been done without any attempt to torture him in order to extort a confession. ¶ And brought Paul down. From the elevated castle of Antonia. The council assembled commonly in the house of the high-priest. ¶ And set him before them. He brought the prisoner to their bar, that they might have an opportunity to accuse him, and that thus the chief captain might learn the real nature of the charge against him.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1. And Paul, earnestly beholding—κρίνεις. Fixing his eyes intently on the council. The word denotes a fixed and earnest gazing; a close observation. See Lu. iv. 20. Comp. Notes on Ac. iii. 4. Paul would naturally look with a keen and attentive observation on the council. He was arraigned before them, and he would naturally observe the appearance, and endeavour to ascertain the character of his judges. Besides, it was by this council that he had been formerly commissioned to persecute the Christians, ch. ix. 1, 2. He had not seen them since that commission was given. He would naturally, therefore, regard them with an attentive eye. The result shows, also, that he looked at them to see what was the character of the men there assembled, and what was the proportion of Pharisees and Sadducees, ver. 6. ¶ The council. Greek, the Sanhedrim, ch. xxii. 30. It was the great council, composed of seventy elders, to whom was intrusted the affairs of the nation. See Notes on Mat. i. 4. ¶ Men and brethren. Greek, "Men, brethren;" the usual form of beginning an address among the Jews. See ch. ii. 29. He addressed them still as his brethren. ¶ I have lived in all good conscience. I have conducted myself so as to maintain a good conscience. I have done what I believed to be right. This was a bold declaration, after the tumult, and charges, and accusations of the conscience before God until this day.

2 And the high-priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

b Jn.18.22.

previous day (ch. xxii.); and yet it was strictly true. His persecutions of the Christians had been conducted conscientiously, Ac. xxvi. 9, "I verily thought with myself," says he, "that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." Of his conscientiousness and fidelity in their service they could bear witness. Of his conscientiousness since, he could make a similar declaration. He doubtless meant to say that as he had been conscientious in persecution, so he had been in his conversion and in his subsequent course. And as they knew that his former life had been with a good conscience, they ought to presume that he had maintained the same character still. This was a remarkably bold appeal to be made by an accused man, and it shows the strong consciousness which Paul had of his innocence. What would have been the drift of his discourse in proving this we can only conjecture. He was interrupted (ver. 2); but there can be no doubt that he would have pursued such a course of argument as would tend to establish his innocence. ¶ Before God. Greek, to God—τῷ Θεῷ. He had lived to God, or with reference to his commands, so as to keep a conscience pure in his sight. The same principle of conduct he states more at length in ch. xxiv. 16: "And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men." ¶ Until this day. Including the time before his conversion to Christianity, and after. In both conditions he was conscientious; in one, conscientious in persecution and error, though he deemed it to be right; in the other, conscientious in the truth. The mere fact that a man is conscientious does not prove that he is right or innocent. See Note on Jn. xvi. 2.

2 And the high-priest Ananias. This Ananias was doubtless the son of Nebedinus (Jos. Antiq., b. xx. ch. v. § 3), who was high-priest when Quadratus, who preceded Felix, was president of Syria. He was sent bound to Rome by Quadratus, at the same time with Ananias, the prefect of the temple, that they might give an account of their conduct to Claudius Cæsar (Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. vi. § 2). But in consequence of the intercession of Agrippa the younger, they were dismissed and returned to Jerusalem. Ananias, however, was not restored to the office of high-priest. For, when Felix was governor of Judea, this office was filled by Jonathan, who succeeded Ananias (Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. x.). Jonathan was slain in the temple itself, by the instigation of Felix, by assassins who had been hired for the purpose. This murder is thus described by Josephus (Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii. § 5): "Felix bore an ill-will to Jonathan, the high-priest, because he frequently gave him admonitions about governing the Jewish affairs better than he did, lest complaints should be made against him, since he had procured of Cæsar the appointment of Felix as procurator of Judea. Accordingly, Felix contrived a method by which he might get rid of Jonathan, whose admonitions had become troublesome to him. Felix persuaded one of Jonathan's most faithful friends, of the name Doras, to bring the robbers upon him, and to put him to death." This was done in Jerusalem. The robbers came into the city as if to worship God, and with daggers, which they had concealed under their garments, they put him to death. After the death of Jonathan, the office of high-priest remained vacant until King Agrippa appointed Ismael, the son of Fabi, to the office (Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii. § 8). It was during this interval, while the office of high-priest was vacant, that the events which are here recorded took place. Ananias was then at Jerusalem; and as the office of high-priest was vacant, and as he was the last person who had borne the office, it was natural that he should discharge, probably by common consent, its duties, so far, at least, as to preside in the Sanhedrim. Of these facts Paul would be doubtless apprised; and hence what he said (ver. 5) was strictly true, and is one of the evidences that Luke's history accords precisely with the peculiar circumstances which then existed. When Luke here calls Ananias "the high-priest," he evidently intends not to the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall; for sittest thou to judge me after

affirm that he was actually such, but to use the word, as the Jews did, as applicable to one who had been in that office, and who, on that occasion, when the office was vacant, performed its duties. ¶ To smite him on the mouth. To stop him from speaking; to express their indignation at what he had said. The anger of Ananias was aroused because Paul affirmed that all he had done had been with a good conscience. Their feelings had been excited to the utmost; they regarded him as certainly guilty; they regarded him as an apostate; and they could not bear it that he, with such coolness and firmness, declared that all his conduct had been under the direction of a good conscience. The injustice of the command of Ananias is apparent to all. A similar instance of violence occurred on the trial of the Saviour, Jn. xviii. 22.

3. God shall smite thee. God shall punish thee. God is just; and he will not suffer such a manifest violation of all the laws of a fair trial to pass unavenged. This was a remarkably bold and fearless declaration. Paul was surrounded by enemies. They were seeking his life. He must have known that such declarations would only excite their wrath and make them more thirsty for his blood. That he could thus address the president of the council was not only strongly characteristic of the man, but was also a strong proof that he was conscious of innocence, and that justice was on his side. This expression of Paul, "God shall smite thee," is not to be regarded in the light of an imprecation, or as an expression of angry feeling, but of a prediction, or of a strong conviction on the mind of Paul that a man so hypocritical and unjust as Ananias was could not escape the vengeance of God. Ananias was slain, with Hezekiah his brother, during the agitation that occurred in Jerusalem when the robbers, or Sicarii, under their leader, Manahem, had taken possession of the city. He attempted to conceal himself in an aqueduct, but was drawn forth and killed. See Josephus, Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. xvii. § 8. Thus Paul's prediction was fulfilled. ¶ Thou whited wall. This is evidently a proverbial expression, meaning thou

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high-priest?

5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high-priest; for it is written, "Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

hypocrite. His hypocrisy consisted in the fact that while he pretended to sit there to do justice, he commanded the accused to be smitten in direct violation of the law, thus showing that his character was not what he professed it to be, but that of one determined to carry the purposes of his party and of his own feelings. Our Saviour used a similar expression to describe the hypocritical character of the Pharisees (Mat. xxiii. 27), when he compares them to whitened sepulchres. A whitened wall is a wall or enclosure that is covered with lime or gypsum, and that thus appears to be different from what it is, and thus aptly describes the hypocrite. Seneca (De Providentia, ch. 6) uses a similar figure to describe hypocrites: "They are sordid, base, and like their walls adorned only externally." See also Seneca, Epos. 115. ¶ For sittest thou, &c. The law required that justice should be done, and in order to that, it gave every man an opportunity of defending himself. See Note, Jn. vii. 51. Comp. Pr. xviii. 13; Le. xix. 15, 16; Ex. xxiii. 1, 2; De. xix. 15, 18. ¶ To judge me after the law. As a judge, to hear and decide the case according to the rules of the law of Moses. ¶ Contrary to the law. In violation of the law of Moses (Le. xix. 35), "Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment."

4. Revilest thou, &c. Dost thou reproach or abuse the high-priest of God? It is remarkable that they, who knew that he was not the high-priest, should have offered this language. He was, however, in the place of the high-priest, and they might have pretended that respect was due to the office.

5. Then said Paul, I wist not. I know not; I was ignorant of the fact that he was high-priest. Interpreters have been greatly divided on the meaning of this expression. Some have supposed that Paul said it in irony, as if he had said, "Pardon me, brethren, I did not consider that this was the high-priest. It did not occur to me that a man who could conduct thus could be God's high-priest." Others have thought (as Grotius) that Paul used these words for the purpose of mitigating their wrath, and as an acknowledgment that he had spoken hastily, and that it was contrary to his usual habit, which was not to speak evil of the ruler of the people. As if he had said, "I acknowledge my error and my haste. I did not consider that I was addressing him whom God had commanded me to respect." But this interpretation is not probable, for Paul evidently did not intend to retract what he had said. Dr. Doddridge renders it, "I was not aware, brethren, that it was the high-priest," and regards it as an apology for having spoken in haste. But the obvious reply to this interpretation is, that if Ananias was the high-priest, Paul could not but be aware of it. Of so material a point it is hardly possible that he could be ignorant. Others suppose that, as Paul had been long absent from Jerusalem, and had not known the changes which had occurred there, he was a stranger to the person of the high-priest. Others suppose that Ananias did not occupy the usual seat which was appropriated to the high-priest, and that he was not clothed in the usual robes of office, and that Paul did not recognize him as the high-priest. But it is wholly improbable that on such an occasion the high-priest, who was the presiding officer in the Sanhedrim, should not be known to the accused. The true interpretation, therefore, I suppose, is that which is derived from the fact that Ananias was not then properly the high-priest; that there was a vacancy in the office, and that he presided by courtesy, or in virtue of his having been formerly invested with that office. The meaning then will be: "I do not regard or acknowledge him as the high-priest, or address him as such, since that is not his true character. Had he been truly the high-priest, even if he had thus been guilty of manifest injustice, I would not have used the language which I did. The office, if not the man, would have claimed respect. But as he is not truly and properly clothed with that office, and as he was guilty of manifest injustice, I did not believe that he was to be shielded in his injustice by the law which commands me to show respect to the proper ruler of the people." If this be the true interpretation, it shows that Luke, in this account, accords entirely with the truth of history. The character of Ananias as given by Josephus, the facts which he has stated in regard to him, all accord with the account here given, and show that the writer of the "Acts of the Apostles" was acquainted with the history of that time, and has correctly stated it. ¶ For it is written. Ex. xxii. 28. Paul adduces this to show that it was his purpose to observe the law; that he would not intentionally violate it; and that, if he had known Ananias to be high-priest, he would have been restrained by his regard for the law from using the language which he did. ¶ Of the rulers of thy people. This passage had not any peculiar reference to the high-priest, but it inculcated the general spirit of respect for those in office, whatever that office was. As the office of high-priest was one of importance and authority, Paul declares here that he would not be guilty of showing disrespect for it, or of using reproachful language in regard to it.

6. But when Paul perceived. Probably by his former acquaintance with the men who composed the council. As he had been brought up in Jerusalem, and had been before acquainted with the Sanhedrim (ch. ix. 2), he would have an acquaintance, doubtless, with the character of most of those present, though he had been absent from them for fourteen years, Ga. ii. 1. ¶ The one part, &c. That the council was divided into two parts, Pharisees and Sadducees. This was commonly the case, though it was uncertain which had the majority. In regard to the opinions of these two sects, see Notes on Mat. iii. 7. ¶ He cried out, &c. The reasons why Paul resolved to take advantage of their difference of opinion were, probably, (1) That he saw that it was impossible to expect justice at their hands, and he therefore regarded it as prudent and proper to consult his own safety. He saw, from the conduct of Ananias, and from the spirit manifested (ver. 4), that they, like the other Jews, had prejudged the case, and were driven on by blind rage and fury. (2) His object was to show his innocence to the chief captain. To ascertain that was the purpose for which he had been arraigned. Yet that, perhaps, could be most directly and satisfactorily shown by bringing out, as he knew he could do, the real spirit which actuated the whole council, as a spirit of party strife, contention, and persecution. Knowing, therefore, how sensitive they were on the subject of the resurrection, he seems to have resolved to do what he would not have done had they been disposed to hear him according to the rules of justice—to abandon the direct argument for his defence, and to enlist a large part, perhaps a majority of the council, in his favour. Whatever may be thought of the propriety of this course, it cannot be denied that it was a master-stroke of policy, and that it evinced a profound knowledge of human nature.

¶ I am a Pharisee. That is, I was of that sect among the Jews. I was born a Pharisee, and I ever continued while a Jew to be of that sect. In the main he agreed with them still. He did not mean to deny that he was a Christian, but that, so far as the Pharisees differed from the Sadducees, he was with the former. He agreed with them, not with the Sadducees, in regard to the doctrine of the resurrection, and the existence of angels and spirits. ¶ The son of a Pharisee.

What was the name of his father is not known. But the meaning is, simply, that he was entitled to all the immunities and privileges of a Pharisee. He had, from his birth, belonged to that sect, nor had he ever departed from the great cardinal doctrine which distinguished that sect—the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. Comp. Phi. iii. 5. ¶ Of the hope and resurrection of the dead. That is, of the hope that the dead will be raised. This is the real point of the opposition to me.

¶ I am called in question. Greek, I am judged; that is, I am persecuted, or brought to trial. Orobio charges this upon Paul as an artful manner of declining persecution, unworthy the character of an upright and honest man. Chubb, a British Deist of the seventeenth century, charges it upon Paul as an act of gross "dissimulation, as designed to conceal the true ground of all the troubles that he had brought upon himself, and as designed to deceive and impose upon the Jews." He affirms also that "St. Paul probably

I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: 'of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.'

7 And when he had so said, e ch.28.5; Phi.3.5. / ch.24.15,21; 26.6; 28.20.

invented this pretended charge against himself to draw over a party of the unbelieving Jews unto him." See Chubb's Posthumous Works, vol. ii. p. 238. Now, in reply to this, we may observe, (1) That there is not the least evidence that Paul denied that he had been, or was then, a Christian. An attempt to deny this, after all that they knew of him, would have been vain; and there is not the slightest hint that he attempted it. (2) The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was the main and leading doctrine which he had insisted on, and which had been to him the cause of much of his persecution. See ch. xvii. 31, 32; 1 Co. xv.; Ac. xiii. 34; xxvi. 6, 7, 23, 25. (3) Paul defended this by an argument which he deemed invincible, and which constituted, in fact, the principal evidence of its truth—the fact that the Lord Jesus had been raised. That fact had fully confirmed the doctrine of the Pharisees that the dead would rise. As Paul had everywhere proclaimed the fact that Jesus had been raised up, and as this had been the occasion of his being opposed, it was true that he had been persecuted on account of that doctrine. (4) The real ground of the opposition which the Sadducees made to him, and of their opposition to his doctrine, was the additional zeal with which he urged this doctrine, and the additional argument which he brought for the resurrection of the dead. Perhaps the cause of the opposition of this great party among the Jews—the Sadducees—to Christianity, was the strong confirmation which the resurrection of Christ gave to the doctrine which they so much hated—the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. It thus gave a triumph to their opponents among the Pharisees, and Paul, as a leading and zealous advocate of that doctrine, would excite their special hatred. (5) All that Paul said, therefore, was strictly true. It was because he advocated this doctrine that he was opposed. That there were other causes of opposition to him might be true also; but still this was the main and prominent cause of the hos-

there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees; and the multitude was divided.

8 For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither tility. (6) With great propriety, therefore, he might address the Pharisees and say, "Brethren, the doctrine which has distinguished you from the Sadducees is at stake. The doctrine which is at the foundation of all our hopes—the resurrection of the dead; the doctrine of our fathers, of the Scriptures, of our sect, is in danger. Of that doctrine I have been the advocate. I have never denied it. I have everywhere defended it, and have devoted myself to the work of putting it on an imperishable basis among the Jews and the Gentiles. For my zeal in that I have been opposed. I have excited the ridicule of the Gentile and the hatred of the Sadducee. I have thus been persecuted and arraigned; and for my zeal in urging the argument in defence of it which I have deemed most irrefragable—the resurrection of the Messiah—I have been arraigned, and now cast myself on your protection against the mad zeal of the enemies of the doctrine of our fathers." Not only, therefore, was this an act of policy and prudence in Paul, but what he affirmed was strictly true, and the effect was as he had anticipated.

7. A dissension. A dispute, or difference. ¶ And the multitude. The council. Comp. ch. xiv. 4. The Pharisees embraced, as he desired and expected, his side of the question, and became his advocates, in opposition to the Sadducees, who were arrayed against him.

8. For the Sadducees say. They believe. ¶ No resurrection. Of the dead. By this doctrine they also understood that there was no future state, and that the soul did not exist after death. See Notes on Mat. xxii. 23. ¶ Neither angel. That there are no angels. They deny the existence of good or bad angels. See Notes on Mat. iii. 7. ¶ Nor spirit. Nor soul. That there is nothing but matter. They were materialists, and supposed that all the operations which we ascribe to mind could be traced to some modification of matter. The Sadducees, says Josephus (Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. viii. § 14), "take away the belief of the im-angel nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry; and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, "We find no evil in this man; but if 'a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, *let us not fight against God.

mortal duration of the soul, and the punishments and rewards in Hades." "The doctrine of the Sadducees is this," says he (Antiq., b. xviii. ch. i. § 4), "that souls die with the bodies." The opinion that the soul is material, and that there is nothing but matter in the universe, has been held by many philosophers, ancient and modern, as well as by the Sadducees. ¶ Confess both. Acknowledge, or receive both as true; that is, that there is a future state, and that there are spirits distinct from matter, as angels, and the disembodied souls of men. The two points in dispute were, (1) Whether the dead would be raised and exist in a future state; and, (2) Whether mind was distinct from matter. The Sadducees denied both, and the Pharisees believed both. Their belief of the latter point was, that spirits existed in two forms—that of angels, and that of souls of men distinct from the body.

9. A great cry. A great clamour and tumult. ¶ The scribes. The learned men. They would naturally be the chief speakers. ¶ Of the Pharisees' part. Who were Pharisees, or who belonged to that party. The scribes were not a distinct sect, but might be either Pharisees or Sadducees. ¶ We find no evil in this man. No opinion which is contrary to the law of Moses; no conduct in spreading the doctrine of the resurrection which we do not approve. The importance of this doctrine, in their view, was so great as to throw into the background all the other doctrines that Paul might hold; and, provided this were propagated, they were willing to vindicate and sustain him. A similar testimony was offered to the innocence of the Saviour by Pilate, Jn. xix. 6. ¶ But if a spirit or an angel, &c. They here referred, doubtless, to what Paul had said in ch. xxii. 17, 18. He had declared that he had gone among the Gentiles in obedience to a command

10 And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

11 And the night following, which he received in a vision in the temple. As the Pharisees held to the belief of spirits and angels, and to the doctrine that the will of God was often delivered to men by their agency, they were ready now to admit that he had received such a communication, and that he had gone among the Gentiles in obedience to it, to defend their great doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. We are not to suppose that the Pharisees had become the friends of Paul or of Christianity. The true solution of their conduct doubtless is, that they were so inflamed with hatred against the Sadducees that they were willing to make use of any argument against their doctrine. As the testimony of Paul might be turned to their account, they were willing to vindicate him. It is remarkable, too, that they perverted the statement of Paul in order to oppose the Sadducees. Paul had stated distinctly (ch. xxii. 17, 18) that he had been commanded to go by the Lord, meaning the Lord Jesus. He had said nothing of "a spirit or an angel." Yet they would unite with the Sadducees so far as to maintain that he had received no such command from the Lord Jesus. But they might easily vary his statements, and suppose that an "angel or a spirit" had spoken to him, and thus make use of his conduct as an argument against the Sadducees. Men are not always very careful about the exact correctness of their statements when they wish to humble a rival. ¶ Let us not fight against God. See Notes on ch. v. 39. These words are wanting in many MSS. and in some of the ancient versions. The Syriac reads it, "If a spirit or an angel have spoken to him, what is there in this?" that is, what is there unusual or wrong? 10. A great dissension. A great tumult, excitement, or controversy. ¶ Into the castle. See Notes on ch. xxi. 34.

11. The Lord stood by him. Evidently the Lord Jesus. See Notes on ch. i. 24.

Comp. ch. xxii. 18. The appearance of the Lord in this case was a proof that he approved the course which Paul had taken before the Sanhedrim. ¶ Be of good cheer. It would not be remarkable if Paul, by these constant persecutions, should be dejected in mind. The issue of the whole matter was as yet doubtful. In these circumstances, it must have been peculiarly consoling to him to hear these words of encouragement from the Lord Jesus, and this assurance that the object of his desires would be granted, and that he would be permitted to bear the same witness of him in Rome. Nothing else can comfort and sustain the soul in trials and persecutions but evidence of the approbation of God, and the promises of his gracious aid. ¶ Bear witness also at Rome. This had been the object of his earnest wish (Ro. i. 10; xv. 23, 24), and this promise of the Lord Jesus was fulfilled, ch. xxviii. 30, 31. The promise which was here made to Paul was not directly one of deliverance from the present persecution, but it implied that, and made it certain.

12. Certain of the Jews. Some of the Jews. They were more than forty in number, ver. 13. ¶ Banded together. Made an agreement or compact. They conspired to kill him. ¶ And bound themselves under a curse. See the margin. The Greek is, "they anathematized themselves;" that is, they bound themselves by a solemn oath. They invoked a curse on themselves, or devoted themselves to destruction, if they did not do it. Lightfoot remarks, however, that they could be absolved from this vow by the Rabbins if they were unable to execute it. Under various pretences they could easily be freed from such oaths, and it was common to take them; and if there was any difficulty in fulfilling them, they could easily apply to their religious teachers and be absolved. ¶ That they would neither eat nor drink. That is, that they would do it as soon as possible. This was a common form of an oath, or curse, among the Jews. Sometimes they only vowed abstinence from particular things, as from meat, or wine. But in this case, to make the oath more certain and binding, they vowed abstinence from all kinds of food and drink till they had killed him. Who these were—whether they were Sadducees or not—is not mentioned by the sacred writer. It is evident, however, that the minds of the Jews were greatly inflamed against Paul; and as they saw him in the custody of the Roman tribune, and as there was no prospect that he would punish him, they resolved to take the matter into their own hands. Michaelis conjectures that they were of the number of the Sicarii, or cut-throats, with which Judea then abounded. See Notes on ch. xxi. 38. It is needless to remark that this was a most wicked oath. It was a deliberate purpose to commit murder; and it shows the desperate state of morals among the Jews at that time, and the infuriated malice of the people against the apostle, that such an oath could have been taken.

13. Which had made this conspiracy. This oath (ομονοία), this agreement, or compact. This large number of desperate men, bound by so solemn an oath, would be likely to be successful, and the life of Paul was therefore in peculiar danger. The manner in which they purposed to accomplish their design is stated in ver. 15.

14. And they came, &c. Probably by a deputation. ¶ To the chief priests and elders. The members of the great council, or Sanhedrim. It is probable that the application was made to the party of the Sadducees, as the Pharisees had shown their determination to defend Paul. They would have had no prospect of success had they attacked the curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now therefore ye, with the council, signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him; and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

castle, and they therefore devised this mode of obtaining access to Paul, where they might easily despatch him. ¶ Under a great curse. Greek, "We have anathematized ourselves with an anathema." We have made the vow as solemn as possible.

15. Ye, with the council. With the concurrence or request of the Sanhedrim. It was only by such a request that they had any hope that the chief captain would remove Paul from the castle. ¶ Signify to the chief captain. Send a message or request to him. ¶ That he bring him down unto you. That he bring him from the castle to the usual place of the meeting of the Sanhedrim. As this was at some distance from the castle of Antonia, where Paul was, they supposed it would be easy to waylay him and take his life. ¶ To-morrow. This is wanting in the Syriac, Vulgate, and Ethiopic versions. It is, however, probably the correct reading of the text, as it would be necessary to convene the council, and make the request of the tribune, which might require the whole of one day. ¶ As though ye would inquire, &c. This request appeared so reasonable that they did not doubt that the tribune would grant it to the council. And though it was obviously a false and wicked pretence, yet these conspirators knew the character of the persons to whom they addressed themselves so well that they did not doubt that they would prevail on the council to make the request. Public justice must have been deeply fallen when it was known that such an iniquitous request could be made with the certain prospect of success. ¶ Or ever he come near. Be-centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain; for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

fore he comes near to the Sanhedrim. The great council will thus not be suspected of being privy to the deed. We will waylay him, and murder him in the way. The plan was well laid; and nothing but the interposition of Providence could have prevented its execution.

16. Paul's sister's son. This is all that we know of the family of Paul. Nor do we know for what purpose he was at Jerusalem. It is possible that Paul might have a sister residing there; though, as Paul himself had been sent there formerly for his education, it seems more probable that this young man was sent there for the same purpose. ¶ Entered into the castle. Paul had the privileges of a Roman citizen, and as no well-founded charge had been laid against him, it is probable that he was not very closely confined, and that his friends might have free access to him.

17. Called one of the centurions. Who might at that time have had special charge of the castle, or been on guard. Paul had the most positive divine assurance that his life would be spared, and that he would yet see Rome; but he always understood the divine promises and purposes as being consistent with his own efforts, and with all proper measures of prudence and diligence in securing his own safety. He did not rest merely on the divine promises without any effort of his own, but he took encouragement from those promises to put forth his own exertions for security and for salvation.

18. And prayed me. And asked me.

19. Took him by the hand. As an expression of kindness and civility. He did it to draw him aside from the multitude, that he might communicate his message privately.

20. And he said, &c. In what way this young man had received intelligence of this, we can only conjecture. It is not improbable that he was a student under some one of the Jewish teachers, and that he might have learned it of him. It is not at all probable that the purpose of the forty men would be very closely kept. Indeed, it is evident that they were not themselves very anxious about concealing their oath, as they mentioned it freely to the chief priests and elders, ver. 14.

21. Looking for a promise from thee. Waiting for your consent to bring him down to them.

23. And he called unto him two centurions, &c. Each centurion had under him one hundred men. The chief captain resolved to place Paul beyond the power of the Jews, and to protect him as became a Roman citizen. ¶ Two hundred soldiers. These foot soldiers were designed only to guard Paul till he was safely out of Jerusalem. The horsemen only were intended to accompany him to Cesarea. See ver. 32. ¶ And horsemen. These were commonly attached to foot soldiers. In this case, however, they were designed to attend Paul to Cesarea. ¶ And spearmen—στρατιῶτες. This word is found nowhere else in the New Testament, and occurs in no classic writer. It properly means those who take, or apprehend by the right hand; and might be applied to those who apprehend prisoners, or to those who hold a spear or dart in the right hand for the purpose of throwing it. Some have conjectured that it should be read στρατιῶτες—those who cast or throw [a spear] with the right hand.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me.

23 And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beasts, that

So the Vulgate, the Syriac, and the Arabic understand it. They were probably those who were armed with spears or darts, and who attended on the Tribune as a guard. ¶ At the third hour of the night. At nine o'clock. This was in order that it might be done with secrecy, and to elude the band of desperadoes that had resolved to murder Paul. If it should seem that this guard was very numerous for one man, it should be remembered, (1) That the number of those who had conspired against him was also large; and, (2) That they were men accustomed to scenes of blood; men of desperate characters who had solemnly sworn that they would take his life. In order, therefore, to deter them effectually from attacking the guard, it was made very numerous and strong. Nearly five hundred men were appointed to guard Paul as he left Jerusalem.

24. And provide them beasts. One for Paul, and one for each of his attendants. The word translated beasts (κτήνη) is of a general character, and may be applied either to horses, camels, or asses. The latter were most commonly employed in Judea. ¶ Unto Felix the governor. The governor of Judea. His place of residence was Cesarea, about sixty miles from Jerusalem. See Notes on ch. viii. 40. His name was Antonius Felix. He was a freedman of Antonia, the mother of the Emperor Claudius. He was high in the favour of Claudius, and was made by him governor of Judea. Josephus calls him Claudius Felix. He had married three wives in succession that were of royal families, one of whom was Drusilla, afterward mentioned in ch. xxiv. 24, who was sister to King Agrippa. Tacitus (Hist., v. 9) says that he governed with all the authority of a king, and the baseness and insolence of a slave. "He was an unrighteous governor, a base, mercenary, and bad man" (Clarke). See his character further described in the Notes on ch. xxiv. 25.

26. Unto the most excellent governor Felix. The most honoured, &c. This was a mere title of office. ¶ Greeting. A term of salutation in an epistle wishing health, joy, and prosperity.

27. Should have been killed of them. Was about to be killed by them. The life of Paul had been twice endangered in this manner, ch. xxi. 30; xxiii. 10. ¶ With an army. With a band of soldiers, ver. 10.

29. Questions of their law. So he understood the whole controversy to be. ¶ Worthy of death. By the Roman law. He had been guilty of no crime against the Roman people. ¶ Or of bonds. Of chains, or of confinement.

31. To Antipatris. This town was anciently called Cafar-Saba. Josephus says (Antig., xiii. 23) that it was about 17 miles from Joppa. It was about 26 miles from Cesarea, and of course about 35 from Jerusalem. Herod the Great changed its name to Antipatris, in honour of his father Antipater. It was situated in a fine plain, and watered with many springs and fountains. The Rev. Eli Smith, D.D., late missionary to Palestine, who took a journey from Jerusalem to Joppa for the purpose of ascertaining Paul's route, supposes that the site of Antipatris is the present Kefr Saba. Of this village he gives the following description in the Biblioteca Sacra for 1843: "It is a Muslim village of considerable size, and wholly like the most common villages of the plain, being built entirely of mud. We saw but one stone building, which was apparently a mosque, but without a minaret. No old ruins, nor the least relic of antiquity, did we anywhere discover. A well by which we stopped, a few rods east of the houses, exhibits more signs of careful workmanship than anything else. It is walled with hewn stone, and is 57 feet deep to the water. The village stands upon a slight circular eminence near the western hills, from which it is actually separated, however, by a branch of the plain."

32. They left the horsemen. As they were then beyond the danger of the conspirators, the soldiers who had guarded them thus far returned to Jerusalem.

34. Of what province he was. Greek, of what hearchy (ιαρχίας) he was. He knew from the letter of Lysias that he was a Roman, but he was not informed of what place or province he 35 I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.

CHAPTER XXIV.

AND after five days, Ananias, the high-priest, descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.

was. This he doubtless did in order to ascertain whether he properly belonged to his jurisdiction. Roman provinces were districts of country which were intrusted to the jurisdiction of procurators. How far the jurisdiction of Felix extended is not certainly known. It appears, however, that it included Cilicia. ¶ Was of Cilicia. Tarsus, the birthplace of Paul, was in this province, ch. xxi. 39.

35. In Herod's judgment hall. Greek, in the prætorium of Herod. The word here used denoted formerly the tent of the Roman prætor; and as that was the place where justice was administered, it came to be applied to halls, or courts of justice. This had been reared probably by Herod the Great as his palace, or as a place for administering justice. It is probable, also, that prisons, or places of security, would be attached to such places.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1. And after five days. This time was occupied, doubtless, in their receiving the command to go to Cesarea, and in making the necessary arrangements. This was the twelfth day after Paul's arrival at Jerusalem. See ver. 11. ¶ Ananias, the high-priest. See Notes on ch. xxiii. 2. ¶ Descended. Came down from Jerusalem. This was the usual language when a departure from Jerusalem was spoken of. See Notes on ch. xv. 1. ¶ With a certain orator named Tertullus. Appointed to accuse Paul. This is a Roman name, and this man was doubtless a Roman. As the Jews were, to a great extent, ignorant of the Roman laws, and of their mode of administering justice, it is not improbable that they were in the habit of employing Roman lawyers to plead their causes. ¶ Who informed the governor against Paul. Who acted as the accuser, or who managed their cause before the governor.

orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in b Ps. 11.2. c Ps. 12.2.

2. And when he was called forth. When Paul was called forth from prison. See ch. xxiii. 35. ¶ We enjoy great quietness. This was said in the customary style of flatterers and orators, to conciliate the favour of the judge, and is strikingly in contrast with the more honest and straightforward introduction in reply of Paul, ver. 10. Though it was said for flattery, and though Felix was in many respects an unprincipled man, yet it was true that his administration had been the means of producing much peace and order in Judea, and that he had done many things that tended to promote the welfare of the nation. In particular, he had arrested a band of robbers, with Eleazar at their head, whom he had sent to Rome to be punished (Jos. Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii.); he had arrested the Egyptian false prophet who had led out four thousand men into the wilderness, and who threatened the peace of Judea (see Note, ch. xxi. 38); and he had repressed a sedition which arose between the inhabitants of Cesarea and of Syria (Jos. Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. xiii. § 2). ¶ Very worthy deeds. Acts that tended much to promote the peace and security of the people. He referred to those which have just been mentioned as having been accomplished by Felix, particularly his success in suppressing riots and seditions; and as, in the view of the Jews, the case of Paul was another instance of a similar kind, he appealed to him with the more confidence that he would suppress that also. ¶ By thy providence. By thy foresight, skill, vigilance, prudence.

3. We accept it always. We admit that it is owing to your vigilance, and we accept your interposition to promote peace with gratitude. ¶ Always, and in all places. Not merely in your presence, but we always acknowledge that it is owing to your vigilance that the land is secure. "What we now do in your presence, we do also in your absence;

all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes.

d Lu.23.2; ch.6.13; 16.20; 17.6; 21.28; 1 Pe.2.12,19.

we do not commend you merely when you are present" (Wetstein). ¶ Most noble Felix. This was the title of office. ¶ With thankfulness. In this there was probably sincerity, for there was no doubt that the peace of Judea was owing to Felix. But at the same time that he was an energetic and vigilant governor, it was also true that he was proud, avaricious, and cruel. Josephus charges him with injustice and cruelty in the case of Jonathan, the high-priest (Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii. § 5), and Tacitus (Hist., b. v. ch. ix.) and Suetonius (Life of Claudius, ch. xxviii.) concur in the charge.

4. Be not further tedious unto thee. By taking up your time with an introduction and with commendation.

5. We have found this man a pestilent fellow—λοιπόν. This word is commonly applied to a plague or pestilence, and then to a man who corrupts the morals of others, or who is turbulent, and an exciter of sedition. Our translation somewhat weakens the force of the original expression. Tertullus did not say that he was a pestilent fellow, but that he was the very pestilence itself. In this he referred to their belief that he had been the cause of extensive disturbances everywhere among the Jews. ¶ And a mover of sedition. An exciter of tumult. This they pretended he did by preaching doctrines contrary to the laws and customs of Moses, and exciting the Jews to tumult and disorder. ¶ Throughout the world. Throughout the Roman empire, and thus leading the Jews to violate the laws, and to produce tumults, riots, and disorder. ¶ And a ringleader—πρωτοστάτην. This word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It is properly a military word, and denotes one who stands first in an army, a standard-bearer, a leader, a commander. The meaning is, that Paul had been so active, and so prominent in preaching the gospel, that he had been a leader, or the principal person in extending the sect of the Nazarenes. ¶ Of the sect. The original word here (αἵρετος) is the word from which we have derived the term heresy. It is, however, properly translated sect, or party, and should have been so translated in ver. 14. See Notes on ch. v. 17. ¶ Of the Nazarenes. This was the name usually given to Christians by way of contempt. They were so called because Jesus was of Nazareth.

6. Who also hath gone about. Who has endeavoured. ¶ To profane the temple. This was a serious, but unfounded charge. It arose from the gross calumny of the Jews, when they pretended that he had introduced Greeks into that sacred place, ch. xxi. 28. To this charge he replies in ver. 18. ¶ And would have judged. That is, would have condemned and punished. ¶ According to our law. Their law, which forbade the introduction of strangers into the temple.

7. But the chief captain, &c. Tertullus pretends that they would have judged Paul righteously if Lysias had not interposed; but the truth was, that, without regard to law or justice, they would have murdered him on the spot.

8. Commanding his accusers, &c. Ch. xxiii. 30. ¶ By examining of whom. That is, the Jews who were then present. Tertullus offered them as his witnesses of the truth of what he had said. It is evident that we have here only the summary or outline of the speech which he made. It is incredible that a Roman rhetorician would have on such an occasion delivered an address so brief, so meagre, and so destitute of display as this. But it is doubtless a correct summary of his address, and contains the leading points of the accusation. It is customary for the sacred writers, as for other writers, to give only the outline of discourses and arguments. Such a course was inevitable, unless the New Testament had been swelled to wholly undue proportions.

9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

9. And the Jews also assented. The Jews who had accompanied Tertullus to Cesarea. They had gone as the accusers of Paul, and they bore testimony, when called upon, to the truth of all that the orator had said. Whether they were examined individually or not is not declared. In whatever way their testimony was arrived at, they confirmed unanimously the accusation which he had brought against Paul.

10. Had beckoned unto him to speak. Either by a nod or by the hand. ¶ Hast been of many years. Felix and Cumanus had been joint governors of Judea; but after Cumanus had been condemned for his bad administration of affairs, the government fell entirely into the hands of Felix. This was about seven years before Paul was arraigned, and might be called many years, as he had been long enough there to become acquainted with the customs and habits of the Jews; and it might also be called long in comparison with the short time which his immediate predecessors had held the office. See Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. vi. vii. ¶ A judge. This word is evidently used here in the sense of magistrate, or one appointed to administer the affairs of government. To determine litigated matters was, however, one part of his office. It is remarkable that Paul did not begin his speech, as Tertullus had done, by any flattering address, or by any of the arts of rhetoric. He founded his plea on the justice of his cause, and on the fact that Felix had had so much experience in the affairs of Judea that he was well qualified to understand the merits of the case, and to judge impartially. Paul was well acquainted with his character (see Notes on ch. xxiv. 25), and would to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully 'answer for myself:

not by flattering words declare that which was not strictly true. ¶ I do the more cheerfully, &c. Since you are so well acquainted with the customs and habits of the Jews, I the more readily submit the case to your disposal. This address indicated great confidence in the justice of his cause, and was the language of a man bold, fearless, and conscious of innocence.

11. Because that thou mayest understand. Greek, "Thou being able to know." That is, he could understand or know by taking the proper evidence. Paul does not mean to say that Felix could understand the case because he had been many years a judge of that nation. That fact would qualify him to judge correctly, or to understand the customs of the Jews. But the fact that he himself had been but twelve days in Jerusalem, and had been orderly and peaceable there, Felix could ascertain only by the proper testimony. The first part of Paul's defence (ver. 11-13) consists in an express denial of what they alleged against him. ¶ Are yet but twelve days. Beza reckons these twelve days in this manner: The first was that on which he came to Jerusalem, ch. xxi. 15. The second he spent with James and the apostles, ch. xxi. 18. Six days were spent in fulfilling his vow, ch. xxi. 21, 26. On the ninth day the tumult arose, being the seventh day of his vow, and on this day he was rescued by Lysias, ch. xxi. 27; xxii. 29. The tenth day he was before the Sanhedrim, ch. xxii. 30; xxiii. 10. On the eleventh the plot was laid to take his life, and on the same day, at evening, he was removed to Cesarea. The days on which he was confined at Cesarea are not enumerated, since his design in mentioning the number of days was to show the improbability that in that time he had been engaged in producing a tumult; and it would not be pretended that he had been so engaged while confined in a prison at Cesarea. The defence of Paul here is, that but twelve days elapsed from the time that he went to understand that there are yet but twelve days since <sup>I</sup>* went up to Jerusalem for to worship.

14 But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call

Jerusalem till he was put under the custody of Felix; and that during so short a time it was wholly improbable that he would have been able to excite sedition. ¶ For to worship. This farther shows that the design of Paul was not to produce sedition. He had gone up for the peaceful purpose of devotion, and not to produce riot and disorder. That this was his design in going to Jerusalem, or at least a part of his purpose, is indicated by the passage in Ac. xx. 16. It should be observed, however, that our translation conveys an idea which is not necessarily in the Greek—that this was the design of his going to Jerusalem. The original is, "Since I went up to Jerusalem worshipping" (προσκυνῶν); that is, he was actually engaged in devotion when the tumult arose. But his main design in going to Jerusalem was to convey to his suffering countrymen there the benefactions of the Gentile churches. See ver. 17; Ro. xv. 25, 26.

12. And they neither found me, &c. The first charge of Tertullus against Paul was (ver. 5) that he was "a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition." The charge of his being a pest was so general that Paul did not think it necessary to attempt to refute it. To the specification that he was a mover of sedition, he replies by a firm denial, and by a solemn declaration that they had not found him in any synagogue, or in the city, or in the temple, either disputing or exciting a tumult. His conduct there had been entirely peaceable, and they had no right to suppose that it had been otherwise anywhere.

13. Neither can they prove the things, &c. That is, that I am a mover of sedition, or a disturber of the peace of the people. This appeal he boldly makes; he challenges investigation; and as they did not offer to specify any acts of disorder or tumult excited by him, this charge falls of course.

14. But this I confess, &c. The next specification in the charge of Tertullus was (ver. 5) that he was "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." To this, Paul replies in this and the two following verses. Of this reply we may observe, (1) That he does not stoop to notice the contempt implied in the use of the word Nazarenes. He was engaged in a more important business than to contend about the name which they chose to give to Christians. (2) He admits that he belonged to that sect or class of people. That he was a Christian he neither denied, nor was disposed to deny. (3) He maintains that in this way he was still worshipping the God of his fathers. Of this, the fact that he was engaged in worship in the temple was sufficient proof. (4) He shows them that he believed only what was written in the law and the prophets; that this involved the main doctrine of their religion—the hope of the resurrection of the dead, ver. 15; and that it was his constant and earnest desire to keep a pure conscience in all things, ver. 16. These are the points of his defence to the second charge, and we shall see that they fully meet and dispose of the accusation. ¶ After the way. After the manner or mode of worship. ¶ Which they call heresy. This translation does not express to us the force of the original. We have attached to the word heresy an idea which is not conveyed by the Greek word, since we now commonly understand by it error of doctrine. In Paul's answer here, there is an explicit reference to their charge which does not appear in our version. The charge of Tertullus was, that he was the ringleader of the sect (τῆς αἵρετος) of the Nazarenes, ver. 5. To this Paul replies, "After the way which they call sect (αἵρετον, not error of doctrine), but after a way which they affirm is producing division or schism), so worship I the God of my fathers." Paul was not ashamed to be called a follower of that sect or party among the Jewish people. Nor should we be ashamed to worship God in a mode that is called heresy or schism, if we do it in obedience to conscience and to God. ¶ So wor- ship I. I continue to worship. I have not departed from the characteristic of the Jewish people, the proper and public acknowledgment of the God of the Jews. ¶ The God of my fathers. My father's God, Jehovah; the God whom my Jewish ancestors adored. There is something very touching in this, and fitted to find its way to the heart of a Jew. He had introduced no new object of worship (comp. De. xiii. 1-5); he had not become a follower of a false or foreign God; and this fact was really a reply to their charge that he was setting up a new sect in religion. The same thing Paul affirms of himself in 2 Ti. i. 3: "I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with a pure conscience." ¶ Believing all things, &c. Particularly respecting the Messiah. So he more fully explains his meaning in his speech before King Agrippa, ch. xxvi. 23. ¶ In the law and in the prophets. Commanded in the law of Moses, and foretold by the prophets. That Paul had ever disbelieved any of these things they could not prove; and his whole course had shown that he fully credited the sacred records. Most of his arguments in defending Christianity had been drawn from the Jewish writings.

15. And have hope toward God. Having a hope of the resurrection of the dead, which arises from the promises of God. ¶ Which they themselves, &c. That is, the Pharisees. Perhaps he designated in this remark the Pharisees who were present. He held nothing in this great cardinal point which they did not also hold. For the reasons why he introduced this point so prominently, and the success of thus introducing it, see Notes on ch. xxiii. 1-9. ¶ Both of the just and of the unjust. Of the righteous and the wicked; that is, of all the race. As they held this, they could not arraign him for holding it also.

16. And herein. In this, or for this purpose. ¶ Do I exercise myself—ἀστεῖον. I accustom or employ myself; I make it my constant aim. Paul often appeals which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

to his conscientiousness as the leading habit of his life. Even before his conversion he endeavoured to act according to the dictates of conscience. See Ac. xxvi. 9; comp. Phi. iii. 5, 6. ¶ To have always a conscience, &c. To do that which is right, so that my conscience shall never reproach me. ¶ Void of offence—ἀνέργοντος. That which is inoffensive, or which does not cause one to stumble or fall. He means that he endeavoured to keep his conscience so enlightened and pure in regard to duty, and that he acted according to its dictates in such a way that his conduct should not be displeasing to God or injurious to man. To have such a conscience implies two things: (1) That it be enlightened or properly informed in regard to truth and duty; and, (2) That that which is made known to be right should be honestly and faithfully performed. Without these two things no man can have a conscience that will be inoffensive and harmless. ¶ Toward God. In an honest endeavour to discharge the duties of public and private worship, and to do constantly what he requires—believing all that he has spoken; doing all that he requires; and offering to him the service which he approves. ¶ Toward men. In endeavouring to meet all the demands of justice and mercy; to advance their knowledge, happiness, and salvation; living so that I may look back on my life with the reflection that I have done all that I ought to have done, and all that I could do to promote the welfare of the whole human family. What a noble principle of conduct was this! How elevated and how pure! How unlike the conduct of those who live to gratify debasing sensual appetites, or for gold or honour; of those who pass their lives in such a manner as to offer the grossest offence to God, and to do the most injury to man. The great and noble aim of Paul was to be pure; and no slander of his enemies, no trials, persecutions, perils, or pains of dying could take away the approving void of offence toward God and toward men.

17 Now after many years "I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult;

voice of conscience. Alike in his travels and in his persecutions; among friends and foes; when preaching in the synagogue, the city, or the desert; or when defending himself before governors and kings, he had this testimony of a self-approving mind. Happy they who thus frame their lives. And happy will be the end of a life where this has been the grand object of the journey through this world.

17. Now after many years. After many years' absence. Paul here commences a reply to the charge of Tertullus, that he had endeavoured to profane the temple, ver. 6. He begins by saying that his design in coming up to Jerusalem was to bring to his countrymen needed aid in a time of distress. It would be absurd to suppose, therefore, that his object in coming was to violate the customs of the temple, and to desile it. ¶ I came to bring. See ch. xi. 29, 30; comp. Notes on Ro. xv. 25, 26. ¶ Alms. Charities; the gift of the churches. ¶ To my nation. Not to all the nation, but to the poor saints or Christians who were in Judea, and who were suffering much by persecutions and trials. ¶ And offerings. The word used here properly denotes an offering or gift of any kind; but it is usually applied to an oblation or offering made to God in the temple—a thank-offering, a sacrifice. This is probably its meaning here. He came to bring aid to his needy countrymen, and an offering to God; and it was, therefore, no part of his purpose to interfere with, or to profane the worship of the temple.

18. Certain Jews from Asia. Ch. xxi. 27. ¶ Found me purified in the temple. Ch. xxi. 26, 27. They found me engaged in the sacred service of completing the observance of my vow. ¶ Neither with multitude. Not having introduced a multitude with me—in a quiet and peaceful manner.

19 Who<sup>w</sup> ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had aught against me.

20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council,

They were the proper witnesses, and as they had staid away it showed that they were not prepared to undergo a strict examination. They alone could testify as to anything that occurred in the temple; and as they were not present, that charge ought to be dismissed.

20. Or else. Since they are not here to witness against me in regard to what occurred in the temple, let these here present bear witness against me, if they can, in regard to any other part of my conduct. This was a bold appeal, and it showed his full consciousness of innocence. ¶ Let these same here say. The Jews who are here present. ¶ Any evil doing. Any improper conduct, or any violation of the law. ¶ While I stood before the council. The Sanhedrim, ch. xxiii. 1–10. As they were present there, Paul admits that they were competent to bear witness to his conduct on that occasion, and calls upon them to testify, if they could, to any impropriety in his conduct.

21. Except it be for this one voice. For this one expression or declaration. This was what Paul had said before the council—the main thing on which he had insisted, and he calls on them to testify to this, and to show, if they could, that in this declaration he had been wrong. Chubb and other infidels have supposed that Paul here acknowledges that he was wrong in the declaration which he made when he said that he was called in question for the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead (ch. xxiii. 6), and that his conscience reproached him for appearing to be time-serving, for concealing the true cause of offence against him, and for attempting to take advantage of their divisions of sentiment, thus endeavouring to produce discord in the council. But against this supposition we may urge the following considerations: (1) Paul wished to fix their attention on the main thing

Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When "Lysias, the chief captain, shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.

which he had said before the council. (2) It was true, as has been shown on the passage (xxiii. 1-10), that this was the principal doctrine which Paul had been defending. (3) If they were prepared to witness against him for holding and teaching the resurrection of the dead as a false or evil doctrine, he called on them to do it. As this had been the only thing which they had witnessed before the council, he calls on them to testify to what they knew only, and to show, if they could, that this was wrong. ¶ Touching the resurrection, &c. Respecting the resurrection, ch. xxiii. 6.

22 Having more perfect knowledge of that way. Our translation of this verse is very obscure, and critics are divided about the proper interpretation of the original. Many (Erasmus, Luther, Michaelis, Morus, &c.) render it, "Although he had a more perfect knowledge of the Christian doctrine than Paul's accusers had, yet he deferred the hearing of the cause till Lysias had come down." They observe that he might have obtained this knowledge not only from the letter of Lysias, but from public rumour, as there were doubtless Christians at Cesarea. They suppose that he deferred the cause either with the hope of receiving a bribe from Paul (comp. ver. 26), or to gratify the Jews with his being longer detained as a prisoner. Others, among whom are Beza, Grotius, Rosenmüller, and Doddridge, suppose that it should be rendered, "He deferred them, and said, after I have been more accurately informed concerning this way, when Lysias has come down, I will hear the cause." This is doubtless the true interpretation of the passage, and it is rendered more probable by the fact that Felix sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith of Christ (ver. 24), evidently with the design to make himself better acquainted with the charges against him, and the nature of his belief. ¶ Of that way. Of the Christian religion. This expression is repeatedly used by Luke to denote the Christian doctrine. See Notes on ch. ix. 2. ¶ He deferred them. He put them off; he postponed the decision of the case; he adjourned the trial. ¶ When Lysias, &c. Lysias had been acquainted with the excitement and its causes, and Felix regarded him as an important witness in regard to the true nature of the charges against Paul. ¶ I will know the uttermost, &c. I shall be fully informed, and prepared to decide the cause.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.

23. And he commanded, &c. It is evident from this verse that Felix was disposed to show Paul all the favours that were consistent with his safe keeping. He esteemed him to be a persecuted man, and doubtless regarded the charges against him as entirely malicious. What was Felix's motive in this cannot be certainly known. It is not improbable, however, that he detained him, (1) To gratify the Jews by keeping him in custody as if he were guilty, and, (2) That he hoped the friends of Paul would give him money to release him. Perhaps it was for this purpose that he gave orders that his friends should have free access to him, that thus Paul might be furnished with the means of purchasing his freedom.

24. Felix came, with his wife Drusilla. Drusilla was the daughter of Herod Agrippa the elder, and was engaged to be married to Epiphanes, the son of King Antiochus, on condition that he would embrace the Jewish religion; but as he afterward refused to do that, the contract was broken off. Afterward she was given in marriage, by her brother Agrippa the younger, to Azizus, king of Emesa, upon his consent to be circumcised. When Felix was governor of Judea, he saw Drusilla and fell in love with her, and sent to her Simon, one of his friends, a Jew, by birth a Cyprian, who pretended to be a magician, to endeavour to persuade her to forsake her husband and to marry Felix. Accordingly, in order to avoid the envy of her sister Bernice, who treated her ill on account of her beauty, "she was prevailed on," says Josephus, "to transgress the laws of her forefathers, and to marry Felix" (Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. vii. § 1, 2). She was, therefore, living in adultery with him, and this was probably the reason why Paul dwelt in his discourse before Felix particularly on "temperance," or chastity. See Notes on ver. 25. ¶ He sent for Paul, and heard him. Perhaps he did this in order to be more fully acquainted with the case which was submitted to him. It is possible, also, that it might have been to gratify his wife, who was a Jewess, and who doubtless had a desire to be acquainted with the principles of this new sect. It is certain, also, that one object which Felix had in this was to let Paul see how dependent he was on him, and to induce him to purchase his liberty. ¶ Concerning the faith in Christ. Concerning the Christian religion. Faith in Christ is often used to denote the whole of Christianity, as it is the leading and characteristic feature of the religion of the gospel.

25. And as he reasoned. Greek, "And he discoursing" — διαλεγομένος δι αἰρεῖν. No argument should be drawn from the word that is used here to prove that Paul particularly appealed to reason, or that his discourse was argumentative. That it was so is, indeed, not improbable, from all that we know of the man, and from the topics on which he discoursed. But the word used here means simply as he discoursed, and is applied usually to making a public address, to preaching, &c., in whatever way it is done, Ac. xvii. 2; xviii. 4, 19; xix. 8, 9; xxiv. 12. Felix and Drusilla intended this as a matter of entertainment or amusement. Paul readily obeyed their summons, as it gave him an opportunity to preach the gospel to them; and as they desired his sentiments in regard to the faith in Christ, he selected those topics which were adapted to their condition, and stated those principles of the Christian religion which were fitted to arrest their attention, and to lead them to repentance. Paul seized every opportunity of making known the gospel; and whether a prisoner or at liberty; whether before princes, governors, kings, or common people, he was equally prepared to defend the pure and holy doctrines of the cross. His boldness in this instance is the more remarkable, as he was dependent on Felix for his release. A time-server or an impostor would have chosen such topics as would have conciliated the favour of the judge, and procured his discharge from custody. He would have flattered his vanity or palliated his vices. But such an idea never seems to have occurred to Paul. His aim was to defend the truth, and to save, if possible, the souls of Drusilla and of Felix. ¶ Of righteousness — πρᾶσις δικαιοσύνης. Of justice. Not of the justice of God particularly, but of the nature and requirements of justice in the relations of life—the relations which we sustain to God and to man. This was a proper topic with which to introduce his discourse, as it was the office of Felix to dispense justice between man and man, and as his administration was not remarkable for the exercise of that virtue. It is evident that he could be influenced by a bribe (ver. 26), and it was proper for Paul to dwell on this, as designed to show him the guilt of his life, and his danger of meeting the justice of a Being who cannot be bribed, but who will dispense equal justice alike to the great and the mean. That Paul dwelt also on the justice of God, as the moral governor of the world, may also be presumed. The apprehension of that justice, and the remembrance of his own guilty life, tended to produce the alarm of Felix, and to make him tremble. ¶ Temperance — ἀνησυχίας. The word temperance we now use commonly to denote moderation, or restraint in regard to eating and drinking, particularly to abstinence from the use of ardent spirits. But this is not its meaning here. There is no reason to suppose that Felix was intemperate in the use of intoxicating liquors. The original word here denotes a restraint of all the passions and evil inclinations, and may be applied to prudence, chastity, and moderation in general. The particular thing in the life of Felix which Paul had probably in view was the indulgence of licentious desires, or incontinence. He was living in adultery with Drusilla, and for this Paul wished doubtless to bring him to repentance. ¶ And judgment to come. The universal judgment that was to come on all transgressors. On this topic Paul also dwelt when he preached on Mars' Hill at Athens, Ac. xvii. 31. These topics were admirably adapted to excite the alarm of both Felix and Drusilla. It evinced great boldness and faithfulness in Paul to select them, and the result showed that he correctly judged of the kind of truth which was adapted to alarm the fears of his guilty auditor. ¶ Felix trembled. In view of his past sins, and in the apprehension of the judgment to come. The Greek (ιμοθεστ) does not denote that his body was agitated or shaken, but only that he was alarmed or terrified. That such fear usually shakes the frame, we know; but it is not certain that the body of Felix was thus agitated. He was alarmed and terrified, and looked with deep apprehension to the coming judgment. This was a remarkable instance of the effect of truth on the mind of a man unaccustomed to such alarms, and unused to hear such truth. It shows the power of conscience when thus, under the preaching of a prisoner, the judge is thrown into violent alarm. ¶ And answered, Go thy way, &c. How different is this answer from that of the jailer of Philippi when alarmed in a similar manner! He asked, "What must I do to be saved?" and was directed to him in whom he found peace from a troubled conscience, Ac. xvi. 30, 31. Felix was troubled; but instead of asking what he should do, he sent the messenger of God away. He was evidently not prepared to break off his sins and turn to God. He sought peace by sending away his reprobate, and manifestly intended then to banish the subject from his mind. Yet, like others, he did not intend to banish it altogether. He looked forward to a time when he would be more at leisure; when the cares of office would press less heavily on his attention; or when he would be more disposed to attend to it. Thus multitudes, when they are alarmed, and see their guilt and danger, resolve to defer it to a more convenient time. One man is engaged in a career of pleasure, and it is not now a convenient time to attend to his soul's salvation. Another is pressed with business; with the cares of life; with a plan of gain; with the labours of office or of a profession, and it is not now a convenient time for him to attend to religion. Another supposes that his time of life is not the most convenient. His youth he desires to spend in pleasure, and waits for a more convenient time in middle age. His middle life he spends in business, and this is not a convenient time. Such a period he expects then to find in old age. But as age advances he finds an increasing disposition to defer it; he is still indisposed to attend to it; still in love with the world. Even old age is seldom found to be a convenient time to prepare for heaven; and it is deferred from one period of life to another, till death closes the scene. It has been commonly supposed and said that Felix never found that more convenient time to call for Paul. That he did not embrace the Christian religion, and forsake his sins, is probable, nay, almost certain. But it is not true that he did not take an opportunity of hearing Paul further on the subject; for it is said that he sent for him often, and communed with him. But, though Felix found this opportunity, yet, (1) We have no reason to suppose that the main thing—the salvation of his soul—ever again occupied his attention. There is no evidence that he was again alarmed or awakened, or that he had any further solicitude on the subject of his sins. He had passed for ever the favourable time—the golden moments when he might have secured the salvation of his soul. (2) Others have no right to suppose that their lives will be lengthened out that they may have any further opportunity to attend to the subject of religion. (3) When a sinner is awakened, and sees his past sins, if he rejects the appeal to his conscience then, and defers it to a more convenient opportunity, he has no reason to expect that his attention will ever be again called with deep interest to the subject. He may live, but he may live without the strivings of the Holy Spirit. When a man has once deliberately rejected the offers of mercy;

26 He hoped also that <sup>a</sup>money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him; wherefore

when he has trifled with the influences of the Spirit of God, he has no right or reason to expect that that Spirit will ever strive with him again. Such, we have too much reason to fear, was the case with Felix. Though he often saw Paul again, and "communed with him," yet there is no statement that he was again alarmed or awakened. And thus sinners often attend on the means of grace after they have grieved the Holy Spirit; they listen to the doctrines of the gospel, they hear its appeals and its warnings, but they have no feeling, no interest, and die in their sins. ¶ A more convenient time. Greek, "taking time." I will take a time for this. ¶ I will call for thee. To hear thee further on this subject. This he did, ver. 26. It is remarkable that Drusilla was not alarmed. She was as much involved in guilt as Felix; but she, being a Jewess, had been accustomed to hear of a future judgment until it caused in her mind no alarm. Perhaps also she depended on the rites and ceremonies of her religion as a sufficient expiation for her sins. She might have been resting on those false dependencies which go to free the conscience from a sense of guilt, and which thus beguile and destroy the soul.

26. He hoped also. He thought that by giving him access to his friends, and by often meeting him himself, and showing kindness, Paul might be induced to attempt to purchase his freedom with a bribe. ¶ That money should have been given him of Paul. That Paul would give him money to procure a release. This shows the character of Felix. He was desirous of procuring a bribe. Paul had proved his innocence, and should have been at once discharged. But Felix was influenced by avarice, and he therefore detained Paul in custody with the hope that, wearied with confinement, he would seek his release by a bribe. But Paul offered no bribe. He knew what was justice, and he would not be guilty, therefore, of attempting to purchase what was his due, or of gratifying a man who prostituted his high office for the purposes of gain. The Roman governors in the provinces were commonly rapacious and avaricihe sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27 But after two years, Porcius Festus came into Felix' room; and ous, like Felix. They usually took the office for its pecuniary advantage, and they consequently usually disregarded justice, and made the procuring of money their leading object. ¶ He sent for him the oftener. It may seem remarkable that he did not fear that he would again become alarmed. But the hope of money overcame all this. Having once resisted the reasoning of Paul, and the strivings of the Spirit of God, he seems to have had no further alarm or anxiety. He could again hear the same man, and the same truth, unaffected. When sinners have once grieved God's Spirit, they often sit with unconcern under the same truth which once alarmed them, and become entirely hardened and unconcerned. ¶ And communed with him. And conversed with him.

27. But after two years. Paul was unjustly detained during all this time. The hope of Felix seems to have been to weary his patience, and induce him to purchase his freedom. ¶ Came into Felix' room. As governor. ¶ And Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure. Desirous of pleasing them, even at the expense of justice. This shows the principle on which he acted. ¶ Left Paul bound. Left him in custody to the charge of his successor. His object in this was to conciliate the Jews; that is, to secure their favour, and to prevent them, if possible, from accusing him for the evils of his administration before the emperor. The account which Luke gives here coincides remarkably with that which Josephus has given. He says that Porcius Festus was sent as successor to Felix by Nero. He does not, indeed, mention Paul, or say that Felix sought to conciliate the favour of the Jews, but he gives such an account as to make the statement by Luke perfectly consistent with his character while in office. He informs us that Felix was unpopular, and that there was reason to apprehend that the Jews would accuse him before the emperor; and, therefore, the statement in the Acts that he would be willing to show the Jews a favour, is in perfect keeping with his character and circumstances, and is one of those undesigned coinci- dences which show that the author of the Acts was fully acquainted with the circumstances of the time, and that his history is true. The account in Josephus is, that "when Porcius Festus was sent as successor to Felix by Nero, the principal inhabitants of Cesarea went up to Rome to accuse Felix; and he had been certainly brought to punishment unless Nero had yielded to the importunate solicitations of his brother Palias, who was at that time had in the greatest honour by him" (Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii. § 9). The plan of Felix, therefore, in suppressing the enmity of the Jews, and conciliating their favour by injustice to Paul, did not succeed, and is one of those instances, so numerous in the world, where a man gains nothing by wickedness. He sought money from Paul by iniquity, and failed; he sought by injustice to obtain the favour of the Jews, and failed in that also. And the inference from the whole transaction is, that "honesty is the best policy," and that men in any office should pursue a course of firm, constant, and undeviating integrity.

CHAPTER XXV.

1. Now when Festus was come. See Notes on ch. xxiv. 27. ¶ Into the province. The province of Judea; for Judea at that time was a Roman province. ¶ After three days. Having remained three days at Cesarea. ¶ He ascended. This was the usual language in describing a journey to Jerusalem. Thus the English people speak of going up to London, because it is the capital. See Notes on ch. xv. 1. ¶ To Jerusalem. The governors of Judea at this time usually resided at Cesarea; but as Jerusalem had been the former capital; as it was still the seat of the religious solemnities; as the Sanhedrim held its meetings there; and as the great, and rich, and learned men, and the priests resided there, it is evident that a full knowledge of the state of the province could be obtained only there. Festus, therefore, having entered on the duties of his days he ascended from Cesarea to Jerusalem.

2 Then the high-priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him office, early went to Jerusalem to make himself acquainted with the affairs of the nation.

2. Then the high-priest. The high-priest at this time was Ismael, the son of Fabi. He had been promoted to that office by Agrippa (Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. viii. § 8). It is probable, however, that the person here intended was Ananias, who had been high-priest, and who would retain the name. See Notes on ch. xxiii. 2. Some MSS. read high-priests here in the plural number, and this reading is approved by Mill and Griesbach. There is, however, no improbability in supposing that the high-priest Ismael might have been also as much enraged against Paul as the others. ¶ Informed him against Paul. Informed him of the accusation against him, and doubtless endeavoured to prejudice the mind of Festus against him. They thus showed their unrelenting disposition. It might have been supposed that after two years this unjust prosecution would be abandoned and forgotten. But malice does not thus forget its object, and the spirit of persecution is not thus satisfied. It is evident that there was here every probability that injustice would be done to Paul, and that the mind of Festus would be biased against him. He was a stranger to Paul, and to the embittered feelings of the Jewish character. He would wish to conciliate their favour on entering on the duties of his office. A strong representation, therefore, made by the chief men of the nation, would be likely to prejudice him violently against Paul, and to unfit him for the exercise of impartial justice.

3. And desired favour against him. Desired the favour of Festus, that they might accomplish their wicked purpose on Paul. ¶ Would send for him to Jerusalem. Probably under a pretence that he might be tried by the Sanhedrim; or perhaps they wished Festus to hear the cause there, and to decide it while he was at Jerusalem. Their real motive is immediately stated. ¶ Laying wait in to Jerusalem, <sup>a</sup> laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Festus answered that Paul should be kept at Cesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them <sup>1</sup> more than ten days, he went down unto Cesarea; and the next day, sitting in the judg-

the way to kill him. That is, they would lie in wait, or they would employ a band of Sicarii, or assassins, to take his life on the journey. See Notes on ch. xxi. 38; xxiii. 12. It is altogether probable that if this request had been granted, Paul would have been killed. But God had promised him that he should bear witness to the truth at Rome (ch. xxiii. 11), and his providence was remarkable in thus influencing the mind of the Roman governor, and defeating the plans of the Jewish council.

4. But Festus answered, &c. What induced Festus to refuse their request is not known. It is probable, however, that he was apprised that Paul was a Roman citizen, and that his case could not come before the Jewish Sanhedrim, but must be heard by himself. As Cesarea was also at that time the residence of the Roman governor, and the place of holding the courts, and as Paul was lodged there safely, there did not appear to be any sufficient reason for removing him to Jerusalem for trial. Festus, however, granted them all that they could reasonably ask, and assured them that he should have a speedy trial.

5. Which among you are able. Enjoy all the advantages of just trial, and exhibit your accusations with all the learning and talent in your power. This was all that they could reasonably ask at his hands.

6. More than ten days. See the margin. The Syriac reads it, "eight or ten." The Vulgate, "not more than eight or ten." The Coptic, "eight or ten." Griesbach supposes this to be the true ment seat, commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, <sup>b</sup> which they could not prove.

8 While he answered for himself, Neither against the laws of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul,

reading, and has admitted it into the text. ¶ Sitting in the judgment seat. On the tribunal; or holding a court for the trial of Paul. ¶ Commanded Paul to be brought. To be brought up for trial. He had been secured, but was placed in the care of a soldier, who was commanded to let him have all the freedom that was consistent with his security.

7. Grievous complaints. Heavy accusations. Doubtless the same with which they had charged him before Felix, ch. xxiv. 5, 6. Comp. ch. xxv. 19. ¶ Which they could not prove. Ch. xxiv. 18, 19.

8. While he answered, &c. See this answer more at length in ch. xxiv. 10-21. As the accusations against him were the same now as then, he made to them the same reply.

9. But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure. Desirous of securing their favour, as he had just entered on his administration. Comp. ch. xxiv. 27. In this he evinced rather a desire of popularity than an inclination to do justice. Had he been disposed to do right at once, he would have immediately discharged Paul. Festus perceived that the case was one that did not come fairly within the jurisdiction of a Roman magistrate; that it pertained solely to the customs and questions among the Jews (ver. 18-20); and he therefore proposed that the case should be tried before him at Jerusalem. It is remarkable, however, that he had such a sense of justice and law as not to suffer the case to go out of his own hands. He proposed still to hear the cause, but asked Paul whether he was willing that and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat, where I it should be tried at Jerusalem. As the question which he asked Paul was one on which he was at liberty to take his own course, and as Paul had no reason to expect that his going to Jerusalem would facilitate the cause of justice, it is not remarkable that he declined the offer, as perhaps Festus supposed he would.

10. Then said Paul, &c. The reasons why Paul declined the proposal to be tried at Jerusalem are obvious. He had experienced so much violent persecution from his countrymen, and their minds were so full of prejudice, misconception, and enmity, that he had neither justice nor favour to hope at their hands. He knew, too, that they had formerly plotted against his life, and that he had been removed to Cesarea for the purpose of safety. It would be madness and folly to throw himself again into their hands, or to give them another opportunity to form a plan against his life. As he was, therefore, under no obligation to return to Jerusalem, and as Festus did not propose it because it could be supposed that justice would be promoted by it, but to gratify the Jews, Paul prudently declined the proposal, and appealed to the Roman emperor. ¶ I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat. The Roman emperors after Julius Cæsar were all called Cæsar; thus, Augustus Cæsar, Claudius Cæsar, &c., as all the kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh, though they had each his proper name, as Pharaoh Necho, &c. The emperor at this time (A.D. 60) was Nero, one of the most cruel and impious men that ever sat on a throne. It was under him that Paul was afterward beheaded. When Paul says, "I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat," he means to say that he regarded the tribunal before which he then stood, and on which Festus sat, as really the judgment seat of Cæsar. The procurator, or governor, held his commission from the Roman emperor, and it was, in fact, his tribunal. The reason why Paul made this declaration may be thus expressed: "I am a Roman citizen. I have a right to justice. I am under no obligation to put myself again in the hands of the Jews. I have a ought to be judged; to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

11 For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy right to a fair and impartial trial; and I claim the protection and privileges which all Roman citizens have before their tribunals—the right of a fair and just trial." It was, therefore, a severe rebuke of Festus for proposing to depart from the known justice of the Roman laws, and, for the sake of popularity, proposing to him to put himself in the hands of his enemies. ¶ Where I ought to be judged. Where I have a right to demand and expect justice. I have a right to be tried where courts are usually held, and according to all the forms of equity which are usually observed. ¶ I have done no wrong. I have not injured their persons, property, character, or religion. This was a bold appeal, which his consciousness of innocence and the whole course of proceedings enabled him to make without the possibility of their gainsaying it. ¶ As thou very well knowest. Festus knew, probably, that Paul had been tried by Felix, and that nothing was proved against him. He had now seen the spirit of the Jews, and the cause why they arraigned him. He had given Paul a trial, and had called on the Jews to adduce their "able" men to accuse him, and after all nothing had been proved against him. Festus knew, therefore, that he was innocent. This abundantly appears also from his own confession, ver. 18, 19. As he knew this, and as Festus was proposing to depart from the regular course of justice for the sake of popularity, it was proper for Paul to use the strong language of rebuke, and to claim what he knew Festus did not dare to deny him, the protection of the Roman laws. Conscious innocence may be bold; and Christians have a right to insist on impartial justice and the protection of the laws. Alas! how many magistrates there have been like Festus, who, when Christians have been arraigned before them, have been fully satisfied of their innocence, but who, for the sake of popularity, have departed from all the rules of law and all the claims of justice.

11. For if I be an offender. If I have injured the Jews so as to deserve death. If it can be proved that I have done of death, I refuse not to die; but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. ¶ I appeal unto Cæsar.

injury to anyone. ¶ I refuse not to die. I have no wish to escape justice. I do not wish to evade the laws, or to take advantage of any circumstances to screen me from just punishment. Paul's whole course showed that this was the noble spirit which actuated him. No true Christian wishes to escape from the laws. He will honour them, and not seek to evade them. But, like other men, he has rights; and he may and should insist that justice should be done. ¶ No man may deliver me unto them. No man shall be allowed to do it. This bold and confident declaration Paul could make, because he knew what the law required, and he knew that Festus would not dare to deliver him up contrary to the law. Boldness is not incompatible with Christianity; and innocence, when its rights are invaded, is always bold. Jesus firmly asserted his rights when on trial (Jn. xviii. 23), and no man is under obligation to submit to be trampled on by an unjust tribunal in violation of the laws. ¶ I appeal unto Cæsar. I appeal to the Roman emperor, and carry my cause directly before him. By the Valerian, Porcian, and Sempronian laws, it had been enacted that if any magistrate should be about to beat, or to put to death any Roman citizen, the accused could appeal to the Roman people, and this appeal carried the cause to Rome. The law was so far changed under the emperors that the cause should be carried before the emperor instead of the people. Every citizen had the right of this appeal; and when it was made, the accused was sent to Rome for trial. Thus Pliny (Ep. 10, 97) says that those Christians who were accused, and who, being Roman citizens, appealed to Cæsar, he sent to Rome to be tried. The reason why Paul made this appeal was that he saw that justice would not be done him by the Roman governor. He had been tried by Felix, and justice had been denied him, and he was detained a prisoner in violation of law, to gratify the Jews; he had now been tried by Festus, and saw that he was pursuing the same course; and he resolved,

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

therefore, to assert his rights, and remove the cause far from Jerusalem, and from the prejudiced men in that city, at once to Rome. It was in this mysterious way that Paul's long-cherished desire to see the Roman church, and to preach the gospel there, was to be gratified. Comp. Notes on Ro. i. 9-11. For this he had prayed long (Ro. i. 10; xv. 23, 24), and now at length this purpose was to be fulfilled. God answers prayer, but it is often in a way which we little anticipate. He so orders the train of events; he so places us amidst a pressure of circumstances, that the desire is granted in a way which we could never have anticipated, but which shows in the best manner that he is a hearer of prayer.

12. When he had conferred with the council. With his associate judges, or with those who were his counsellors in the administration of justice. They were made up of the chief persons, probably military as well as civil, who were about him, and who were his assistants in the administration of the affairs of the province. ¶ Unto Cæsar shalt thou go. He was willing in this way to rid himself of the trial, and of the vexation attending it. He did not dare to deliver him to the Jews in violation of the Roman laws, and he was not willing to do justice to Paul, and thus make himself unpopular with the Jews. He was, therefore, probably rejoiced at the opportunity of thus freeing himself from all the trouble in the case in a manner against which none could object.

13. After certain days, king Agrippa. This Agrippa was the son of Herod Agrippa (Ac. xii. 1), and great-grandson of Herod the Great. His mother's name was Cypros (Josephus, Jewish Wars, b. ii. ch. xi. § 6). When his father died he was at Rome with the Emperor Claudius. Josephus says that the emperor was inclined to bestow upon him all his father's dominions, but was dissuaded by his ministers. The reason of this was, that it was thought imprudent to bestow so large a kingdom on so young a man, and one so inexperienced. Accordingly, Claudius sent Cuspius Fadus to be procurator of Judea Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cesarea to salute Festus.

14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix;

15 About whom, <sup>a</sup>when I was and of the entire kingdom (Josephus, Antiq., b. xix. ch. ix. § 2). When Herod, the brother of his father, Agrippa the Great, died in the eighth year of the reign of Claudius, his kingdom—the kingdom of Chalcis—was bestowed by Claudius on Agrippa (Josephus, Antiq., b. xx. ch. v. § 2). Afterward he bestowed on him the tetrarchy of Philip and Batanea, and added to it Trachonitis with Abila (Antiq., b. xx. ch. vii. § 1). After the death of Claudius, Nero, his successor, added to his dominions Julias in Perea and a part of Galilee. Agrippa had been brought up at Rome, and was strongly attached to the Romans. When the troubles commenced in Judea which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem, he did all that he could to preserve peace and order, but in vain. He afterward joined his troops with those of the Romans, and assisted them at the destruction of Jerusalem. After the captivity of that city he went to Rome with his sister Bernice, where he ended his days. He died at the age of seventy years, about A.D. 90. His manner of living with his sister gave occasion to reports respecting him very little to his advantage. ¶ And Bernice. She was sister of Agrippa. She had been married to Herod, king of Chalcis, her own uncle by her father's side. After his death she proposed to Polemon, king of Pontus and part of Cilicia, that if he would become circumcised she would marry him. He complied, but she did not continue long with him. After she left him she returned to her brother Agrippa, with whom she lived in a manner such as to excite scandal. Josephus directly charges her with incest with her brother Agrippa (Antiq., b. xx. ch. vii. § 3). ¶ To salute Festus. To show him respect as the governor of Judea.

14. Festus declared Paul's cause. He did this, probably, because Agrippa, being a Jew, would be supposed to be interested in the case. It was natural at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

16 To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have that this trial should be a topic of conversation, and perhaps Festus might be disposed to ask what was proper to be done in such cases. ¶ Left in bonds. Greek, “a prisoner”—diōusos. He was left in custody, probably in the keeping of a soldier, ch. xxiv. 23, 27.

15. About whom, &c. See ver. 1-5. ¶ To have judgment against him. To have him condemned.

16. It is not the manner, &c. He here states the reasons which he gave the Jews for not delivering Paul into their hands. In ver. 4, 5, we have an account of the fact that he would not accede to the requests of the Jews; and he here states that the reason of his refusal was that it was contrary to the Roman law. Appian, in his Roman History, says, “It is not their custom to condemn men before they are heard.” Philo (De Præst. Rom.) says the same thing. In Tacitus (Annæles, ii.) it is said, “A defendant is not to be prohibited from adducing all things by which his innocence may be established.” It was for this that the equity of the Roman jurisprudence was celebrated throughout the world. We may remark that it is a subject of sincere gratitude to the God of our nation that this privilege is enjoyed in the highest perfection in this land. It is a right which every man has: to be heard; to know the charges against him; to be confronted with the witnesses; to make his defence; and to be tried by the laws, and not by the passions and caprices of men. In this respect our jurisprudence surpasses all that Rome ever enjoyed, and is not inferior to that of the most favoured nation of the earth. ¶ To deliver. To give him up as a favour (χαρισμα) to popular clamour and caprice. Yet our Saviour, in violation of the Roman laws, was thus given up by Pilate, Mat. xxvii. 18-25. ¶ Have the accusers face to face. That he may know who they are and hear their accusations. Nothing contributes licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.

17 Therefore, "when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth;

18 Against whom, when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed;

19 But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

20 And because <sup>2</sup>I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

more to justice than this. Tyrants suffer men to be accused without knowing who the accusers are, and without an opportunity of meeting the charges. It is one great principle of modern jurisprudence that the accused may know the accusers, and be permitted to confront the witnesses, and to adduce all the testimony possible in his own defence. ¶ And have licence. Greek, "place of apology"—may have the liberty of defending himself.

17. Therefore when they were come hither, &c. See ver. 6.

18. None accusation, &c. No charge as I expected of a breach of the peace; of a violation of the Roman law; of atrocious crime. It was natural that Festus should suppose that they would accuse Paul of some such offence. He had been arraigned before Felix; had been two years in custody; and the Jews were exceedingly violent against him. All this, Festus would presume, must have arisen from some flagrant and open violation of the laws.

19. But had certain questions. Certain inquiries, or litigated and disputed subjects; certain points of dispute in which they differed—ζητήσατο τίνα. ¶ Of their own superstition—διτιθεματικας. This word properly denotes the worship or fear of demons; but it was applied by the Greeks and Romans to the worship of their gods. It is the same word which is used in Ac. xvii. 22, where it is used in a good sense. See Notes on that place. There are two reasons for thinking that Festus used the word here in a good sense, and not in the sense in which we use the word superstition. (1) It was the word by which the worship of the Greeks and Romans, and, therefore, of Festus himself, was denoted, and he would naturally use it in a similar sense in applying it to the Jews. He would describe their worship in such language as he was accustomed to use when speaking of religion. (2) He knew that Agrippa was a Jew. Festus would not probably speak of the religion of his royal guest as superstition, but would speak of it with respect. He meant, therefore, to say simply that they had certain inquiries about their own religion, but accused him of no crime against the Roman laws. ¶ And of one Jesus, which was dead. Greek, "of one dead Jesus." It is evident that Festus had no belief that Jesus had been raised up, and in this he would expect that Agrippa would concur with him. Paul had admitted that Jesus had been put to death, but he maintained that he had been raised from the dead. As Festus did not believe this, he spoke of it with the utmost contempt. "They had a dispute about one dead Jesus, whom Paul affirmed to be alive." In this manner a Roman magistrate could speak of this glorious truth of the Christian religion, and this shows the spirit with which the great mass of philosophers and statesmen regarded its doctrines.

20. And because I doubted of such manner of questions. See the margin. Because I hesitated about the right way of disposing of them; because I was ignorant of their nature and bearing, I proposed to go to Jerusalem, that the matter might be there more fully investigated. It is obvious, that if Paul was not found guilty of any violation of the laws, he should have been at once discharged. Some interpreters understand this as affirming that he was not satisfied about the question of Paul's innocence, or certain whether he ought to be set at liberty or not.

of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

22 Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To-morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment <sup>a</sup>Paul was brought forth.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom 'all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here,' crying that he ought not to live any longer.

25 But when I found that 'he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that "he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.'

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

21. But when he had appealed. Ver. 11. ¶ To be reserved. To be kept; not to be tried at Jerusalem, but to be sent to Rome for trial. ¶ Unto the hearing. Margin, "the judgment." That Augustus might hear and decide the cause.

¶ Of Augustus. The reigning emperor at this time was Nero. The name Augustus (Αὐγούστος) properly denotes that which is venerable, or worthy of honour and reverence. It was first applied to Cæsar Octavianus, who was the Roman emperor in the time when our Saviour was born, and who is usually called Augustus Cæsar. But the title continued to be used of his successors in office, as denoting the veneration or reverence which was due to the rank of emperor.

22. Then Agrippa said, &c. Agrippa doubtless had heard much of the fame of Jesus, and of the new sect of Christians, and probably he was induced by mere curiosity to hear what Paul could say in explanation and defence of Christianity. This wish of Agrippa gave occasion to the noblest defence which was ever made before any tribunal, and to as splendid eloquence as can be found in any language. See ch. xxvi.

23. With great pomp. Greek, "with much phantasy" (φαντασίᾳ); with much show, parade, and splendour. It was an occasion on which he could exhibit much of the splendour of royalty, and he chose to do it. ¶ Into the place of hearing. The court-room, or the place where the judges heard and tried causes. ¶ With the chief captains. Greek, the chiliarchs; the commanders of a thousand men. It means here that the military officers were assembled. ¶ The principal men of the city. The civil officers, or the men of reputation and influence.

24. Have dealt with me. Have appeared before me, desiring me to try him. They have urged me to condemn him. ¶ Crying out, &c. Comp. ch. xxii. 22. They had sought that he should be put to death.

26. Of whom. Respecting his character, opinions, and manner of life; and respecting the charges against him. ¶ No certain thing. Nothing definite and well established. They had not accused Paul of any crime against the Roman laws; and Festus professes himself too ignorant of the customs of the Jews to inform the emperor distinctly of the nature of the charges and the subject of trial. ¶ Unto my lord. To the emperor—to Cæsar. This name Lord the Emperors Augustus and Tiberius had rejected, and would not suffer it to be applied to them. Suetonius (Life of Augustus, v. 53) says "the appellation of Lord he always abhorred as abominable and execrable." See also Suetonius' Life of Tiberius, v. 27.

The emperors that succeeded them, however, admitted the title, and suffered themselves to be called by this name. Nothing would be more satisfactory to Nero, the reigning emperor, than this title. ¶ I might have somewhat to write. As Agrippa was a Jew, and was acquainted with the customs and doctrine of the Jews, Festus supposed that, after hearing Paul, he would be able to inform him of the exact nature of these charges, so that he could present the case intelligibly to the emperor.

27. For it seemeth to me unreasonable. Festus felt that he was placed in an embarrassing situation. He was about to send a prisoner to Rome who had been tried by himself, and who had appealed from his jurisdiction, and yet he was ignorant of the charges against him, and of the nature of his offences, if any had been committed. When prisoners were thus sent to Rome to be tried before the emperor, it would be proper that the charges should be all specified, and the evidence stated by which they were supported. Yet Festus could do neither, and it is not wonderful that he felt himself perplexed and embarrassed, and that he was glad to avail himself of the desire which Agrippa had expressed to hear Paul, that he might be able to specify the charges against him. ¶ Withal. Also; at the same time. ¶ To signify. To specify, or make them know. In concluding this chapter, we may observe:

(1) That in the case of Agrippa, we have an instance of the reasons which induce many men to hear the gospel. He had no belief in it; he had no concern for its truth or its promises; but he was led by curiosity to desire to hear a minister of the gospel of Christ. Curiosity thus draws multitudes to the sanctuary. In many instances they remain unaffected and unconcerned. They listen, and are unmoved, and die in their sins. In other instances, like Agrippa, they are almost persuaded to be Christians, ch. xxvi. 28. But, like him, they resist the appeals, and die uninterested in the plan of salvation. In some instances they are converted, and their curiosity, like that of Zaccheus, is made the means of their embracing the Saviour, Lu. xix. 1-9. Whatever may be the motive which induces men to desire to hear, it is the duty of the ministry cheerfully and thankfully, like Paul, to state the truth, and to defend the Christian religion.

CHAPTER XXVI.
THEN Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched

(2) In Festus we have a specimen of the manner in which the great, and the rich, and the proud usually regard Christianity. They esteem it to be a subject in which they have no interest—a question about "one dead Jesus," whom Christians affirm to be alive. Whether he be alive or not; whether Christianity be true or false, they suppose is a question which does not pertain to them. Strange that it did not occur to Festus that, if he was alive, his religion was true; and that it was possible that it might be from God. And strange that the men of this world regard the Christian religion as a subject in which they have no personal interest, but as one concerning which Christians only should inquire, and in which they alone should feel any concern.

(3) In Paul we have the example of a man unlike both Festus and Agrippa. He felt a deep interest in the subject—a subject which pertained as much to them as to him. He was willing not only to look at it, but to stake his life, his reputation, his all, on its truth. He was willing to defend it everywhere, and before any class of men. At the same time that he urged his rights as a Roman citizen, yet it was mainly that he might preach the gospel. At the same time that he was anxious to secure justice to himself, yet his chief anxiety was to declare the truth of God. Before any tribunal; before any class of men; in the presence of princes, nobles, and kings, of Romans and of Jews, he was ready to pour forth irresistible eloquence and argument in defence of the truth. Who would not rather be Paul than either Festus or Agrippa? Who would not rather be a prisoner like him, than invested with authority like Festus, or clothed in splendour like Agrippa? And who would not rather be a believer of the gospel like Paul, than, like them, to be cold contemners or neglecters of the God that made them, and of the Saviour that died and rose again?

CHAPTER XXVI.

1. Then Paul stretched forth the hand. See Notes on ch. xxi. 40. This was the usual posture of orators or public speakers. The ancient statues are com-

2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:

monly made in this way, with the right hand extended. The dress of the ancients favoured this. The long and loose robe, or outer garment, was fastened usually with a hook or clasp on the right shoulder, and thus left the arm at full liberty. ¶ And answered for himself. It cannot be supposed that Paul expected that his defence would be attended with a release from confinement, for he had himself appealed to the Roman emperor, ch. xxv. 11. His design in speaking before Agrippa was, doubtless, (1) To vindicate his character, and obtain Agrippa's attestation to his innocence, that thus he might allay the anger of the Jews; (2) To obtain a correct representation of the case to the emperor, as Festus had desired this in order that Agrippa might enable him to make a fair statement of the case (ch. xxv. 26, 27); and, (3) To defend his own conversion, and the truth of Christianity, and to preach the gospel in the hearing of Agrippa and his attendants, with a hope that their minds might be impressed by the truth, and that they might be converted to God.

2. I think myself happy. I esteem it a favour and a privilege to be permitted to make my defence before one acquainted with Jewish customs and opinions. His defence, on former occasions, had been before Roman magistrates, who had little acquaintance with the opinions and customs of the Jews; who were not disposed to listen to the discussion of the points of difference between him and them, and who looked upon all their controversies with contempt. See ch. xxiv. xxv. They were, therefore, little qualified to decide a question which was closely connected with the Jewish customs and doctrines; and Paul now rejoiced to know that he was before one who, from his acquaintance with the Jewish customs and belief, would be able to appreciate his arguments. Paul was not now on his trial, but he was to defend himself, or state his cause, so that Agrippa might be able to aid Festus in transmitting a true account of the case to the Roman emperor. It was his interest and duty, therefore, to defend himself as well as possible, and to put him in possession of all the facts in the case. His defence is, consequently, made up chiefly of a most eloquent statement of the facts just as they had occurred. ¶ I shall answer. I shall be permitted to make a statement, or to defend myself. ¶ Touching, &c. Respecting. ¶ Whereof I am accused of the Jews. By the Jews. The matters of the accusation were his being a mover of sedition, a ringleader of the Christians, and a profaner of the temple, ch. xxiv. 5, 6.

3. To be expert. To be skilled or well acquainted. ¶ In all customs. Rites, institutions, laws, &c. Everything pertaining to the Mosaic ritual, &c. ¶ And questions. Subjects of debate, and of various opinions. The inquiries which had existed between the Pharisees, Sadducees, scribes, &c. Paul could say this of Agrippa without falsehood or flattery. Agrippa was a Jew; he had passed much of his time in the kingdom over which he presided; and though he had spent the early part of his life chiefly at Rome, yet it was natural that he should make himself acquainted with the religion of his fathers. Paul did not know how to flatter men, but he was not unwilling to state the truth, and to command men as far as truth would permit. ¶ Wherefore. On this account; because you are acquainted with those customs. The Romans, who regarded those customs as superstitious, and those questions as matters to be treated with contempt, could not listen to their discussion with patience. Agrippa, who knew their real importance, would be disposed to lend to all inquiries respecting them a patient attention.

¶ Which was at the first. Which was from the beginning; the early part of which; the time when the opinions and habits are formed. ¶ Know all the Jews. It is not at all improbable that Paul was distinguished in the school of Gamaliel for zeal in the Jewish religion. The fact that he was early intrusted with a commission against the Christians (ch. ix.) shows that he was known. Comp. Phi. iii. 4-6. He might appeal to them, therefore, in regard to the early part of his life, and, doubtless, to the very men who had been his violent accusers.

5. Which knew me. Who were well acquainted with me. ¶ From the beginning—επωδι. Formerly; or from the very commencement of my career. Who were perfectly apprised of my whole course. ¶ If they would testify. If they would bear witness to what they know. ¶ That after the most straitest. The most rigid; the most strict, not only in regard to the written law of God, but to the traditions of the elders. Paul himself elsewhere testifies (Phi. iii. 4-6) that he had enjoyed all the advantages of birth and training in the Jewish religion, and that he had early distinguished himself by his observance of its rites and customs. ¶ Sect. Division or party. ¶ I lived a Pharisee. I lived in accordance with the rules and doctrines of the Pharisees. See Notes on Mat. iii. 7. The reasons why Paul here refers to his early life are, (1) As he had lived during the early period of his life without crime; as his principles had been settled by the instruction of the most able of their teachers, it was to be presumed that his subsequent life had been of a similar character. (2) As he, at that period of his life, evinced the utmost zeal for the laws and customs of his country, it was to be presumed that he would not be found opposing or reviling them at any subsequent period. From the strictness and conscientiousness of his past life, he supposed that Agrippa might argue favourably respecting his subsequent conduct. A virtuous and religious course in early life is usually a sure pledge of virtue and integrity in subsequent years.

6. And now I stand. I stand before the tribunal. I am arraigned. ¶ And am judged. Am tried with reference to being judged. I am undergoing a trial on the point in which all my nation are agreed. ¶ For the hope. On account of the hope; or because, in common with my countrymen, I had entertained this hope, and now believe in its fulfilment. ¶ Of the promise, &c. See the references in the margin. It is not quite certain whether Paul refers here to the promise of the Messiah or to the hope of the resurrection of the dead. When he stood before the Jewish Sanhedrim (ch. xxiii. 6), he said that he was called in question on account of holding the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. But it may be observed that in his view the two things were closely united. He hoped that the Messiah would come, and he hoped therefore for the resurrection of the dead. He believed that he had come, and had risen, and therefore he believed that the dead would rise. He argued the one from the other. And as he believed that Jesus was the Messiah, and that he had risen from the dead, and that he had thus furnished a demonstration that the dead would rise, it was evident that the subject of controversy between him and the Jews involved everything that was vital to their opinions and their hopes. See ver. 8. ¶ Made of God. Made by God. See the marginal references. The promises had been made to the fathers of a Messiah to come, and that embraced the promise of a future state, or of the resurrection of the dead. It will help us to understand the stress which Paul and the other apostles laid on the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead to remember that it involved the whole doctrine of the separate existence of the soul and of a future state. The Sadducees denied all this; and when the Pharisees, tribes, <sup>s</sup>instantly serving God<sup>1</sup> day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

the Saviour, and the apostles opposed them, they did it by showing that there would be a future state of rewards and punishments. See the argument of the Saviour with the Sadducees explained in the Notes on Mat. xxii. 23-32. ¶ Unto our fathers. Our ancestors, the patriarchs, &c.

7. Unto which promise. To the fulfilment of which promise they hope to come; that is, they hope and believe that the promise will be fulfilled, and that they will partake of its benefits. ¶ Our twelve tribes. This was the name by which the Jews were designated. The ancient Jewish nation had hoped to come to that promise; it had been the hope and expectation of the nation. Long before the coming of the Messiah, ten of the twelve tribes had been carried captive to Assyria, and had not returned, leaving but the two tribes of Benjamin and Judah. But the name, "the twelve tribes," as used to designate the Jewish people, would be still retained. Comp. Ja. i. 1. Paul here says that the hope referred to had been that of the Jewish nation. Except the comparatively small portion of the nation, the Sadducees, the great mass of the nation had held to the doctrine of a future state. This Agrippa would well know. ¶ Instantly. Constantly; with intensity (iv. ιατρική); with zeal. This was true, for, amidst all the sins of the nation, they observed with punctuality and zeal the outward forms of the worship of God. ¶ Serving God. In the ordinances and observances of the temple. As a nation they did not serve him in their hearts, but they kept up the outward forms of religious worship. ¶ Day and night. With unwearyed zeal; with constancy and ardour, Lu. ii. 37. The ordinary Jewish services and sacrifices were in the morning and evening, and might be said to be performed day and night. Some of their services, as the Paschal supper, were prolonged usually till late at night. The main idea is, that they kept up the worship of God with constant and untiring zeal and devotion. ¶ For which hope's sake. On account of my cherishing this hope in common with the great mass of my countrymen.

8 Why<sup>h</sup> should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?

h 1 Co.15.12,20. i 1 Ti.1.13.

See ch. xxiii. 6. If Paul could convince Agrippa that the main point of his offence was that which had been the common belief of his countrymen, it would show to his satisfaction that he was innocent. And on this ground he put his defence—that he held only that which the mass of the nation had believed, and that he maintained this in the only consistent and defensible manner—that God had, in fact, raised up the Messiah, and had thus given assurance that the dead would rise.

8. Why should it be thought, &c. The force of this question will be better seen by an exclamation point after why (ri). "What! is it to be thought a thing incredible?" &c. It intimates surprise that it should be thought incredible, or implies that no reason could be given why such a doctrine should be unworthy of belief. ¶ A thing incredible. A doctrine which cannot be credited or believed. Why should it be regarded as absurd? ¶ With you. This is in the plural number, and it is evident that Paul here addressed, not Agrippa alone, but those who sat with him. There is no evidence that Agrippa doubted that the dead could be raised, but Festus, and those who were with him, probably did, and Paul, in the ardour of his speech, turned and addressed the entire assembly. It is very evident that we have only an outline of this argument, and there is every reason to suppose that Paul would dwell on each part of the subject at greater length than is here recorded. ¶ That God should raise the dead. Why should it be regarded as absurd that God—who has all power, who is the creator of all, who is the author of the human frame—should again restore man to life and continue his future existence? The resurrection is no more incredible than the original creation of the body, and it is attended with no greater difficulties. And as the perfections of God will be illustrated by his raising up the dead; as the future state is necessary to the purposes of justice in vindicating the just and punishing the unjust, and as God is a righteous moral governor, it should not be regarded as an absurdity that he will raise up those who have died, and bring them to judgment.

9. I verily thought. I indeed (μίν) supposed. Paul here commences the account of his conversion, and states the evidence on which he judged that he was called of God to do what he had done. He begins by saying that it was not because he was originally disposed to be a Christian, but that he was violently and conscientiously opposed to Jesus of Nazareth, and had been converted when in the full career of opposition to him and his cause. ¶ With myself. I thought to myself; or, I myself thought. He had before stated the hopes and expectations of his countrymen, ver. 6-8. He now speaks of his own views and purposes. "For myself, I thought," &c. ¶ That I ought to do. That I was bound, or that it was a duty incumbent on me — διῦ. "I thought that I owed it to my country, to my religion, and to my God, to oppose in every manner the claims of Jesus of Nazareth to be the Messiah." We here see that Paul was conscientious, and that a man may be conscientious even when engaged in enormous wickedness. It is no evidence that one is right because he is conscientious. No small part of the crimes against human laws, and almost all the cruel persecutions against Christians, have been carried on under the plea of conscience. Paul here refers to his conscientiousness in persecution to show that it was no slight matter which could have changed his course. As he was governed in persecution by conscience, it could have been only by a force of demonstration, and by the urgency of conscience equally clear and strong, that he could ever have been induced to abandon this course and to become a friend of that Saviour whom he had thus persecuted. ¶ Many things. As much as possible. He was not satisfied with a few things—a few words, or purposes, or arguments; but he felt bound to do as much as possible to put down the new religion. ¶ Contrary to the name, &c. In opposition to Jesus himself, or to his claims to be the Messiah. The name is often used to denote the person himself, ch. iii. 6.

10. Which thing I did, &c. Ch. viii. 3. ¶ And many of the saints, &c. Many Christians, ch. viii. 3. ¶ And when they were put to death. In the history of those transactions, there is no account of any Christian being put to death except Stephen, Ac. vii. But there is no improbability in supposing that the same thing which had happened to Stephen had occurred in other cases. Stephen was the first martyr, and as he was a prominent man his case is particularly recorded. ¶ I gave my voice. Paul was not a member of the Sanhedrim, and this does not mean that he voted, but simply that he joined in the persecution; he approved it; he assented to the putting of the saints to death. Comp. ch. xxii. 20. The Syriac renders it, "I joined with those who condemned them." It is evident, also, that Paul instigated them in this persecution, and urged them on to deeds of blood and cruelty.

11. And I punished them oft, &c. See ch. xxii. 19. ¶ And compelled them to blaspheme. To blaspheme the name of Jesus by denying that he was the Messiah, and by admitting that he was an impostor. This was the object which they had in view in the persecution. It was not to make them blaspheme or reproach God, but to deny that Jesus was the Messiah, and to reproach him as a deceiver and an impostor. It is not necessarily implied in the expression, "and compelled them to blaspheme," that he succeeded in doing it, but that he endeavoured to make them apostatize from the Christian religion and deny the Lord Jesus. It is certainly not impossible that a few might thus have been induced by the authority of the Sanhedrim and by the threats of Paul to do it, but it is certain that the great mass of Christians adhered firmly to their belief that Jesus was the Messiah. ¶ And being exceedingly mad. Nothing could more forcibly express his violence against the Christians. He raged like a madman; he was so ignorant that he laid aside all appearance of reason; with the fury and violence of a maniac, he endeavoured to exterminate them from the earth. None but a madman will persecute men on account of their religious opinions; and all persecutions have been conducted like this, with the violence, the fury, and the ungovernable temper of maniacs. ¶ Unto strange cities. Unto foreign cities; cities out of Judea. The principal instance of this was his going to Damascus; but there is no evidence that he did not intend also to visit other cities out of Judea and bring the Christians there, if he found any, to Jerusalem.

16. But rise, &c. The particulars mentioned in this verse and the two following are not recorded in the account of Paul's conversion in ch. ix.; but it is not improbable that many circumstances may have occurred which are not recorded. Paul dwells on them here at length in order particularly to show his authority for doing what he had done in preaching to the Gentiles. ¶ To make thee a minister. A minister of the gospel; a preacher of the truth. ¶ And a witness. See Notes on ch. xxii. 15. ¶ Which thou hast seen. On the road to Damascus; that is, of the Lord Jesus, and of the fact that he was risen from the dead. ¶ And of those things, &c. Of those further manifestations of my person, purposes, and will, which I will yet make to you. It is evident from this that the Lord Jesus promised to manifest himself to Paul in his ministry, and to make to him still further displays of his will and glory. Comp. ch. xxii. 17, 18. This was done by his rescuing him from destruction and danger; by inspiration; by the growing and expanding view which Paul was permitted to take of the character and perfections of the Lord Jesus. In this we see that it is the duty of ministers to bear witness not only to the truth of religion in general, or of that which they can demonstrate by argument, but more especially of that which they experience in their own hearts, and which they understand by having themselves been the subjects of it. No man is qualified to enter the ministry who has not a personal saving view of the glory and perfections of the Lord Jesus, and who does not go to his work as a witness of those things which he has felt; and no man enters the ministry with these feelings who has not, as Paul had, a promise that he shall see still brighter displays of the perfections of the Saviour, and be permitted to advance in the knowledge of him and of his work. The highest personal consolation in this work is the promise of being admitted to ever-growing and expanding views of the glory of the Lord Jesus, and of experiencing his presence, guidance, and protection.

17. Delivering thee from the people. From the Jewish people. This implied that he would be persecuted by them, and that the Lord Jesus would interpose to rescue him. ¶ And from the Gentiles. This also implied that he would be persecuted and opposed by them—a prospect which was verified by the whole course of his ministry. Yet in all he experienced, according to the promise, the support and the protection of the Lord Jesus. This was expressed in a summary manner in Lu. ix. 16. ¶ Unto whom now I send thee. Ch. xxii. 21. As the opposition of the Jews arose mainly from the fact that he had gone among the Gentiles, it was important to bring this part of his commission into full view before Agrippa, and to show that the same Saviour who had miraculously converted him had commanded him to go and preach to them.

18. To open their eyes. To enlighten or instruct them. Ignorance is represented by the eyes being closed, and the instruction of the gospel by the opening of the eyes. See Ep. i. 18. ¶ And to turn them from darkness to light. From the darkness of heathenism and sin to the light and purity of the gospel. Darkness is an emblem of ignorance and of sin, and the heathen nations are often represented as sitting in darkness. Comp. Notes on Mat. iv. 16; Jn. i. 4, 5. ¶ And from the power of Satan. From the dominion of Satan. Comp. Col. i. 18; 1 Pe. ii. 9. See Notes on Jn. xii. 31; xvi. 11. Satan is thus represented as the prince of this world, the ruler of the darkness of this world, the prince of the power of the air, &c. The heathen world, lying in sin and superstition, is represented as under his control; and this passage teaches, doubtless, that the great mass of the people of this world are the subjects of the kingdom of Satan, and are led captive by him at his will. ¶ Unto God. To the obedience of the one living and true God. ¶ That they may receive forgiveness of sins. Through the merits of that Saviour who died—that thus the partition wall between the Jews and

19. Whereupon. Whence (εἰπεν). Since the proof of his being the Messiah, of his resurrection, and of his calling me to this work, was so clear and plain, I deemed it my duty to engage without delay in the work. ¶ I was not disobedient. I was not incredulous or unbelieving; I yielded myself to the command, and at once obeyed. See Ac. ix. 6; comp. Ga. i. 16. ¶ To the heavenly vision. To the celestial appearance, or to the vision which appeared to me from heaven. I did not doubt that this splendid appearance (ver. 13) was from heaven, and I did not refuse to obey the command of him who thus appeared to me. He knew it was the command of God his Saviour, and he gave evidence of repentance by yielding obedience to it at once.

20. See ch. ix. 20–23. The 20th verse contains a summary of his labours in obedience to the command of the Lord Jesus. His argument is that the Lord Jesus had from heaven commanded him to do this, and that he had done no more than to obey his injunction. The word "then" in this verse is supplied by our translators, and is not necessary to the proper explanation of the passage. It would seem from that word that he had not preached "to the Gentiles" until after he had preached "at Jerusalem and throughout all the coasts of Judea," whereas, in fact, he had, as we have reason to believe (see Notes on ch. ix. 23), before then

"preached" to the Gentiles in Arabia. The statement here, in the original, is a general statement that he had preached at Damascus and at Jerusalem, and in all the coasts of Judea, and also to the Gentiles, but without specifying the exact order in which it was done.

21. Caught me in the temple. Ch. xxi. 30. ¶ And went about, &c. Endeavoured to put me to death.

22. Having therefore obtained help of God. Paul had seen and felt his danger. He had known the determined malice of the Jews, and their efforts to take his life. He had been rescued by Lysias, and had made every effort himself to avoid the danger and to save his life; and at the end of all, he traced his safety entirely to the help of God. It was not by any power of his own that he had been preserved; it was because God had interposed and rescued him. Those who have been delivered from danger, if they have just views, will delight to trace it all to God. They will recognize his hand, and will feel that whatever wisdom they may have had, or whatever may have been the kindness of their friends to them, yet that all this also is to be traced to the superintending providence of God.

¶ Witnessing. Bearing testimony to what he had seen, according to the command of Christ, ver. 16. ¶ To small. To those in humble life; to the poor, the ignorant, and the obscure. Like his Master, he did not despise them, but regarded it as his duty and privilege to preach the gospel to them. ¶ And great. The rich and noble; to kings, princes, and governors. He had thus stood on Mars' Hill at Athens; he had declared the same gospel before Felix, Festus, and now before Agrippa. He offered salvation to all. He passed by none because they were poor; and he was not deterred by the fear of the rich and the great from making known their sins and calling them to repentance. What an admirable illustration of the proper duties of a minister of the gospel! ¶ Saying none other thing, &c. Delivering no new doctrine, but maintaining only that the prophecies had been fulfilled. As he had done this only, there was no reason for the opposition and persecution of the Jews. ¶ Should come. Should come to pass, or should take place. Paul here evidently means to say that the doctrine of the atonement, and of the resurrection of Christ, is taught in the Old Testament.

23. That Christ. That the Messiah expected by the Jews should be a suffering Messiah. ¶ Should suffer. Should lead a painful life, and be put to death. See Notes on ch. xvii. 3; comp. Da. ix. 27; Is. liii. ¶ And that he should be the first, &c. This declaration contains two points. (1) That it was taught in the prophets that the Messiah would rise from the dead. On this, see the proof alleged in ch. ii. 24-32; xiii. 32-37. (2) That he would be the first that should rise. This cannot mean that the Messiah would be the first dead person who should be restored to life, for Elijah had raised the son of the Shunammite, and Jesus himself had raised Lazarus, and the widow's son at Nain. It does not mean that he would be the first in the order of time that should rise, but first in eminence; the most distinguished, the chief, the head of those who should rise from the dead—πρῶτος, ἐγ ἀναστάτων πρῶτος. In accordance with this he is called (Col. i. 18) "the beginning, the first-born from the dead," having among all the dead who should be raised up the pre-eminence of primogeniture, or that which pertained to the first-born. In 1 Co. xv. 20 he is called "the first fruits of them that slept." This declaration is therefore made of him by way of eminence: (1) As being chief, a prince among those raised from the dead; (2) As being raised by his own power (Jn. x. 18); (3) As, by his rising, securing a dominion over death and the grave (1 Co. xv. 25, 26); and, (4) As bringing, by his rising, life and immortality to light. He rose to return to death no more. And he thus secured an ascendancy over death and the grave, and was thus, by way of eminence, first among those raised from the dead. ¶ And should show light unto the people. To the Jews. Would be their instructor and prophet. This Moses had predicted, De. xviii. 15. ¶ And to the Gentiles. This had often been foretold by the prophets, and particularly by Isaiah, Is. ix. 1, 2; comp. Mat. iv. 14-16; Is. xi. 10; xlvi. 1, 6; liv. 3; lx. 3, 5, 11; lxi. 6; lxii. 2; lxvi. 12.

24. Festus said with a loud voice. Amazed at the zeal of Paul. Paul doubtless evinced deep interest in the subject, and great earnestness in the delivery of his defence. ¶ Thou art beside thyself. Thou art deranged; thou art insane. The reasons why Festus thought Paul mad were, probably, (1) His great earnestness and excitement on the subject. (2) His laying such stress on the gospel of the despised Jesus of Nazareth, as if it were a matter of infinite moment. Festus despised it; and he regarded it as proof of derangement that so much importance was attached to it. (3) Festus regarded, probably, the whole story of the vision that Paul said had appeared to him as the effect of an inflamed and excited imagination, and as a proof of delirium. This is not an uncommon charge against those who are Christians, and especially when they evince unusual zeal. Sinners regard them as under the influence of delirium and fanaticism; as terrified by imaginary and superstitious fears; or as misguided by fanatical leaders. Husbands often thus think their wives deranged, and parents their children, and wicked men the ministers of the gospel. The gay think it proof of derangement that others are serious, anxious, and prayerful; the rich, that others are willing to part with their property to do good; the ambitious and worldly, that others are willing to leave their country and home to go among the Gentiles to spend their lives in making known the unsearchable riches of Christ. The really sober and rational part of the world—they who fear God and keep his commandments; they who believe that eternity is before them,

25 But he said, I am not mad,

and who strive to live for it—are thus charged with insanity by those who are really deluded, and who are thus living lives of madness and folly. The tenants of a madhouse often think all others deranged but themselves; but there is no madness so great, no delirium so awful, as to neglect the eternal interest of the soul for the sake of the pleasures and honours which this life can give. ¶ Much learning. It is probable that Festus was acquainted with the fact that Paul was a learned man. Paul had not, while before him, manifested particularly his learning. But Festus, acquainted in some way with the fact that he was well-educated, supposed that his brain had been turned, and that the effect of it was seen by devotion to a fanatical form of religion. The tendency of long-continued and intense application to produce mental derangement is everywhere known. ¶ Doth make thee mad. Impels, drives, or excites thee (μεριζειν) to madness.

25. I am not mad. I am not deranged. There are few more happy turns than that which Paul gives to this accusation of Festus. He might have appealed to the course of his argument; he might have dwelt on the importance of the subject, and continued to reason; but he makes an appeal at once to Agrippa, and brings him in for a witness that he was not deranged. This would be far more likely to make an impression on the mind of Festus than anything that Paul could say in self-defence. The same reply, "I am not mad," can be made by all Christians to the charge of derangement which the world brings against them. They have come, like the prodigal (Lu. xv. 17), to their right mind; and by beginning to act as if there were a God and Saviour, as if they were to die, as if there were a boundless eternity before them, they are conducting according to the dictates of reason. And as Paul appealed to Agrippa, who was not a Christian, for the reasonableness and soberness of his own views and conduct, so may all Christians appeal to sinners themselves as witnesses that they are acting as immortal beings should act. All men know that if there is an eternity, it is most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely; for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden right to prepare for it; if there is a God, it is proper to serve him; if a Saviour died for us, we should love him; if a hell, we should avoid it; if a heaven, we should seek it. And even when they charge us with folly and derangement, we may turn at once upon them, and appeal to their own consciences, and ask them if all our anxieties, and prayers, and efforts, and self-denials are not right? One of the best ways of convicting sinners is to appeal to them just as Paul did to Agrippa. When so appealed to, they will usually acknowledge the force of the appeal, and will admit that the solicitude of Christians for their salvation is according to the dictates of reason. ¶ Most noble Festus. This was the usual title of the Roman governor. Comp. ch. xxiv. 3. ¶ Of truth. In accordance with the predictions of Moses and the prophets, and the facts which have occurred in the death and resurrection of the Messiah. In proof of this he appeals to Agrippa, ver. 26, 27. Truth here stands opposed to delusion, imposture, and fraud. ¶ And soberness. Soberness (σωβείν, wisdom) stands opposed here to madness or derangement, and denotes sanity of mind. The words which I speak are those of a sane man, conscious of what he is saying, and impressed with its truth. They were the words, also, of a man who, under the charge of derangement, evinced the most perfect self-possession and command of his feelings, and who uttered sentiments deep, impressive, and worthy the attention of all mankind.

26. For the king. King Agrippa. ¶ Knoweth. He had been many years in that region, and the fame of Jesus and of Paul's conversion were probably well known to him. ¶ These things. The things pertaining to the early persecutions of Christians; the spread of the gospel; and the remarkable conversion of Paul. Though Agrippa might not have been fully informed respecting these things, yet he had an acquaintance with Moses and the prophets; he knew the Jewish expectation respecting

28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, the Messiah; and he could not be ignorant respecting the remarkable public events in the life of Jesus of Nazareth, and of his having been put to death by order of Pontius Pilate on the cross. ¶ I speak freely. I speak openly—boldly. I use no disguise; and I speak the more confidently before him, because, from his situation, he must be acquainted with the truth of what I say. Truth is always bold and free, and it is an evidence of honesty when a man is willing to declare everything without reserve before those who are qualified to detect him if he is an imposter. Such evidence of truth and honesty was given by Paul. ¶ For I am persuaded. I am convinced; I doubt not that he is well acquainted with these things. ¶ Are hidden from him. That he is unacquainted with them. ¶ For this thing. The thing to which Paul had mainly referred in this defence, his own conversion to the Christian religion. ¶ Was not done in a corner. Did not occur secretly and obscurely, but was public, and was of such a character as to attract attention. The conversion of a leading persecutor, such as Paul had been, and in the manner in which that conversion had taken place, could not but attract attention and remark; and although the Jews would endeavour as much as possible to conceal it, yet Paul might presume that it could not be entirely unknown to Agrippa.

27. King Agrippa. This bold personal address is an instance of Paul's happy manner of appeal. He does it to bring in the testimony of Agrippa to meet the charge of Festus that he was deranged. ¶ Believest thou the prophets? The prophecies respecting the character, the sufferings, and the death of the Messiah. ¶ I know that thou believest. Agrippa was a Jew; and, as such, he of course believed the prophets. Perhaps, too, from what Paul knew of his personal character, he might confidently affirm that he professed to be a believer. Instead, therefore, of waiting for his answer, Paul anticipated it, and said that he knew that Agrippa professed to believe all these prophecies respecting the Messiah. His design is evident. It is, (1) To meet the charge of derangement, and to bring in the testimony of Agrippa, who well understood the subject, to the importance and the truth of what he was saying. (2) To press on the conscience of his royal hearer the evidence of the Christian religion, and to secure, if possible, his conversion. "Since thou believest the prophecies, and since I have shown that they are fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth; that he corresponds in person, character, and work, with the prophets, it follows that his religion is true." Paul lost no opportunity in pressing the truth on every class of men. He had such a conviction of the truth of Christianity that he was deterred by no rank, station, or office; by no fear of the rich, the great, and the learned; but everywhere urged the evidence of that religion as indisputable. In this lay the secret of no small part of his success. A man who really believes the truth will be ready to defend it. A man who truly loves religion will not be ashamed of it anywhere.

28. Then Agrippa said unto Paul. He could not deny that he believed the prophecies in the Old Testament. He could not deny that the argument was a strong one that they had been fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth. He could not deny that the evidence of the miraculous interposition of God in the conversion of Paul was overwhelming; and instead, therefore, of charging him, as Festus had done, with derangement, he candidly and honestly avows the impression which the proof had made on his mind. ¶ Almost. Except a very little—i. ἀλιγ. Thou hast nearly convinced me that Christianity is true, and persuaded me to embrace it. The arguments of Paul had been so rational; the appeal which he had made to his belief of the prophets had been so irresistible, that he had been nearly convinced of the truth of Christianity. We are to remember, (1) That Agrippa was a Jew, and that he would look on this whole subject in a different manner from the Roman Festus. (2) That he does not appear to have partaken of the violent

29 And Paul said, 'I would to God that not only thou, but also

passions and prejudices of the Jews who had accused Paul. (3) His character, as given by Josephus, is that of a mild, candid, and ingenuous man. He had no particular hostility to Christians; he knew that they were not justly charged with sedition and crime; and he saw the conclusion to which a belief of the prophets inevitably tended. Yet, as in thousands of other cases, he was not quite persuaded to be a Christian. What was included in the "almost;" what prevented his being quite persuaded, we know not. It may have been that the evidence was not so clear to his mind as he would profess to desire; or that he was not willing to give up his sins; or that he was too proud to rank himself with the followers of Jesus of Nazareth; or that, like Felix, he was willing to defer it to a more convenient season. There is every reason to believe that he was never quite persuaded to embrace the Lord Jesus, and that he was never nearer the kingdom of heaven than at this moment. It was the crisis, the turning-point in Agrippa's life, and in his eternal destiny; and, like thousands of others, he neglected or refused to allow the full conviction of the truth on his mind, and died in his sins.

¶ Thou persuadest me. Thou dost convince me of the truth of the Christian religion, and persuadest me to embrace it. ¶ To be a Christian. On the name Christian, see Notes on ch. xi. 26. On this deeply interesting case we may observe, (1) That there are many in the same situation as Agrippa—many who are almost, but not altogether, persuaded to be Christians. They are found among (a) Those who have been religiously educated; (b) Those who are convinced by argument of the truth of Christianity; (c) Those whose consciences are awakened, and who feel their guilt, and the necessity of some better portion than this world can furnish. (2) Such persons are deterred from being altogether Christians by the following, among other causes: (a) By the love of sin—the love of sin in general, or some particular sin which they are not willing to abandon; (b) By the fear of shame, persecution, or contempt, if they become Christians; (c) By the temptations of the world—its cares, vanities, and all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.

30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, allurements—which are often presented most strongly in just this state of mind; (d) By the love of office, the pride of rank and power, as in the case of Agrippa; (e) By a disposition, like Felix, to delay to a more favourable time the work of religion, until life has wasted away, and death approaches, and it is too late, and the unhappy man dies ALMOST a Christian. (3) This state of mind is one of peculiar interest and peculiar danger. It is not one of safety, and it is not one that implies any certainty that the “almost Christian” will ever be saved. There is no reason to believe that Agrippa ever became fully persuaded to become a Christian. To be almost persuaded to do a thing which we ought to do, and yet not to do it, is the very position of guilt and danger. And it is no wonder that many are brought to this point—the turning-point, the crisis of life—and then lose their anxiety, and die in their sins. May the God of grace keep us from resting in being almost persuaded to be Christians! May every one who shall read this account of Agrippa be admonished by his convictions, and be alarmed by the fact that he then paused, and that his convictions there ended! And may every one resolve by the help of God to forsake every thing that prevents his becoming an entire believer, and without delay embrace the Son of God as his Saviour!

29. I would to God. I pray to God; I earnestly desire it of God. This shows, (1) Paul’s intense desire that Agrippa, and all who heard him, might be saved. (2) His steady and constant belief that none but God could incline men to become altogether Christians. Paul knew well that there was nothing that would overcome the reluctance of the human heart to be an entire Christian but the grace and mercy of God. He had addressed to his hearers the convincing arguments of religion, and he now breathed forth his earnest prayer to God that those arguments might be effectual. So prays every faithful minister of the cross. ¶ All that hear me. Festus, and the military and civil officers who had been assembled to hear-

31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth

his defence, ch. xxv. 23. ¶ Were both almost, and altogether, &c. Paul had no higher wish for them than that they might have the faith and consolations which he himself enjoyed. He had so firm a conviction of the truth of Christianity, and had experienced so much of its supports amidst his persecutions and trials, that his highest desire for them was that they might experience the same inexpressibly pure and holy consolations. He well knew that there was neither happiness nor safety in being almost a Christian; and he desired, therefore, that they would give themselves, as he had done, entirely and altogether to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. ¶ Except these bonds. These chains. This is an exceedingly happy and touching appeal. Probably Paul, when he said this, lifted up his arm with the chain attached to it. His wish was that in all respects they might partake of the effects of the gospel, except those chains. Those he did not wish them to bear. The persecutions, the unjust trials, and the imprisonments which he had been called to suffer in the cause, he did not desire them to endure. True Christians wish others to partake of the full blessings of religion. The trials which they themselves experienced from without in unjust persecutions, ridicule, and slander, they do not wish them to endure. The trials which they themselves experience from an evil heart, from corrupt passions, and from temptations, they do not wish others to experience. But even with these, religion confers infinitely more pure joy than the world can give; and even though others should be called to experience severe trials for their religion, still Christians wish that all should partake of the pure consolations which Christianity alone can furnish in this world and the world to come. Comp. Mar. x. 30.

31. This man doeth nothing worthy of death. This was the conclusion to which they had come after hearing all that the Jews had to allege against him. It was the result of the whole investigation; and we have, therefore, the concurring testimony of Claudius Lysias

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty if he had not appealed unto Cæsar.

CHAPTER XXVII.

AND when it was determined that we should sail into Italy,

(ch. xxiii. 29), of Felix (ch. xxiv.), of Festus (ch. xxv. 26, 27), and of Agrippa, to the innocence of Paul. More honourable and satisfactory testimony of his innocence he could not have desired. It was a full acquittal from all the charges against him; and though he was to be sent to Rome, yet he went there with every favourable prospect of being acquitted there also.

32. Then said Agrippa unto Festus, &c. This is a full declaration of the conviction of Agrippa, before whom the cause had been heard, that Paul was innocent. It is an instance, also, where boldness and fidelity will be attended with happy results. Paul had concealed nothing of the truth. He had made a bold and faithful appeal (ver. 27) to Agrippa himself for the truth of what he was saying. By this appeal Agrippa had not been offended. It had only served to impress him more with the innocence of Paul. It is an instance which shows that religion may be so commended to the conscience and reason of princes, kings, and judges that they will see its truth. It is an instance which shows that the most bold and faithful appeals may be made by the ministers of religion to their hearers for the truth of what they are saying. And it is a full proof that the most faithful appeals, if respectful, may be made without offending men, and with the certainty that they will feel and admit their force. All preachers should be as faithful as Paul; and whatever may be the rank and character of their auditors, they should never doubt that they have truth and God on their side, and that their message, when most bold and faithful, will commend itself to the consciences of mankind.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1. And when it was determined. By Festus (ch. xxv. 12), and when the time was come when it was convenient to

send him. ¶ That we should sail. The use of the term "we" here shows that the author of this book, Luke, was with Paul. He had been his travelling companion, and though he had not been accused, yet it was resolved that he should still accompany him. Whether he went at his own expense, or whether he was sent at the expense of the Roman government, does not appear. There is a difference of reading here in the ancient versions. The Syriac reads it, "And thus Festus determined that he [Paul] should be sent to Cæsar in Italy," &c. The Latin Vulgate and the Arabic also read "he" instead of "we." But the Greek manuscripts are uniform, and the correct reading is doubtless that which is in our version. ¶ Into Italy. The country still bearing the same name, of which Rome was the capital. ¶ And certain other prisoners. Who were probably also sent to Rome for a trial before the emperor. Dr. Lardner has proved that it was common to send prisoners from Judea and other provinces to Rome (Credibility, part i. ch. x. § 10, p. 248, 249). ¶ A centurion. A commander of a hundred men. ¶ Of Augustus' band. For the meaning of the word "band," see Notes on Mat. xvii. 27; Ac. x. 1. It was a division in the Roman army consisting of from four to six hundred men. This was called "Augustus' band" in honour of the Roman emperor Augustus (see Notes on ch. xxv. 21), and was probably distinguished in some way for the care in enlisting or selecting them. The Augustine cohort or band is mentioned by Suetonius in his Life of Nero, 20.

2. A ship of Adramyttium. A maritime town of Mysia, in Asia Minor, opposite to the island of Lesbos. This was a ship which had been built there, or which sailed from that port, but which was then in the port of Cesarea. It is evident, from ver. 6, that this ship was not expected to sail to Italy, but

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

4 And when we had launched from that the centurion expected to find some other vessel into which he could put the prisoners to take them to Rome. ¶ We launched. We loosed from our anchorage, or we set sail. See ch. xiii. 13. ¶ By the coasts of Asia. Of Asia Minor. Probably the owners of the ship designed to make a coasting voyage along the southern part of Asia Minor, and to engage in traffic with the maritime towns and cities. ¶ One Aristarchus, a Macedonian. This man is mentioned as Paul's companion in travel in ch. xix. 29. He afterward attended him to Macedonia, and returned with him to Asia, ch. xx. 4. He now appears to have attended him, not as a prisoner, but as a voluntary companion, choosing to share with him his dangers, and to enjoy the benefit of his society and friendship. He went with him to Rome, and was a fellow-prisoner with him there (Col. iv. 10), and is mentioned (Phile. 24) as Paul's fellow-labourer. It was doubtless a great comfort to Paul to have with him two such valuable friends as Luke and Aristarchus; and it was an instance of great affection for him that they were not ashamed of his bonds, but were willing to share his dangers, and to expose themselves to peril for the sake of accompanying him to Rome.

3. We touched at Sidon. See Notes on Mat. xi. 21. Sidon was about 67 miles north of Cesarea, and the passage could be easily accomplished, under favourable circumstances, in twenty-four hours. It is probable that the vessel, being a "coaster," put in there for purposes of trade. Sidon is the last city on the Phœnician coast in which the presence of the apostle can be traced. ¶ And Julius courteously entreated Paul. Treated him kindly or humanely. ¶ And gave him liberty, &c. The same thing had been done by Felix, ch. xxiv. 23. ¶ Unto his friends. In Sidon. Paul had frequently travelled in that direction in going to and returning from Jerusalem, and it is not improbable, therefore, that he had friends in all the principal cities. ¶ To refresh himself. To enjoy the benefit of thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

their care; to make his present situation and his voyage as comfortable as possible. It is probable that they would furnish him with many supplies which were needful for his long and perilous voyage.

4. We sailed under Cyprus. For an account of Cyprus, see Notes on ch. iv. 36. By sailing "under Cyprus" is meant that they sailed along its coasts; they kept near to it; they thus endeavoured to break off the violent winds. Instead of steering a direct course in the open sea, which would have exposed them to violent opposing winds, they kept near this large island, so that it was between them and the westerly winds. The force of the wind was thus broken, and the voyage was rendered less difficult and dangerous. They went between Cyprus and Asia Minor, leaving Cyprus to the left. A sailor would express the idea by saying that they sailed under the lee of Cyprus. Had it not been for the strong western winds, they would have left it on the right. ¶ The winds were contrary. Were from the west, or south-west, which thus prevented their pursuing a direct course. See the map.

5. The sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia. The sea which lies off the coast from these two regions. For their situation, see the map, and Notes on Ac. vi. 9, and xiii. 13. ¶ We came to Myra, a city of Lycia. Lycia was a province in the south-western part of Asia Minor, having Phrygia and Pisidia on the north, the Mediterranean on the south, Pamphylia on the east, and Caria on the west.

6. A ship of Alexandria. A ship belonging to Alexandria. Alexandria was in Egypt, and was founded by Alexander the Great. It appears from ver. 38 that the ship was laden with wheat. It is well known that great quantities of wheat were imported from Egypt to Rome, and it appears that this was one of the large ships which were employed for that purpose. Why the ship was on the coast of Asia Minor is not known. But it is probable that it had been driven out of its way by adverse winds or tempests.

7. Hud sailed slowly. By reason of the prevalence of the western winds, ver. 4. ¶ Over against Cnidus. This was a city standing on a promontory of the same name in Asia Minor, in the part of the province of Caria called Doris, and a little north-west of the island of Rhodes. ¶ The wind not suffering us. The wind repelling us in that direction; not permitting us to hold on a direct course, we were driven off near to Crete. ¶ We sailed under Crete. See ver. 4. We lay along near to Crete, so as to break the violence of the wind. For the situation of Crete, see Notes on ch. ii. 11. ¶ Over against Salmone. Near to Salmone. This was the name of the promontory which formed the eastern extremity of the island of Crete.

8. And, hardly passing it. Scarcely being able to pass by it without being wrecked. Being almost driven on it. They passed round the east end of the island because they had been unable to sail directly forward between the island and the mainland. ¶ The fair havens. This was on the south-eastern part of the island of Crete. It was probably not so much a harbour as an open roadstead, which afforded good anchorage for a time. It is called by Stephen, the geographer, "the fair shore." It still retains the name which it formerly had. It is called in ancient Dutch and French Sailing Directions "the beautiful bay." ¶ Nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea. There was no town or city at the "Fair Havens," but the city of Lasea seems to have been well known, and it is mentioned here to identify the place.

9. When much time was spent. In sailing along the coast of Asia; in con-spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the <sup>2</sup>fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, "I perceive that this voyage will be with <sup>3</sup>hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

tending with the contrary winds. It is evident that when they started they had hoped to reach Italy before the dangerous time of navigating the Mediterranean should arrive. But they had been detained and embarrassed contrary to their expectation, so that they were now sailing in the most dangerous and tempestuous time of the year. ¶ Because the fast was now already past. By the "fast" here is evidently intended the fast which occurred among the Jews on the great day of atonement. That was on the tenth of the month Tisri, which answers to a part of September and part of October. It was, therefore, the time of the autumnal equinox, and when the navigation of the Mediterranean was esteemed to be particularly dangerous, from the storms which usually occurred about that time. The ancients regarded this as a dangerous time to navigate the Mediterranean. See the proofs in Kui-noel on this place. ¶ Paul admonished them. Paul exhorted, entreated, or persuaded them. He was somewhat accustomed to the navigation of that sea, and endeavoured to persuade them not to risk the danger of sailing at that season of the year.

10. Sirs. Greek, Men. ¶ I perceive. It is not certain that Paul understood this by direct inspiration. He might have perceived it from his own knowledge of the danger of navigation at the autumnal equinox, and from what he saw of the ship as unfitted to a dangerous navigation. But there is nothing that should prevent our believing also that he was guided to this conclusion by the inspiration of the Spirit of God. Comp. ver. 23, 24. ¶ Will be with hurt. With injury or hazard. It is not meant that their lives would be lost, but that they would be jeopardized. ¶ The lading. The freight of the ship. It was laden with wheat, ver. 38. Paul evidently, by this, intended to suggest the propriety of remaining where they were until the time of dangerous navigation was past.

11. The master. The person who is here meant was the helmsman, who occupied in ancient ships a conspicuous place on the stern, and steered the ship, more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is a haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south-west and north-west.

and gave directions to the crew. ¶ The owner of the ship. Probably a different person from "the master." He had the general command of the ship as his own property, but had employed "the master," or the pilot, to direct and manage it. His counsel in regard to the propriety of continuing the voyage would be likely to be followed.

12. The haven. The fair havens, ver. 8. ¶ Was not commodious to winter in. Not safe or convenient to remain there. Probably it furnished rather a safe anchorage ground in time of a storm than a convenient place for a permanent harbour. ¶ The more part. The greater part of the crew. ¶ To Phenice. In the original this is Phenice—Φενική. So it is written by Strabo. The name was probably derived from the palm-trees which were common in Crete. This was a port or harbour on the south side of Crete, and west of the fair havens. It was a more convenient harbour, and was regarded as more safe. It appears, therefore, that the majority of persons on board concurred with Paul in the belief that it was not advisable to attempt the navigation of the sea until the dangers of the winter had passed by. ¶ And lieth toward.

Greek, looking toward; that is, it was open in that direction. ¶ The south-west — κατὰ κίμην. Toward Libya, or Africa. That country was situated south-west of the mouth of the harbour. The entrance of the harbour was in a south-west direction. ¶ And north-west — κατὰ κατέπερν. This word denotes a wind blowing from the north-west. The harbour was doubtless curved. Its entrance was in a south-west direction. It then turned so as to lie in a direction toward the north-west. It was thus rendered perfectly safe from the winds and heavy seas; and in that harbour they might pass the winter in security. The harbour supposed to be referred to is that marked on the map Lutro. Of this harbour Mr. Urquhart, in a letter to James Smith, Esq., whose work on this voyage of Paul has obtained so wide a reputation, says, “Lutro is an admirable harbour. You open it like a box; unexpectedly the rocks stand apart, and the town appears within. . . . We thought we had cut him off, and that we were driving him right upon the rocks. Suddenly he disappeared—and, rounding in after him, like a change of scenery, the little basin, its shipping, and the town presented themselves. . . . Excepting Lutro, all the roadsteads looking to the southward are perfectly exposed to the south or east.”

13. The south wind. The wind before had probably been a head-wind, blowing from the west. When it veered round to the south, and when it blew gently, though not entirely favourable, yet it was so that they supposed they could sail along the coast of Crete. ¶ Had obtained their purpose. The object of their desire; that is, to sail safely along the coast of Crete. ¶ Loosing thence. Setting sail from the fair havens. ¶ Close by Crete. Near the shore. It is evident that they designed, if possible, to make the harbour of Phenice to winter there. They weighed anchor and passed around Cape Matala. The distance to this point is four or five miles; the bearing west by south. With a gentle southerly wind, the vessel would be able to weather the cape, and then the wind was fair to Phoenix or Phenice [Lutro], which was thirty-five miles distant from the cape, and bore from thence about west-north-west.

14. Arose. Beat violently. ¶ Against it. Against the vessel. Greek, seizing her, and whirling her around. ¶ A tempestuous wind. Turbulent — violent — strong. ¶ Called Euroclydon. Interpreters have been much perplexed about the meaning of this word, which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. The most probable supposition is, that it denotes a wind not blowing steadily from any quarter, but a hurricane, or wind veering about to different quarters. Such hurricanes are known to abound in the Mediterranean, and are now called Levanters, deriving their name from blowing chiefly in the Levant, or eastern part of the Mediterranean. The name euroclydon is derived probably from two Greek words, ένεσις, wind, and κλύδων, a wave; so called from its agitating and exciting the waves. It thus answers to the usual effects of a hurricane, or of a wind rapidly changing its points of compass.

15. The ship was caught. By the wind. It came suddenly upon them as a tempest. ¶ Could not bear up, &c. Could not resist its violence, or the helmsman could not direct the ship. It was seized by the wind, and driven with such violence, that it became unmanageable. ¶ We let her drive. We suffered the ship to be borne along by the wind without attempting to control it.

16. And running under. Running near to an island. They ran near to it, where the violence of the wind was probably broken by the island. ¶ Which is called Clauda. This is a small island about twenty miles south-west of Crete. ¶ We had much work. Much difficulty; we hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

would be destroyed, and they therefore made use of such aids as would prevent its loss. ¶ Undergirding the ship. The ancients were accustomed to pass cables or strong ropes around a vessel to keep the planks from springing or starting by the action of the sea. This is now called "frapping" a vessel. The operation of "frapping" a vessel is thus described in Falconer's Marine Dictionary: "To frap a ship is to pass four or five turns of a large cable-laid rope round the hull or frame of a ship to support her in a great storm, or otherwise, when it is apprehended that she is not strong enough to resist the violent efforts of the sea." An instance of this kind is mentioned in Lord Anson's voyage round the world. Speaking of a Spanish man-of-war in a storm, he says, "They were obliged to throw overboard all their upper-deck guns, and take six turns of the cable round the ship to prevent her opening." ¶ Lest they should fall into the quicksands. There were two celebrated syrtes, or quicksands, on the coast of Africa, called the greater and lesser. They were vast beds of sand driven up by the sea, and constantly shifting their position, so that it could not be known certainly where the danger was. As they were constantly changing their position, they could not be accurately laid down in a chart. The sailors were afraid, therefore, that they should be driven on one of those banks of sand, and thus be lost. ¶ Strake sail. Or, rather, lowered or took down the mast, or the yards to which the sails were attached. There has been a great variety of interpretations proposed on this passage. The most probable is that they took down the mast, by cutting or otherwise, as is now done in storms at sea, to save the ship. They were at the mercy of the wind and waves, and their only hope was by taking away their sails. ¶ And so were driven. By the wind and waves. The ship was unmanageable, and they suffered it to be driven before the wind.

18. They lightened the ship. By throwing out a part of the cargo.

19. The tackling of the ship. The anchors, sails, cables, baggage, &c. That is, everything that was not indispensable to its preservation, for it seems still (ver. 29) that they retained some of their anchors on board.

20. Neither sun nor stars, &c. As they could see neither sun nor stars, they could make no observations; and as they had no compass, they would be totally ignorant of their situation, and they gave up all as lost.

21. But after long abstinence. By the violence of the storm, by their long-continued labour, and by their apprehension of danger, they had a long time abstained from food. ¶ And to have gained this harm. To have procured this harm, or have subjected yourselves to it. Had you remained there you would have been safe. It seems to be bad English to speak of gaining a loss, but it is a correct translation of the original (καὶ δοῦλοι), which expresses the idea of acquiring or procuring, whether good or evil. See ver. 9, 10.

22. There shall be no loss. This must have been cheering news to those who had given up all for lost. As Paul had manifested great wisdom in his former advice to them, they might be now more disposed to listen to him. The reason why he believed they would be safe, he immediately states.

to me. ¶ The angel of God. The messages of God were often communicated by angels. See He. i. 14. This does not mean that there was any particular angel, but simply an angel. ¶ Whose I am. Of the God to whom I belong. This is an expression of Paul's entire devotedness to him. ¶ Whom I serve. In the gospel. To whom and to whose cause I am entirely devoted.

24. Fear not, Paul. Do not be alarmed with the danger of the loss of life. ¶ Thou must be brought, &c. And therefore thy life will be spared. ¶ God hath given thee all, &c. That is, they shall all be preserved with thee. None of their lives shall be lost. This does not mean that they would be converted, but that their lives would be preserved. It is implied here that it was for the sake of Paul, or that the leading purpose of the divine interposition in rescuing them from danger was to save his life. The wicked often derive important benefits from being connected with Christians, and God often confers important favours on them in his general purpose to save his own people. The lives of the wicked are often spared because God interposes to save the righteous.

26. Howbeit. Nevertheless. ¶ Upon a certain island. Malta. See ch. xxviii. 1.

27. The fourteenth night. From the time when the tempest commenced. ¶ In Adria. In the Adriatic Sea. This sea is situated between Italy and Dalmatia, now called the Adriatic Gulf. But among the ancients the name was given not only to that gulf, but to the whole sea lying between Greece, Italy, and Africa, including the Sicilian and Ionian Sea. It is evident from the narrative that they were not in the Adriatic Gulf, but in the vicinity of Malta. See the map. ¶ Deemed. Judged. Probably by the appearance of the sea.

28. And sounded. To sound is to make use of a line and lead to ascertain the depth of water. ¶ Twenty fathoms. A fathom is six feet, or the distance from the extremity of the middle finger on one hand to the extremity of the other, when the arms are extended. The depth, therefore, was about one hundred and twenty feet. ¶ Fifteen fathoms. They knew, therefore, that they were drawing near to shore.

29. They cast four anchors. On account of the violence of the storm and waves, to make, if possible, the ship secure. ¶ And wished for the day. To discern more accurately their situation and danger.

30. The shipmen. The sailors, leaving the prisoners. ¶ Under colour. Under pretence. They pretended that it was necessary to get into the boat, and carry the anchors ahead of the ship so as to make it secure, but with a real intention to make for the shore. ¶ Out of the fore ship. From the prow, so as to make the fore part of the ship secure.

The reason why they did this was probably that they expected the ship would go to pieces; and as all on board could not be saved in one small boat, they resolved to escape to a place of safety as soon as possible.

31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the

31. Paul said to the centurion and the soldiers. The centurion had, it appears, the general direction of the ship, ver. 11. Perhaps it had been pressed into the service of the government. ¶ Except these. These seamen. The soldiers and the centurion were unqualified to manage the ship, and the presence of the sailors was therefore indispensable to the preservation of any. ¶ Abide in the ship. Remain on board. ¶ Ye cannot be saved. You cannot be preserved from death. You will have no hope of managing the ship. It will be remembered that Paul had been informed by the angel, and had assured them (ver. 22-24) that no lives would be lost; but it was only in the use of the proper means that their lives would be safe. Though it had been determined, and though Paul had the assurance that their lives would be safe, yet this did not, in his view, prevent the use of the proper means to secure it. From this we may learn, (1) That the certainty of an event does not render it improper to use means to obtain it. (2) That, though the event may be determined, yet the use of means may be indispensable to secure it. The event is not more certainly ordained than the means requisite to accomplish it. (3) That the doctrine of the divine purposes or decrees, making certain future events, does not make the use of man's agency unnecessary or improper. The means are determined as well as the end, and the one will not be secured without the other. (4) The same is true in regard to the decrees respecting salvation. The end is not determined without the means; and as God has resolved that his people shall be saved, so he has also determined the means. He has ordained that they shall repent, shall believe, shall be holy, and shall thus be saved. (5) We have in this case a full answer to the objection that a belief in the decrees of God will make men neglect the means of salvation, and lead to licentiousness. It has just the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

contrary tendency. Here is a case in which Paul certainly believed in the purpose of God to save these men; in which he was assured that it was fully determined; and yet the effect was not to produce indolence and unconcern, but to prompt him to use strenuous efforts to accomplish the very effect which God had determined should take place. So it is always. A belief that God has purposes of mercy; that he designs, and has always designed, to save some, will prompt to the use of all proper means to secure it. If we had no such evidence that God had any such purpose, effort would be vain. Where we have such evidence, it operates, as it did in the case of Paul, to produce great and strenuous endeavours to secure the object.

32. Cut off the ropes, &c. It is evident that the mariners had not yet got on board the boat. They had let it down into the sea (ver. 30), and were about to go on board. By thus cutting the ropes which fastened the boat to the ship, and letting it go, all possibility of their fleeing from the ship was taken away, and they were compelled to remain on board.

33. And while the day was coming on. At daybreak. It was before they had sufficient light to discern what they should do. ¶ To take meat. Food. The word meat was formerly used to denote food of any kind. ¶ That ye have tarried. That you have remained or been fasting. ¶ Having taken nothing. No regular meal. It cannot mean that they had lived entirely without food, but that they had been in so much danger, were so constantly engaged, and had been so anxious about their safety, that they had taken no regular meal, or that what they had taken had been at irregular intervals, and had been a scanty allowance. "Appian speaks of an army which for twenty days together had neither food nor sleep; by which he must mean that they neither made full meals nor slept whole nights together,

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and <sup>b</sup>gave thanks to God in presence of them all; and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the

The same interpretation must be given to this phrase" (Doddridge). The effect of this must have been that they would be exhausted, and little able to endure the fatigues which yet remained.

34. Not a hair fall from the head, &c. A proverbial expression, denoting that they would be preserved safe; that none of them would be lost, and that in their persons they should not experience the least damage, 1 Ki. i. 52; 1 Sa. xiv. 45.

35. And gave thanks, &c. This was the usual custom among the Hebrews. Notes on Mat. xiv. 19. Paul was among those who were not Christians; but he was not ashamed of the proper acknowledgment of God, and was not afraid to avow his dependence on him, and to express his gratitude for his mercy.

38. They lightened the ship. By casting the wheat into the sea. As they had no hope of saving the cargo, and had no further use for it, they hoped that by throwing the wheat overboard the ship would draw less water, and that thus they would be able to run the vessel on the shore.

39. They knew not the land. They had been driven with a tempest, without being able to make any observation, and it is probable that they were entire strangers to the coast and to the whole island. ¶ A certain creek with a shore. Greek, a certain bosom (καλλιών) or bay. By its having a shore is probably meant that it had a level shore, or one that was convenient for landing. It was not a high bluff of rocks, but was accessible. Kuinoel thinks that the passage should be construed, "they found a certain shore, having a bay," &c. ¶ Were minded. Were resolved.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land; but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40. Had taken up the anchors. The four anchors with which they had moored the ship, ver. 29. See the margin. The expression may mean that they slipped or cut their cables, and that thus they left the anchors in the sea. This is the most probable interpretation. ¶ And loosed the rudder-bands. The rudder, in navigation, is that by which a ship is steered. It is that part of the helm which consists of a piece of timber, broad at the bottom, which enters the water, and is attached by hinges to the stern-post on which it turns (Webster). But what was the precise form of the rudder among the ancients is not certainly known. Sometimes a vessel might be steered by oars. Most ships appear to have had a rudder at the prow as well as at the stern. In some instances, also, they had them on the sides. The word used here in the Greek is in the plural (τὰς ῥυτούς), and it is evident that they had in this ship more than one rudder. The bands mentioned here were probably the cords or fastenings by which the rudder could be made secure to the sides of the ship, or could be raised up out of the water in a violent storm, to prevent its being carried away. And as, in the tempest, the rudders had become useless (ver. 15, 17), they were probably either raised out of the water, or made fast. Now that the storm was past, and they could be used again, they were loosed, and they endeavoured to direct the vessel into port. ¶ The mainsail—άριψηρα. There have been various explanations of this word. Luther translates it the mast. Erasmus, the yards. Grotius, who supposes that the mainmast had been cast away (ver. 17), thinks that this must mean the fore-mast or bowsprit. The word usually means the mainsail. The Syriac and Arabic understand it of a small sail, that was hoisted for a temporary purpose. Mr. Smith, in his work on this voyage of Paul, supposes that it was the foresail. Others translate it a jib. "The mainsail [foresail] being hoisted showed good judgment, though the distance was so small, as it would not only enable them to steer more correctly than without it, but would press the ship farther on upon the land, and thus enable them the more easily to get to the shore" (Penrose).

41. And falling. Being carried by the wind and waves. ¶ Into a place where two seas met. Greek, into a place of a double sea—διδαλασσον. That is, a place which was washed on both sides by the sea. It refers properly to an isthmus, tongue of land, or a sand-bar stretching out from the mainland, and which was washed on both sides by the waves. It is evident that this was not properly an isthmus that was above the waves, but was probably a long sand-bank that stretched far out into the sea, and which they did not perceive. In endeavouring to make the harbour, they ran on this bar or sand-bank. ¶ They ran the ship aground. Not designedly, but in endeavouring to reach the harbour, ver. 39. ¶ The hinder part was broken. The stern was broken or staved in. By this means the company was furnished with boards, &c., on which they were safely conveyed to shore, ver. 44.

42. And the soldiers' counsel, &c. Why they gave this advice is not known. It was probably, however, because the Roman military discipline was very strict, and if they escaped it would be charged on them that it had been done by the negligence and unfaithfulness of the soldiers. They therefore proposed to kill them, though contrary to all humanity, justice, and laws; presuming, probably, that it would be supposed that they had perished in the wreck. This is a remarkable proof that men can be cruel even when experiencing the tender mercy of God, and that the most affecting scenes of divine goodness will not mitigate the natural ferocity and cruelty of those who delight in blood.

43. But the centurion, willing to save Paul. He had at first been disposed to treat Paul with kindness, ver. 3. And his conduct on board the ship; the wisdom of his advice (ver. 10); the prudence of his conduct in the agitation and danger of the tempest; and not improbably the belief that he was under the divine protection and blessing, disposed him to spare his life. ¶ Kept them from their purpose. Thus, for the sake of this one righteous man, the lives of all were spared. The instance here shows, (1) That it is possible for a pious man, like Paul, so to conduct in the various trying scenes of life—the agitations, difficulties, and temptations of this world—as to conciliate the favour of the men of this world; and, (2) That important benefits often result to sinners from the righteous. Paul's being on board was the means of saving the lives of many prisoners; and God often confers important blessings on the wicked for the sake of the pious relatives, friends, and neighbours with whom they are connected. Ten righteous men would have saved Sodom (Ge. xviii. 32); and Christians are in more ways than one the salt of the earth, and the light of the world, Mat. v. 13, 14. It is a privilege to be related to the friends of God—to be the children of pious parents, or to be connected with pious partners in life. It is a privilege to be connected with the friends of God in business; or to dwell near them; or to be associated with them in the various walks and dangers of life. The streams of blessings which flow to fertilize their lands, flow also to bless others; the dews of heaven which descend on their habitations, descend on all around; and the God which crowns them with loving-

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And<sup>c</sup> so it came to pass that they escaped all safe to land.

kindness, often fills the abodes of their neighbours and friends with the blessings of peace and salvation. ¶ And commanded. Probably they were released from their chains.

44. And the rest. Those who could not swim. ¶ They escaped all safe to land. According to the promise which was made to Paul, ver. 22. This was done by the special providence of God. It was a remarkable instance of divine interposition to save so many through so long-continued dangers; and it shows that God can defend in any perils, and can accomplish all his purposes. On the ocean or the land we are safe in his keeping, and he can devise ways that shall fulfil all his purposes, and that can protect his people from danger.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1. They knew. Either from their former acquaintance with the island, or from the information of the inhabitants. ¶ Was called Melita. Now called Malta. It was celebrated formerly for producing large quantities of honey, and is supposed to have been called Melita from the Greek word signifying honey. It is about twenty miles in length from east to west, and twelve miles in breadth from north to south, and about sixty miles in circumference. It is about sixty miles from the coast of Sicily. The island is an immense rock of white soft freestone, with a covering of earth about one foot in depth, which has been brought from the island of Sicily. There was also another island formerly called Melita, now called Meleda, in the Adriatic Sea, near the coast of Illyricum, and some have supposed that Paul was shipwrecked on that island. But tradition has uniformly said that it was on the island now called Malta.

2 And the <sup>b</sup>barbarous people showed us no little kindness; for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his

Besides, the other Melita would have been far out of the usual track in going to Italy; and it is further evident that Malta was the place, because from the place of his shipwreck he went directly to Syracuse, Rhegium, and Puteoli, thus sailing in a direct course to Rome. In sailing from the other Melita to Rhegium, Syracuse would be far out of the direct course. The island now is in the possession of the British.

2. And the barbarous people. See Notes on Ro. i. 14. The Greeks regarded all as barbarians who did not speak their language, and applied the name to all other nations but their own. It does not denote, as it does sometimes with us, people of savage, uncultivated, and cruel habits, but simply those whose speech was unintelligible. See 1 Co. xiv. 11. The island is supposed to have been peopled at first by the Phœcians, afterward by the Phoenicians, and afterward by a colony from Carthage. The language of the Maltese was that of Africa, and hence it was called by the Greeks the language of barbarians. It was a language which was unintelligible to the Greeks and Latins. ¶ The rain. The continuance of the storm. ¶ And of the cold. The exposure to the water in getting to the shore, and probably to the coldness of the weather. It was now in the month of October.

3. Had gathered a bundle of sticks. For the purpose of making a fire. ¶ There came a viper. A poisonous serpent. See Notes on Mat. iii. 7. The viper was doubtless in the bundle of sticks or limbs of trees which Paul had gathered, but was concealed, and was torpid. But when the bundle was laid on the fire, the viper became warmed by the heat, and ran out and fastened on the hand of Paul. ¶ And fastened on his hand— hand, they said among themselves, No<sup>d</sup> doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly; but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god.

xx.9.7.4s. This word properly means to join one's self to; to touch; to adhere to. It might have been by coiling around his hand and arm, or by fastening its fangs in his hand. It is not expressly affirmed that Paul was bitten by the viper, yet it is evidently implied; and it is wholly incredible that a viper, unless miraculously prevented, should fasten himself to the hand without biting.

4. The venomous beast. The word beast we apply usually to an animal of larger size than a viper. But the original (σέρπινος) is applicable to animals of any kind, and was especially applied by Greek writers to serpents. See Schleusner. ¶ No doubt. The fact that the viper had fastened on him; and that, as they supposed, he must now certainly die, was the proof from which they inferred his guilt. ¶ Is a murderer. Why they thought he was a murderer rather than guilty of some other crime is not known. It might have been, (1) Because they inferred that he must have been guilty of some very atrocious crime, and as murder was the highest crime that man could commit, they inferred that he had been guilty of this. Or, (2) More probably, they had an opinion that when divine vengeance overtook a man, he would be punished in a manner similar to the offence; and as murder is committed usually with the hand, and as the viper had fastened on the hand of Paul, they inferred that he had been guilty of taking life. It was supposed among the ancients that persons were often punished by divine vengeance in that part of the body which had been the instrument of the sin. ¶ Whom, though he hath escaped the sea. They supposed that vengeance and justice would still follow the guilty; that, though he might escape one form of punishment, yet he would be exposed to another. And this, to a certain extent, is true. These barbarians reasoned from great original principles, written on the hearts of all men by nature, that there is a God of justice, and that the guilty will be punished. They reasoned incorrectly, as many do, only because that they supposed that every calamity is a judgment for some particular sin. Men often draw this conclusion, and suppose that suffering is to be traced to some particular crime, and to be regarded as a direct judgment from heaven. See Notes on Jn. ix. 1-3. The general proposition that all sin will be punished at some time is true, but we are not qualified to affirm of particular calamities always that they are direct judgments for sin. In some cases we may. In the case of the drunkard, the gambler, and the profligate, we cannot doubt that the loss of property, health, and reputation is the direct result of specific crime. In the ordinary calamities of life, however, it requires a more profound acquaintance with the principles of divine government than we possess to affirm of each instance of suffering that it is a particular judgment for some crime. ¶ That vengeance—ἡ δίκη. Dikē, or justice, was represented by the heathen as a goddess, the daughter of Jupiter, whose office it was to take vengeance, or to inflict punishment for crimes. ¶ Suffereth not to live. They regarded him as already a dead man. They supposed the effect of the bite of the viper would be so certainly fatal that they might speak of him as already in effect dead (Beza).

5. And he shook off, &c. In this was remarkably fulfilled the promise of the Saviour (Mar. xvi. 18): "They shall take up serpents," &c.

6. When he should have swollen. When they expected that he would have swollen from the bite of the viper. The poison of the viper is rapid, and they expected that he would die soon. The word rendered "swollen" (πτυχεαρθρας) means properly to burn; to be inflamed, and then to be swollen from inflammation. This was what they expected here, that the poison would produce a violent inflammation. ¶ Or fallen down dead suddenly. As is sometimes the case from the bite of the serpent when a vital part is affected. ¶ They changed their minds. They saw that he was uninjured, and miraculously preserved; and they supposed that none but a god could be thus kept from death. ¶ That he was a god. That the Maltese were idolaters there can be no doubt; but what gods they worshipped is unknown, and conjecture would be useless. It was natural that they should attribute such a preservation to the presence of a divinity. A similar instance occurred at Lystra. See Notes on ch. xiv. 11.

9 So when this was done, others

7. In the same quarters. In that place, or that part of the island. ¶ Possessions. Property. His place of residence. ¶ The chief man. Greek, the first man. Probably he was the governor of the island.

8. A bloody flux. Greek, dysentery. ¶ And laid his hands on him, &c. In accordance with the promise of the Saviour, Mar. xvi. 18. This miracle was a suitable return for the hospitality of Publius, and would serve to conciliate further the kindness of the people, and prepare the way for Paul's usefulness.

10. Who also honoured us. As men who were favoured of heaven, and who had been the means of conferring important benefits on them in healing the sick, &c. Probably the word "honours" here means gifts, or marks of favour. ¶ They laded us. They gave us, or conferred on us. They furnished us with such things as were necessary for us on our journey.

It was common to place on the prow of the ship the image of some person or god, whose name the ship bore. This custom is still observed. ¶ Castor and Pollux. These were two semi-deities. They were reputed to be twin brothers, sons of Jupiter and Leda, the wife of Tyndarus, king of Sparta. After their death they are fabled to have been translated to heaven, and made constellations under the name of Gemini, or the Twins. They then received divine honours, and were called the sons of Jupiter. They were supposed to preside over sailors, and to be their protectors; hence it was not uncommon to place their image on ships. Comp. Lempriere's Dictionary.

12. And landing at Syracuse. Syracuse was the capital of the island of Sicily, on the eastern coast. It was in the direct course from Malta to Rome. It contains about 18,000 inhabitants.

13. We fetched a compass. We coasted about; or we sailed along the eastern side of Sicily. The course can be seen on the map. ¶ And came to Rhegium. This was a city of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, on the coast near the southwest extremity of Italy. It was nearly opposite to Messina, in Sicily. It is now called Reggio. See the map. ¶ The south wind. A wind favourable for their voyage. ¶ To Puteoli. The wells. This place was celebrated for its warm baths, and from these and its springs it is supposed to have derived its name of The Wells. It is now called Pozzuoli, and is in the campania of Naples, on the N. side of the bay, and about 8 miles a compass, and came to Rhegium; and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli;

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days; and so we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii Forum, and the Three Taverns; whom

N.W. from Naples. The town contains at present about 10,000 inhabitants.

14. Brethren. Christian brethren. But by whom the gospel had been preached there is unknown.

15. And from thence. From Puteoli. ¶ When the brethren heard of us. The Christians who were at Rome. ¶ As far as the Appii Forum. This was a city about 56 miles from Rome. The remains of an ancient city are still seen there. It is on the borders of the Pontine Marshes. The city was built on the celebrated Appian Way, or the road from Rome to Capua. The road was made by Appius Claudius, and probably the city was founded by him also. It was called the forum or market-place of Appius, because it was a convenient place for travellers on the Appian Way to stop for purposes of refreshment. It was also a famous resort for peddlers and merchants. See Horace, b. i. Sat. 5, 3. ¶ And the Three Taverns. This place was about 8 or 10 miles nearer Rome than the Appii Forum (Cicero, ad Att., ii. 10). It undoubtedly received its name because it was distinguished as a place of refreshment on the Appian Way. Probably the greater part of the company of Christians remained at this place while the remainder went forward to meet Paul, and to attend him on his way. The Christians at Rome had doubtless heard much of Paul. His epistle to them had been written about the year of our Lord 57, or at least five years before this time. The interest which the Roman Christians felt in the apostle was thus manifested by their coming so far to meet him, though he was a prisoner. ¶ He thanked God. He had long ardently desired to see the Christians of Rome, Ro. i. 9-11; xv. 23, 32. He was now

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard; but "Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him."

17 And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together; and when they were come together, he said unto grateful to God that the object of his long desire was at least granted, and that he was permitted to see them, though in bonds. ¶ And took courage. From their society and counsel. The presence and counsel of Christian brethren is often of inestimable value in encouraging and strengthening us in the toils and trials of life.

16. The captain of the guard. The commander of the Praetorian cohort, or guard. The custom was, that those who were sent from the provinces to Rome for trial were delivered to the custody of this guard. The name of the prefect or captain of the guard at this time was Burrhus Afranius (Tacit. Ann., 12, 42, 1). ¶ But Paul was suffered, &c. Evidently by the permission of the centurion, whose favour he had so much conciliated on the voyage. See ch. xxvii. 43. ¶ With a soldier that kept him. That is, in the custody of a soldier to whom he was chained, and who, of course, constantly attended him. See ch. xxiv. 23; xii. 6.

17. Paul called the chief of the Jews. He probably had two objects in this: one was to vindicate himself from the suspicion of crime, or to convince them that the charges alleged against him were false; and the other, to explain to them the gospel of Christ. In accordance with his custom everywhere, he seized the earliest opportunity of making the gospel known to his own countrymen; and he naturally supposed that charges highly unfavourable to his character had been sent forward against him to the Jews at Rome by those in Judea. ¶ Against the people. Against the Jews, ch. xxiv. 12. ¶ Or customs, &c. The religious rites of the nation. See Notes on ch. vi. 14. ¶ Was I delivered prisoner, &c. By the Jews, ch. xxi. 33, &c.

19. The Jews spake against it. Against my being set at liberty. ¶ I was constrained. By a regard to my own safety and character. ¶ To appeal unto Cæsar. See Notes on ch. xxv. 11. ¶ Not that I had aught, &c. I did it for my own preservation and safety, not that I wished to accuse my countrymen. Paul had been unjustly accused and injured; yet, with the true spirit of the Christian religion, he here says that he cherished no unkind feelings toward those who had done him wrong.

20. Because for the hope of Israel. On account of the hope which the Jews cherish of the coming of the Messiah; of the resurrection; and of the future state. See this explained in the Notes on ch. xxiii. 6. ¶ I am bound with this chain. See Notes on ch. xxvi. 29. Probably he was attached constantly to a soldier by a chain.

21. We neither received letters, &c. Why the Jews in Judea had not forwarded the accusation against Paul to their brethren at Rome, that they might continue the prosecution before the emperor, is not known. It is probable that they regarded their cause as hopeless, and chose to abandon the prosecution. Paul had been acquitted successively by Lysias, Felix, Festus, and Agrippa; and as they had not succeeded in procuring his condemnation before them, they saw no prospect of doing it at Rome, and resolved, therefore, not to press the prosecution any farther. ¶ Neither any of the brethren that came. Any of the Jews. There was a very constant intercourse between Judea and Rome, but it seems that the Jews who had come before Paul had arrived had not mentioned his case, so as to prejudice them against him.

22. What thou thinkest. What your belief is; or what are the doctrines of Christians respecting the Messiah. ¶ This sect. The sect of Christians. ¶ Spoken against. Particularly by Jews. This was the case then, and, to a great extent, is the case still. It has been the common lot of the followers of Christ to be spoken "against." Comp. ch. xxiv. 5.

23. Appointed him a day. A day when they would hear him. ¶ To his lodging. To the house where he resided, ver. 30. ¶ He expounded. He explained or declared the principles of the Christian religion. ¶ And testified the kingdom of God. Bore witness to, or declared the principles and doctrines of the reign of the Messiah. See Notes on Mat. iii. 2. ¶ Persuading them concerning Jesus. Endeavouring to convince them that Jesus was the Messiah. ¶ Both out of the law of Moses. Endeavouring to convince them that he corresponded with the predictions respecting the Messiah in the books of Moses, and with the types which Moses had instituted to prefigure the Messiah. ¶ And out of the prophets. Showing that he corresponded with the predictions of the prophets. See Notes on ch. xvii. 3. ¶ From morning until evening. An instance of Paul's indefatigable toil in endeavour-

24. And some believed, &c. See Notes on ch. xiv. 4.

25. Had spoken one word. One solemn declaration, reminding them that it was the characteristic of the nation to reject the testimony of God, and that it was to be expected. It was the last warning which we know Paul to have delivered to his countrymen the Jews. ¶ Well spake. Or he spoke the truth; he justly described the character of the Jewish people. The passage here quoted was as applicable in the time of Paul as of Isaiah. ¶ The Holy Ghost. A full proof of the inspiration of Isaiah. ¶ By Esaias. By Isaiah, Is. vi. 9, 10.

26, 27. Saying, &c. See this passage explained in the Notes on Mat. xiii. 14, and Jn. xii. 39, 40.

28. The salvation of God. The knowledge of God's mode of saving men. ¶ Is sent unto the Gentiles. Since you have rejected it, it will be offered to them. See Notes on ch. xiii. 46. ¶ And that they will hear it. They will embrace it. Paul was never discouraged. If the gospel was rejected by one class of people he was ready to offer it to another. If his own countrymen despised it, he never allowed himself to suppose that Christ had died in vain, but believed that others would embrace its saving benefits. How happy would it be if all Christians had the same unwavering faith and zeal as Paul.

29. And had great reasoning. Great discussion or debates. That is, the part which believed that Jesus was the Messiah (ver. 24) discussed the subject warmly with those who did not believe. This whole verse is wanting in the Syriac version, and in some Greek MSS., and is supposed by Mill and Griesbach to be spurious.

30. Paul dwelt two whole years. Doubtless in the custody of the soldiers. Why he was not prosecuted before the emperor during this time is not known. It is evident, however (ver. 21), that the Jews were not disposed to carry the case before Nero, and the matter, during this time, was suffered quietly to sleep. There is great probability that the Jews did not dare to prosecute him before the emperor. It is clear that they had never been in favour of the appeal to Rome, and that they had no hope of gaining their cause. Probably they might remember the former treatment of their people by the emperor (see Notes on ch. xviii. 2); they might remember that they were despised at the Roman capital, and not choose to encounter the scorn and indignation of the Roman court; and as there was no prosecution, Paul was suffered to live in quietness and safety. Lardner, however, supposed (vol. v. p. 528, 529, ed. 8vo, London, 1829) that the case of Paul was soon brought before Nero and decided, and that the method of confinement was ordered by the emperor himself. Lightfoot also supposes that Paul's "accusers, who had come from Judea to lay their charge against him, would be urgent to get their business despatched, that they might be returning to their own home again, and so would bring him to trial as soon as they could." But nothing certainly is known on the subject. It is evident, indeed, from 2 Ti. iv. 16, that he was at some time arraigned before the emperor; but when it was, or what was the decision, or why he was at last set at liberty, are all involved in impenetrable obscurity. ¶ In his own hired house. In a house which he was permitted to hire and occupy as his own. Probably in this he was assisted by the kindness of his Roman friends. ¶ And received all, &c. Received all hospitably and kindly who came to him to listen to his instructions. It is evident from this that he was still a prisoner, and was not permitted to go at large.

31. Preaching the kingdom of God. See Notes on ch. xx. 25. ¶ With all confidence. Openly and boldly, without anyone to hinder him. It is known also that Paul was not unsuccessful even when a prisoner at Rome. Several persons were converted by his preaching, even in the court of the emperor. The things which had happened to him, he says (Phi. i. 12-14), had fallen out rather to the furtherance of the gospel, so that his bonds in Christ were manifested in all the palace, and in all other places; and many brethren in the Lord, says he, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear. In this situation he was remembered with deep interest by the church at Philippi, who sent Epaphroditus to him with a contribution to supply his wants. Of their kindness he speaks in terms of the tenderest gratitude in Phi. ii. 25; iv. 18. During his confinement also, he was the means of the conversion of Onesimus, a runaway servant of Philemon, of Colosse in Phrygia (Phile. 10), whom he sent back to his master with a letter to himself, and with an epistle to the church at that place. See epistle to the Colossians, iv. 8, 9, 18. During this imprisonment, he wrote, according to God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Here closes the inspired account of the propagation of Christianity; of the organization of the Christian church, and of the toils and persecutions of the apostle Paul. Who can but be deeply affected when he comes to the conclusion of this inspired book recording the history of the spread of the Christian religion, and the labours and trials of that wonderful man, the apostle Paul? Who can help heaving a sigh of regret that the historian did not carry forward the history of Paul till his death, and that henceforward, in the history of the church, we want this faithful, inspired guide; and that, from the close of this book, everything becomes at once so involved in obscurity and uncertainty? Instead, however, of pouring forth unavailing regrets that the sacred historian has carried us no farther onward, we should rather employ the language of praise that God inspired the writer of this book to give a history of the church for thirty years after the ascension of the Saviour; that he has recorded the accounts of the first great revivals of religion; that he has presented us the examples of the early missionary zeal; that he has informed us how the early Christians endured persecution and toil; that he has conducted us from land to land, and from city to city, showing us everywhere how the gospel was propagated, until we are led to the seat of the Roman power, and see the great apostle of Christianity there proclaiming, in that mighty capital of the world, the name of Jesus as the Saviour of men. Perhaps there could be no more appropriate close to the book of the inspired history than thus to have conducted the apostle of the Gentiles to the capital of the Roman world, and to leave the principal agent in the establishment of the Christian religion in that seat of intelligence, influence, and power. It is the conducting of Christianity to the very height of its earthly victories; and having shown its power in the provinces of the empire, it was proper to close the account with the record of its achievements in the capital.

Why Luke closed his history here is not known. It may have been that he was not afterward the companion of Paul; or that he might have been himself removed by death. It is agreed on all hands that he did not attend Paul in his subsequent travels; and we should infer from the conclusion of this book that he did not survive the apostle, as it is almost incredible, if he did, that he did not mention his release and death. It is the uniform account of antiquity that Luke, after the transactions with which the Acts of the Apostles closes, passed over into Achaia, where he lived a year or two, and there died at the age of eighty-four years.

Everything in regard to the apostle Paul, after the account with which Luke closes this book, is involved in doubt and uncertainty. By what means he was set at liberty is not known; and there is a great contradiction of statements in regard to his subsequent travels, and even in regard to the time of his death. It is generally agreed, indeed, that he was set at liberty in the year of our Lord 63. After this some of the fathers assert that he travelled over Italy and passed into Spain. But this account is involved in great uncertainty. Lardner, who has examined all the statements with care, and than whom no one is better qualified to pronounce an opinion on these subjects, gives the following account of the subsequent life of Paul (Works, vol. v. p. 331-336, ed. Lond. 1829). He supposes that after his release he went from Rome to Jerusalem as soon as possible; that he then went to Ephesus, and from thence to Laodicea and Colosse; and that he returned to Rome by Troas, Philippi, and Corinth. The reason why he returned to Rome, Lardner supposes, was that he regarded that city as opening before him the widest and most important field of labour, and that, therefore, he proposed there to spend the remainder of his life.

In the year of our Lord 64, a dreadful fire happened at Rome which continued for six or seven days. It was generally supposed that the city had been set on fire by order of the Emperor Nero. In order to divert the attention of the people from this charge against himself, he accused the Christians of having been the authors of the conflagration, and excited against them a most furious and bloody persecution. In this persecution it is generally supposed that Paul and Peter suffered death, the former by being beheaded, and the latter by crucifixion. Paul is supposed to have been beheaded rather than crucified, because he was a Roman citizen, and because it was unlawful to put a Roman citizen to death on a cross. Lardner thinks that this occurred in the year 65. Where Paul was beheaded is not certainly known. It is generally supposed to have occurred at a place called the Salvian Waters, about 3 miles from Rome, and that he was buried in the Ostian Way, where a magnificent church was afterward built. But of this there is no absolute certainty.

It is far more important and interesting for us to be assured from the character which he evinced, and from the proofs of his zeal and toil in the cause of the Lord Jesus, that his spirit rested in the bosom of his Saviour and his God. Wherever he died, his spirit, we doubt not, is in heaven. And where that body rested at last, which he laboured "to keep under," and which he sought to bring "into subjection" (1 Co. ix. 27), and which was to him so much the source of conflict and of sin (Ro. vii. 5, 23), is a matter of little consequence. It will be guarded by the eye of that Saviour whom he served, and will be raised up to eternal life. In his own inimitable language, it was "sown in corruption, it shall be raised in incorruption; it was sown in dishonour, it shall be raised in glory; it was sown in weakness, it shall be raised in power; it was sown a natural body, it shall be raised a spiritual body," 1 Co. xv. 42-44. And in regard to him, and to all other saints, "when that corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and that mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory," 1 Co. xv. 54. To Paul now, what are all his sorrows, and persecutions, and toils in the cause of his Master? What but a source of thanksgiving that he was permitted thus to labour to spread the gospel through the world? So may we live—imitating his life of zeal, and self-denial, and faithfulness, that when we rise from the dead we may participate with him in the glories of the resurrection of the just.
